THE WEEK'S NEWS

FROM IRELAND

Parnell's Ultimatum

It is reported by some that at the general meeting Parnell will present a resolution to the Manchester effect, the result of which will be a demand for the creation of a Parliament of the Irish people. This, one cable correspondent says, will be Mr Parnell's ultimatum to Gladstone. It is reported that Mr Parnell and his friends will oppose every government measure.

A Constitutional Question.

The Times London editorial says: Lord Randolph Churchill is well back in Oxfordshire, which addressed a good deal of Conservatism. [illegible] Mr Parnell will demand of the Government a Bill and public inquiry into the Manchester affair, the result of which would be an indictment of the Constabulary, or the Parliament because the House of Lords by some with the House of Commons, intentionally insults that class of men, and thus [illegible] the Irish people. The Government [illegible] Mr Parnell's ultimatum is [illegible] [illegible] Bill, the Land Bill and the Franchise Bill. The Land Bill and the Franchise Bill are matters fully aware. If the ultimatum be accepted the Government will not be all it is worth. There are parties, extremes, some of them have heard for the resolutions of political strife.

Dublin Must not be Insulted

Dublin, Oct. 11.—At a meeting, attended by the prominent men in Dublin, it was the prominent feeling that Dublin should not be insulted by the Government, and that the Government should not be insulted by the Government. The Liberal party [illegible] the Government [illegible] the Government [illegible] the Government

THE HEAVENLY MELODY.

There are songs that are sung in a land far away,
All unknown to the world, yet they are Sung in a world as little one stray heard of that day
Within the earth in its softest breast grew.

And some are perhaps with a sad heart wailed,
From the Earth the wicked heart of Song
Vainly tries to re-make one note—but is doomed
To unknowledge his weakness and wrong

Yes; that nobody heard them such heavenly
But by Angels deft touches in song;
And all, who sang of the world, and in the grave
To be borne to the heaven where the long

And the' weariness in my, that rate is known,
Yet relieved thro' Heavily's time;
For tired in the song gave a power all His own,
And the soul of Its burden's divine!

And the theme! oh! how greatly its subject is Glorious,
For unlike the dull chorals of this and,
All the joys of Heaven by It are summed,
For it sings of the praises of God.

And blessed that the Great One so lovely appears,
That a glance falls the heaven rapt sight,
And each moment are beauty of its Glorious,
To make way for another more bright!

So this song that is sung by those days of Peace,
Changing with the morning's bright eyes,
But the harmony lives thro' the long lapse of Time,
For the soul of that song cannot die.

MEMORARE OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

BY REV. W. RUSSELL, S. J.

Remember Holy Mary,
Never never hated or known
That anyone who sought thee,
And made to thee his moan:
That anyone who hastened
For shelter to thy care,
Was ever abandoned
And left to his despair.
No! Ever Blessed Virgin
Most merciful, most kind,
No sinner ever sought
But thy sweet pity find.
None, none, O Holy Mary

And so to thee, my Mother:
With trembling hands I call.
For Jesus, dying, gave thee,
As a Mother to us all.
To thee, O Queen of Virgins:
O! Mother hard, to thee,
I run with trustful fondness,
Like a child to the mother's knee.
See at thy feet a sinner,
Groaning and weeping sore,
Ah! leave thy mantle's ever,
Ah! leave me, Mother, more.
No more, O Holy Mary

Thy Son shall deal to me now,
And from His throne on high
His heart this moment pourteth
For even such as I.
Ah, all His love remember,
And Oh! remember, too,
Thy mission, Mary, is to pardon,
Here sinner I am to do.
Yes, scorn not my petition;
Not pudently of my sin,
And help me, O, my Mother:
Sinner as I am to do.

Help! help! O, Holy Mary!

After Sorrow, Joy.

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY IN SEVEN CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER II.

The appointed evening's length arrived, matinée time—the parlors of the Mansion half a dozen silken, [illegible] wealth of the magnificent chandeliers blazed with diamond-like brilliancy, the natural floral decorations of the parlors and adjacent rooms, perfumed the evening breeze—in fine, nothing could be added either to adorn the rooms or render the guests more happy.

At 10 o'clock Mr. Martin entered the first parlor, Esther leaning on his arm. She was attired in all that could be attributed to her Fairy Queen, the "Cinderella" of the evening, passing lovely, wonderful belle, yet not like the Witch created beauty, but known by all present, and admired for her personal beauty. Rainer's chaste taste preserved for her a face whose lines were smooth and regular, her head black as a raven's plumage, flowed in natural ringlets, disposing themselves gracefully along her snow-white shoulders, and with a formal smile playing about her pale lips, she glanced against the true state of her mind because her parents had earnestly requested her "not to look so sad." Complimented and admired, without her recognition of the honors was, notwithstanding her efforts to the contrary, tinged with a tender, mild and rigid demeanor.

The same rendered by origin of Italian birth, was of that sweetness peculiar only to that people, and really infused new life in all, save one who exhibited no emotion.

Dancing having concluded for some time, the folding doors were rolled back, revealing the most magnificent supper in all its appointments ever, perhaps, spread in this city. Bright eyes, ruby lips—enticing, yes, laughable conversation—sweet notes from the violin and harp—combined to make the time passed around the festive board most enjoyable. Everything told plainly that like was an occasion of unalloyed pleasure. The sense was in itself sufficient to drive dull care and cannot far away; but dear Esther, Alexandrine, had no heart to participate in the repetition provided for her. If they had consulted her on the subject, she would have expressed her unwillingness—she was not well, perhaps, and did all her feeble nature would allow, to make the best of it; and failing, felt ready to yield.

The young men vied with each other in their attentions to her; still no topic of conversation seemed to interesting her. Only an occasional "yes" or "no" was wrung from her.

One by one—couple by couple—deserted the festive board for a renewal of the merry dance—and the last that filed into the glittering parlor was Esther Martin under the escort of a young gentleman from the city across the river, who, after seating his charge nestled in the sofa.

Mrs. Martin seated herself beside Esther, and with her most winning smiles and affectionate accents begged her daughter to remember that the greatest desire she had and the greatest pleasure which could be afforded Mr. Martin, was, "that you, dear daughter, shall forget your troubles, anticipations of joys that fill the bosom of every one else," and while thus importuning her daughter, the hand of Esther was gently raised and reverently pressed to her lips.

When Mrs. Martin had finished, a distinguished and handsome representative from the city of Tresses was introduced to Miss Esther, and immediately asked for her hand for the next set; only to be denied—gently, though it was—yet with a chilliness not understood by a Frenchman.

Indeed so persistently solicited to bring her to the floor. The merry laugh, the thrilling tones and beaming face of father and mother—all, all, were as the idle winds, unheeded by the child of sorrow.

The gray streak in the eastern skies that foretold the birth of a new day found the dance going on, but admonished the participants that the hour of departure was at hand, and the many conveyances that were already in waiting before the mansion were soon occupied, and departed—leaving their occupants with them to their respective places of abode.

The splendid chandeliers pulled before the orb of day, and this family sought repose in sleep—save, indeed, Mr and Mrs. Martin, who had repaired to their chamber and taken seats at an open window that overlooked the beautiful lake that spread out for miles before them. They had no desire to close their eyes in slumber—their and hearts beat slowly and heavily, they remained silent, as there was no hope to create even a word of cheer. The expensive expedient had been resorted to, leaving as a reward a better disappointment.

In this their sadness, Mrs. Martin was involuntarily exclaimed "Alas that is the value of wealth without happiness. How unexpected how sudden the bright air hopes of parents are blasted, and the objects of their love torn from them! Would that my darling had died in infancy, rather than that she had lived to become the victim of a demented mind."

Mrs. Martin's sobs became crowded itself at this exclamation of despair, and she said "How weak you are! I was looked upon you as a stoic—a philosopher—a man who could never yield to despair—I, my dear husband, shall never despair. Never relax my efforts to restore to normal condition, the physical and mental health of our unhappy daughter! Never! Why have fortune—that fortune—my strength, my life—all shall be spent to save our darling! I will do what lies in my power upon the shoulder of her husband and wept.

Mr. Martin cheerfully assured his wife of his willingness to use his best in all her efforts, and proposed and extended southern trip to the land of orange and bananas, where flowers of all hues are perpetual. He thought that a change of scenery, new faces and new acquaintances, would exert a more salutary influence over the daughter than all things else combined, and so thoroughly was he convinced of the propriety of this step that he urged immediate preparation for the journey.

This proposition was so delightful that Mrs. Martin pictured to herself the restoration of her daughter both physically and mentally, and her happy return to their Kalamah home, to the disappointed sister whose heart into the schisms. Tony scene marked the few days left for getting in readiness. Many were the articles purchased for each member of the family; the business affairs of the parents—street were arranged so that they could be abandoned for a few months without harm; and the many friends who were in sympathy with the afflicted family rented them without reference to the conventionalities, and were profane in their good offices—appeared in giving unasked for advice—all of which was duly appreciated.

A suite of palace cars were contracted for to take the excursionists to the end of their journey without changing cars, and, in short, nothing was lacking to make the journey all that could be desired.

The "Bulls" and "Bears," for once in the history of man, shook hands, and exulted in the prospect of the "Bears" in the "Black Eagle, who for the past twenty years had at his will killed and skinned the "bulls" on the marks.

The "outcast aristocracy sent in their cards of remembrance and good-will like flakes of snow, until the waste basket was called into requisition to relieve the center-table of so much trash. The intelligence spread, and letters from rich men in the South found their way to Mr. Martin, in the shape of pressing invitations to make their house the headquarters of the Martin family during their sojourn there.

To a man unacquainted with the ways of the world, such manifestations of regard would have taken the shape of friendship. But Mr. and Mrs. Martin, alas, in the midst of their anxiety and trouble, laughed heartily at the opinions displayed in some of those letters.

But a new trouble presented itself—it must be commenced—the parlors of the Martin half a dozen silken, [illegible] wealth of the magnificent chandeliers blazed with diamond-like brilliancy, the natural floral decorations of the parlors and adjacent rooms perfumed the evening breeze—in fine, nothing could be added either to adorn the rooms or render the guests more happy.

MISSIONS IN KENTUCKY.

Sketch of the Life and Labors of the New Bishop of Covington, Kentucky.

Rev. Camillus Paul Maes, the new Bishop of Covington, was born March 10, 1846, in the city of Courtrai, West Flanders, Belgium, of very respectable Catholic parents. He made his classical studies in the principal college of his native city, graduating in 1866. Having completed his studies in the Louvain Seminary, Louvain. He was ordained priest in Mechlin, in December, 1868, for the Diocese of Detroit, and came to America in May, 1869. His first pastoral charge was at Mount Clemens, where he remained until 1871. He then built and opened a New Catholic school, where he gained many admirers and the Home Secrets of Mr. Martin. In April of that year he succeeded Very Rev. Edward Jonas, V. G., as pastor of the French and English congregation at Monroe. He early evinces the necessity of organizing a separate parish for the English-speaking portion of his congregation, and having received permission from His Lordship the Bishop of Detroit, the organization and building of St. John's parish dated from 1872, and completed by his successor, in 1873, and in the following year, as the result of his zeal and ability, he had the satisfaction of seeing the work completed. In July, 1873, he became pastor of the new church, Rev. Father Gillen succeeding him as pastor of St. Mary's. His administration as pastor of St. John's was marked by great prudence and energy. He was the friend of all, but especially of the children, of whom he was very fond, and whose welfare he was ever devoted with a pure water. Those on the occasion they have an eight children, of St. Mary's parish, and the Home Secrets of Mr. Martin. Very Rev. Father Emmanuel tells us that at that period he spoke philosophically, of which he has made his mark, which is well organized, and where he produces some fine specimens of the art and portraits of the classics which speak to the public for the benefit of the community.

The last stage of our visit, and not the least agreeable one, is an excellent lunch which is offered to us, and which consists of eggs, various vegetables, salads and fruit, accompanied with delicious wines, among which we enjoy with particular gusto a sweet white wine of an exquisite aroma and two very superior specimens of the latter's of the Dalmatian's feast, and all our wines are indeed conducive to our joy of wine even to drink our health. The hall where we are entertained is situated near the entrance, and is reserved for the use of distinguished visitors, as they politely inform us. On the opposite side of the part is another dining room, where every hungry wayfarer is entertained free of charge, and, but in a roller form.

We part at last, the best of friends wishing them that they may continue to find favor in the sight of the Lord, and pray that the world may use us gently.

Practical Morality.

An extensive manufacturer in Columbus, Ohio, recently discharged a number men, observed that many of the number were addicted to playing games, such as chess, he called them all together and told them that the factories would shut down at 8 p. m. on Saturday, without reduction of pay, provided they would desist from the sinful practice. They removed the proposition with cheers. A journalistic contemporary remarks on this instance: "If employers generally would give their employés thoughtful attention, they might wisely work great reforms. No employer has a right to play the best interests of his employés."

BISHOP MAES.

A VISIT TO LA TRAPPE.

Happy Lives of the Monks—Daily Devotions and Duties—Perpetual Silence and Constant Prayer their Daily Exercise.

The Trappists Convent at Staouëli is situated on a high plain, about twelve miles from Algiers. It is a large white building, with a very extensive frontage. Up the walls we read the inscription "Les dames n'entrent pas ici." Not gallant, but plebeian prudent. Everyone is not a St. Aubigny.

We produce a letter of introduction to the Gardens of the Order, which, unknown, sends us two monks to do the honors of the place. Brother Gaudentius is somewhat different from each other. Father Gaudentius is a tall, dark handsome man, a little past the meridian of life, who has evidently moved in the best society. He tells us that at the age of 24, having grown quite sick of the world, he sought peace in the quiet retreat. We obtain from him the following particulars as to the mode of life of the convent:

The Trappists rise every morning at two o'clock, and remain in prayer in chapel until 4 a. m., when they go to work, usually in the fields—until twelve, when they partake of a frugal meal, followed by a rest of an hour. They return to work after that, and do not leave off until 8 p. m., when they retire to rest to each other, anything they have to communicate to their brethren has to be conveyed through the superior, the only person whom they may address. Their only food, and that of the poorest kind, is served down with pure water. Those on the sick list may have an eight ounce loaf, of which one of the Fathers, pointed to some of the series of the incarnation, birth, life and death of our Lord, and the Blessed Virgin, those of His resurrection, and His glorious ascension, and the Holy Ghost descending on the Apostles, and the Blessed Virgin and the Lord's Prayer. This is just the Rosary, but it is not the Rosary as we know it. Instead of a bead, there is a bead, and instead of a bead, there is a bead, and instead of a bead, there is a bead, and

A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

Where are the birds that sweetly sang
A hundred years ago?
They lie that sleep, all in beauty sprang
A hundred years ago!
The lip that smiled,
The eyes then wild
In fashion shone
A hundred years ago.

Where, O where, are those fair and eyes,
The maiden's smile, the lover's sighs,
That were so long ago?

Who peopled all the city's streets
A hundred years ago?
Who filled the church with face meek
Another's heart—
Where, O where, are the plots and moves,
The poor man's hopes, the rich man's fears,
That were so long ago?

Where are the sermons whose text was death
A hundred years ago?
Who, whilst living, oft thus wept,
A hundred years ago?
By other men
They have not then,
Their beds are filled;
Their homes are filled
Yet nature then was just as gay,
And bright the sun shone as to-day,
A hundred years ago.

Around the House.

When wall paper is discolored by the hair of people, rub carefully with stale bread.

Scrap down dust and spider-webs and wipe the wall paper straight down from the top with a piece of cotton flannel tied over a broom; dampen the room to prevent soiling.

Paper labels may be removed from bottles by wetting the surface and holding for an instant over any convenient flame. The steam penetrates the label at once and softens the paste.

Oilcloth must be wiped perfectly dry as it is washed. Take up the chips and lay tepid water, change often. A good brush and a piece of dry flannel will make an oilcloth look like new, especially if linseed oil or skim milk be well rubbed in after washing. If in addition to these precautions they are varnished annually they are almost indestructible.

Clean paint with ammonia—a tablespoonful to a quart of water; it is also excellent for unpainted woodwork. Never put soap on paint, as it hills the oil, causing it to fade from the wood. Whitling removes all spots and discolorations. Wet a flannel, dip in the whiting and rub. Wash off well and wipe dry. In fact, whenever you clean let the hot water be with a dey cloth. Scour yellow spots with powdered borax.

In washing windows have a bit of pine stick over which to lay the cloth in order to reach the corners. Old newspapers are excellent for removing lint and giving a fine polish. If stoves are to remain during hot summer have them black leaded with; the carpets are up, pinnipe papers over the wall behind them will thrive in process. Stoves that are to be stored should be rubbed with kerosene and covered to keep off flies and dust.

A simple contrivance which will prevent the scattering of seed by a canary is made by taking a piece of tarlatan of the same color as the cage; have it deep enough to reach from the bottom of the cage to the top of the seed dish; skirr it at both top and bottom, run strings in and fasten to the cage. If this is neatly put on it adds to the look of the cage and saves a great deal of work. The tin strings so that they can be untied easily and the cover be taken off and shaken.

Ink stains may be removed from a mahogany table by putting a few drops of spirits of nitre into a teaspoonful of water, scouring the part stained with a feather dipped into the mixture; immediately the ink stain disappears, the place must be rubbed with a little sweet milk and water, or the spirits will be removed. Ink stains on silver articles may be removed immediately and effectually without doing any injury to the things, by making a little chloride of lime into a paste with water, and rubbing the stains until they disappear and afterwards washing the article with soap and water. Ink stains may be removed from colored silks or cloths by dissolving a teaspoonful of oxalic acid in a teacupful of hot water and rubbing the stained part well with the solution. Ink stains may be taken out of any thing white by simply putting a little powdered salts of lemon on the stain, dampening it, allowing it to remain about five minutes, and then washing it out with soap and water, when the stain will disappear. Ink may be removed from boards by applying some strong muriatic acid or spirits of salts with a piece of rag and afterward well washing the place with water.

The Boys.

Look out for the boys, even the little ones. Watch them closely. Take good care of them. Keep them as sinless possible. Give them a chance to get knowledge. Not an "education," in the popular meaning of the term is not knowledge. Give boys to work a more important than how to solve difficult problems. The ability to gain and maintain a home is of better than the ability to read Greek, or compose music. The pride which tells a young man who follows the plow or strikes the anvil that he is, so far as his occupation is concerned, as good a man as the best of them, is better than the pride of the mere scholar, if, in addition, he possesses no other qualities, who contemplates labor upon his escape from what he considers "drudgery." One of the first, last and most constant lessons which should be taught in every school house, is that honest toil is also safest and best; that humble homes are also safest and best; that quiet, rural lives are the safest and best. There are boys not "all grown in one terms who smoke cigarettes, and swear blasphemously, and—not all sorts of vices. They do so because they are idle. By the time they are men, idleness will be a habit, and all these vices will grow in this field of idleness like weeds in an untended garden. Every home ought to be a better school than any school-house; but how few are better than necessities of evil, because of environment. What can the boys doing after school hours, and on Saturdays and Sundays, and in vacation! Many of them think they are having fun, when they are only seeing the seeds of future failure and disgrace. They should have fun, plenty of it, but they need teaching that vice is not fun, and that vicious fun as a business is the hardest work and the least reward before they get through with it, of anything they can go at. It is the business of the parents and teachers to see that the fun is innocent, wholesome, and that some useful employment fills a portion of every day. The boys must be taught to work, and to know that the way things are fixed up in this little juvenile part of the nation, nothing else is really honorable and commendable but work. The dunce of them all they grow up want to depend on a poor or very moderate head, and not enough on a very good pair of hands and feet.

Household Hints.

Reliable Recipes.

FRYING.—A very little cream of tartar in the frying for a cake will hasten the hardening process. If the knife is often dipped into water while spreading the frosting, it will give a gloss of polish greatly to be desired.

COOKING HEARTHAN.—A great many cooks (at least the younger ones) stick the fork in the middle of the steak when turning it over. This is wrong. The fork should be inserted in the very edge, or in the fat that encircles it. When cutting it up, if the steak is inclined to curl, cut in three places before putting it in the pan. With a good fire it ought not to be in the pan over twenty minutes. Never add pepper or salt while the steak is frying, as the seasoning draws out the blood. Put the steak in the oven as soon as it is done, but do not shut the door, as the steak will get hard and stiff.

HARD FISH. First, dip the fish quickly in boiling water; then wipe the scales off, rinse in cold water, wipe it dry, sprinkle salt both inside and out, about as much as you would for steaks. Then dip in flour, place the pan that you are going to bake it in the stove with a piece of butter in it the size of an egg. Let it melt so that it covers the pan. Your pan should be about the length of your fish; if larger the butter will be apt to burn. Place your fish in it, the inside of it next to the pan. Put it in a hot oven, and bake one hour, if it is a large fish, less time if smaller. It should be well done and of a nice brown color.

MUTTON CHOPS.—Trim off superfluous fat and skin, boil each chop fat, and lard each with strips of fat salt pork, drawn in with the pick or by punch and sinker; the chop, put into saucepan; sprinkle with minced onion, pepper and parsely and barey cover with any weak broth you may chance to have. Put on the saucepan lid; set it where it will not boil under one hour. Then increase heat and simmer half hour, or until tender. Take up the chops and keep hot. Thicken gravy with browned flour, and juice of one lemon, and one spoonful mushroom catsup, stir one minute. Put back the chops, and heat to a well boil; lay chop on dish, pour over the gravy and serve.

ROAST TURKEY.—After the turkey is well dressed make a dressing of two cups of bread crumbs, one teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonfuls of butter, one egg. Season with sage and pepper, and mix together with milk, but not too wet. Stuff the turkey with this, filling the breast and body, and sew it up with a needle and twine. Tie the skin over the end of the neck with a string. Rub salt over it and dredge with flour. Place it in the roaster, breast side up, and as it cooks turn frequently, so it will brown all sides alike. It should be roasted slowly. A turkey of eight pounds should roast three hours. When half done (four again thickly; when this is browned baste it off with butter. To make the gravy: Boil the giblets until thoroughly done. Take them out and chopp very fine and put them into the gravy tureen. Take the water they were boiled in and add the drippings of the turkey and a little flour. Give it one boil, stirring it all the time. Pour it into the gravy tureen with the chopped giblets.

How to Preserve Cabbages.

A farmer's wife, writing to the Country Gentlemen, tells how she keeps cabbages from year from her plants. She always has nice cabbages. She keeps in an open pan full of fine, dry earth, and every time she goes into the garden she adds a teaspoonful or more of this dust over the cabbages, and the worms never molest them. Also by putting plenty of sawdust around current bushes she saves them from the worms, and it makes them bear large fruit, as it keep the grass moist underneath.

Farm and Home.

A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

Where are the birds that sweetly sang
A hundred years ago?
The flowers, that all in beauty sprang
A hundred years ago?
The lip that smiled,
The eye that will
Be dim and cold
In churchyard mould,
Where, O where, are lips and eyes,
The maiden's cheek, the lover's sighs,
That were so long ago?

Who peopled all the city's streets
A hundred years ago?
Who filled the church with faces meek
A hundred years ago?
The massing tale
Of other feet,
The plot that worked
Is buried now
Where, O where are the plots and moors,
The poor man's home, the rich man's floors,
That were so long ago?

Where are the men who died with glory
A hundred years ago?
Who, while living, felt their story
A hundred years ago?
By other men,
They have not then,
Their lands and laws
Their home are filled
Yet nothing new can be say,
And bright the sun shone as to-day,
A hundred years ago.

Around the House.

When wall paper is discolored by the hair of people, rub carefully with stale bread.

Scrap down dust and spider-webs and wipe the wall paper straight down from the top with a piece of cotton flannel tied over a broom; change this often to prevent soiling.

Paper labels may be removed from bottles by wetting the surface and holding for an instant over any convenient flame. The steam penetrates the label at once and softens the paste.

Oilcloth must be wiped perfectly dry as it is washed. Use little soap and this in tepid water, change often. A good brush and a piece of dry flannel will make an oilcloth look like new, especially if linseed oil or skim milk be first rubbed in after washing. In addition to these precautions they are varnished annually they are almost indestructible.

Clean paint with ammonia—a tablespoonful to a quart of water; it is also excellent for unpainted woodwork. Never put soap on paint, as it kills the oil, causing it to fade from the wood. Whiting removes all spots and discolorations. Wet a flannel, dip in the whiting and rub. Wash off well and wipe dry. In time, whenever you clean let the hat wipe be with a dry cloth. Spear yellow spots with powdered borax.

In washing windows have a bit of pine stick over which to lay the cloth in order to reach the corners. Old newspapers are excellent for removing lint and giving a fine polish. If stoves are to remain during the summer have them black leaded while the carpets are up, pinning papers over the wall behind them will this is in process. Stoves that are to be stored should be rubbed with kerosene and covered to keep off flies and dust.

A simple contrivance which will prevent the scattering of seed by a canary is made by taking a piece of lattice of the same color as the cage; have it deep enough to reach from the bottom of the cage to the top of the seed dish; shirr it at both top and bottom, run strings in and fasten to the cage. If this is neatly put on it adds to the look of the cage and saves a great deal of work. Tie the strings so that they can be undone easily and the cover be taken off and shaken.

Ink stains may be removed from a mahogany table by putting a few drops of spirits of nitre into a teaspoonful of water, touching the part stained with a feather dipped into the mixture; immediately the ink stain disappears, the place must be rubbed with a little water, or there will be a white mark. Ink stains on silver articles may be removed immediately and effectually without doing any injury to the things, by making a little chloride of lime into a paste with water, and rubbing the stains until they disappear and afterwards washing the article with soap and water. Ink stains may be removed from colored table covers by dissolving a teaspoonful of oxalic acid in a teacupful of hot water and rubbing the stained part well with the solution. Ink stains may be taken out of a white white by simply putting a little powdered salts of lemon on the stain, dampening it, allowing it to remain about five minutes, and then washing it out with soap and water, when the stain will disappear. Ink may be removed from boards by applying strong muriatic acid or spirits of salts with a piece of rag and afterward well washing the place with water.

The Boys.

Look out for the boys, even the little ones. Watch them closely. Take good care of them. Keep some useful employment. Give them a chance to get knowledge. Put an "education," in the popular meaning of the term is not knowledge. How to work is more important than how to solve difficult problems. The ability to gain and maintain a home is far better than the ability to read Greek, or compose music. The prize which tells a young man who follows the plow or sculptures the anvil that he is, so far as his competition is concerned, as good a man as the best of them, is better than the prize of the mere scholar, or politician, or professional sharp, who congratulates himself upon his escape from what he considers drudgery. Of the first, but one in the most constant lessons which should be taught in every school house, is that honest toil is also safest and best; that humble homes are the safest and best; that quiet, rural lives are the safest and best. There are boys not half grown in our towns who smoke cigarettes, and swear boisterously, and can—but all sorts of vices. They do so because they are idle. By the time they are man, idleness will be a habit, and all these vices will grow in this field of idleness like weeds in an untended garden. Every home ought to be a better school than any school-house; but how few are better than the reception of evil, because of carelessness. What are the boys doing after school hour; and on Saturdays and Sundays, and in vacation? Many of them think they are doing fun, when they are only sowing the seeds of future failure and disgrace. They should have fun, plenty of it, but they need teaching that vice is not fun, and that virtue fun as a business is the hardest work and the hard reward before they get through with it, of anything they can do at. It is the business of the parents and teachers to see that the fun is innocently innocent, and that rural useful employment fills a portion of every day. The boys must be taught to work and to know that the way things are fitted up in this little gravel-spot of the universe, nothing also is really profitable and commendable but work. Too many of them as they grow up want to depend on a poor or very moderate hand, and not enough on a very good pair of hands and brains.

Philippo Academy of Languages.

Established 1871, has removed to more commodious and pleasant quarters, 192 Market street, corner of Geary. Professor Jos Filippo continues to give personal instruction in Spanish and French, by his self, practical method saving months of study. The slower method of acquiring foreign tongues is obsolete. This improved method affords the opportunity to practise. Circulars and particulars from Spain and France free by students.

Household Hints.

Reliable Recipes.

FROSTING.—A very little cream of tartar in the frosting for a cake will hasten the hardening process. If the knife is often dipped into water while spreading the frosting, it will give a gloss of polish greatly to be desired.

COOKING HARPSTEAK.—A great many cooks (at least the younger ones) stick the fork in the middle of the steak when turning it over. This is wrong. The fork should be inserted in the very edge, or in the fat that encircles it. When cutting it up, if the steak is inclined to curl, cut in three places before putting it in the pan. With a good fire it ought not to be in the pan over twenty minutes. Never add pepper or salt while the steak is frying, as the seasoning draws out the blood. Put the steak in the oven as soon as it is done, but do not shut the door, as the meat will get hard and stiff.

HARD FISH.—First, dip the fish quickly in boiling water; then wipe the scales off rinse in cold water; wipe it dry, sprinkle salt both inside and out, about as much as you would for steaks. Then dip in flour; place the pan that you are going to bake it in the stove with a piece of butter in it the size of an egg. Let it melt so that it covers the pan. Your pan should be about the length of your fish; if larger the butter will be apt to burn. Place your fish in it, the inside of it next to the pan. Put it in a hot oven, and bake one hour, if it is a large fish, less time if smaller. It should be well done and of a nice brown color.

MUTTON CHOPS.—Trim off superfluous fat and skin, beat each chop flat, and heat each with stripes of fat salt pork, drawn quite through so as to protect them from the shop, put into saucepan; sprinkle with minced onion, pepper and parsley and barely cover with any weak broth you may chance to have. Put on the saucepan lid, set it where it will not boil under one hour. Then increase heat and simmer half hour, or until tender. Take up the chops and keep hot. Thicken gravy with browned flour, and juice of one lemon, one large spoonful nasturtium catsup, stir one minute, put back the chops, and then, in a deep boil "Lay about you dish, pour over the gravy and serve.

ROAST TURKEY.—After the turkey is wall dressed make a dressing of two cups of bread crumbs, one teaspoonful of salt, two teaspoonfuls of butter, one egg. Season with sage and pepper, and mix together with milk, but not too wet. Stuff the turkey with this, filling the breast and body, and sew it up with a needle and twine. Tie the skin over the end of the neck with a string. Rub salt over it and then some flour. Place it in the roaster, breast side up, and as it cooks turn frequently so it will brown all sides alike. It should be roasted slowly. A turkey of eight pounds should roast three hours. When half done, and again shortly when this is browned baste it off with butter. To make the gravy, boil the giblets until thoroughly done. Take them out and chop very fine and put them into the gravy tureen. Take the water they were boiled in and add the drippings of the turkey and a little flour. Give it one boil, stirring it all the time. Pour it into the gravy tureen with the chopped giblets.

How to Preserve Cabbages.

A farmer's wife, writing to the Country Gentleman, tells how she keeps cabbage worms out of her patch: "I think that I have has nice cabbages. She keeps an old tin pan full of fine, dry earth, and every time she goes into the garden she sifts a teaspoonful or more of this dust over the cabbages, and the worms never molest them. Also by putting plenty of sawdust around current bushes she saves them from the worms, and makes them bear larger fruit, as it keep the ground moist and cool.

Advice to Mothers.

Mrs. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP should always be used when children are cutting teeth. It relieves the little sufferer at once; it produces quiet, natural sleep by relieving the child from pain, and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." It is very pleasant to the taste. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, relieves wind, regulates the bowels, and is the best known remedy for diarrhœa, whether arising from teething or other causes. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

SCHOOL-MASTER AND BOY.

"You're called too often and punished too long. You don't make me be obedient to you. You're called me a dunce if I answered wrong. Or a dull if I failed to tell
Just where to say 'the' and when to say 'lay,'
Or what side-saddle-horses ought to do,
Or the longitude of Kamschatka Bay,
Or what Jack's mother made him do,
So I think the school ought to close, I do,
Or make a change or so at least."

The school-master grinned, he opened his eyes,
But said not a word for sheer surprise.
"Can you tell me what 'phenobbi means?' I ran,
Can you say all of by heart,
The 'every, twenty, ninety' sum,
Or tell Salem or Nominal Rome?
Can you thing a boy, I would like to know,
Tell it hence like a bumble bee?
Can you make a kite yourself that will go
Up and down and sideways and up the sky
Or make and engine or a boat on the wing
And the little birdies come to sing
Around your window? Can you do all this,
Or can you do nothing, I'm almost sure
Can you tell me where the rest of the white
Goes under the eaves may be?
Do you know the time when the squirrel brings
The young from the nest in the tree?
Can you tell me how many pounds of potatoes
Are in a bushel? Can you say
Do you climb a high tree, or do you climb
Can you swim and dive, can you jump and run?
Can you do everything? Why, I think
The master's voice trembled as he replied
Hesitatingly, as if he feared he weighed.

How a Little American Girl Saw the Pope.

A gentle, winning and brave little American girl who is travelling in Europe, caring for invalid mother, writes to a lady friend a letter describing the following bright and ingenuous description of an interview she succeeded in gaining with the Pope:

"I was so nervous when I knew I should see him, I felt as if I could not speak or do anything right. I was so excited that I forgot my manners and I did not even say Holy Father, I just walked up and said, I was an American, and I was so happy to see him, I was a total stranger, and a complete stranger, I was so happy I could not speak, and then I thought was the way I should have done. Then he left. The Pope was dressed all in white, and looked so young for a man of his years, and so a moment I felt as happy as I ever felt in my life. I don't know what I did, I felt as if I could do anything. I did not know I could speak a word of English, I only called 'Mon Pere,' and didn't give a single thought I could think of nothing formal. I then half knelt before him, and he put his hand on my head. In my left hand I had my crucifix, and in the right hand my rosary. I had my beads which I might use while he said beautiful Latin words to read my soul? He raised me all upright, my sister, papa and mamma, my home, and my pleasures, and I felt as if I could give him all, and he would bless me and every one, and then gave me a special blessing, he laid his hand on it and my precious little crucifix, and I kissed it with both hands on my knees and then, with a wave of his hand he motioned me to retire, and I felt as if many steps he called me and sent a message to papa. I did not come out of the room at all in the usual way, I just kept on retreating myself out, I felt as if I could not turn my back on the room, when he again blessed me and then with my hand up and my eyes full of tears, I ran out, and I don't believe Holy Father thought I was the same happy girl who an hour before had entered the room. I ran to my apartment, from which he hastily came carrying a silver box which he pressed into my hand, my very, very pleased as he told me Father sent it with a blessing, for my own. This is my proof that I have seemed all this, and the precious gift of a moment of a year to be remembered by me I live. I did have some enough to thank the chamberlains, one of them passed, for their courtesy, and get tears and not into my carriage. I feel if I could sit and wondering if all appeared had been seen.

Angry Words to Mother.

Forget a great many things which happen to-day, said a little girl, the lesson of love her thanks. "But I can't forget angry words I spoke to my dear mother, who is now dead. Ah! dear little I'm respectful to your parents. I just remembered it, and added the special to neighbors and children, but I think these promises protection will add here forgiveness. You will have more and less regrets.

A Woman's Pocket.

It looks out in a dwelling house the door, and after the men and his wife reached the street, the lady found that was $60 in the pocket of her husband. Hastily she called him back, "Is for it," said the husband, and he ran back to the burning building. The lady hurriedly, and the man did not. At the expiration of an hour the extinguished, and the back building. Finally he grasped their way up the stairs through water and blinding smoke and found the man in the closet, and at his wife's close looking for the $60. He was nearly suffocated with but had strength enough to say that he would find the pocket inside the dress. It never occurred to him to the dress and rush out with the money. He got so excited and nervous in ment by those opposed to her patriotic works and her advocating the cause of the Irish poor. He asserted that she had transgressed her rule, either in her literary works or her work for the poor, but, on the contrary, she only carried out the strict commands of her superiors, Bishops McCarthy and McCarthy, and the Abbess O'Hagan. He alleded to her having lost "her friends and protectors in the patriotic Bishop McCarthy and the saintly Abbess O'Hagan, something, she felt strongly that the sympathies of their successors were not with her or her work." He also alluded to her efforts at Kanth and to "the many injurious rumors, which she saw no means of contradicting," her being received by bigoted and anti-Irish people, and her comparatively to Rome, where her efforts were for weeks discussed by the authorities, at the end of which the Holy Father recognized her in private audience, gave her his blessing, and made her Foundress of a new order. The Bishop next quoted a letter he received from the official of the Propaganda, saying that "the papers concerning Mother Clare which he may different quarters, have been sent to the Propaganda; do not contain anything which might give some complaint to be made against her character." The official continued in the following words: "I may assure your Lordship that no action, acknowledgment and consideration has been taken of whatever was sent to Propaganda, and nothing was found to prevent your Lordship from proceeding in the matter of her as the Holy Father," etc. The "papers concerning her" which the official alludes to, are the numerous complaints—piles of letters—sent against the Nun of Kenmare to Rome by parsonocracy—Protestants and sympathizers of the oppressive landlords and the detestable Castle rule—whose crime of, though it proved sufficient to torture her in Ireland, could not hurt her in her exile, proved of no account at the feet of St Peter, the source of truth and justice.

Bishop Spaldings informed the audience that Mother Clare had recently written to Archbishop McEvilly, saying that her mission Order might have the convent at Knock, and that she was willing, with a decided refusal. This convent is the building which the Nun of Kenmare, with her usual pluck, with a view to establish an industrial and training school for Irish girls, so very greatly needed of the paid the holders for the last penny about $20,000, being contributions received from all parts of the world, including many Protestants—all of whom sympathized with her in her philanthropic and benevolent design. Not probably this affair also is one to which, as an act of justice to the Irish people, the Propaganda will give serious consideration.

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM—
IRELAND.

The Irish-American Leaders.

DUBLIN, Oct. 10.—A meeting has been started among the Irish National Leagues societies for extending an invitation to the Irish-American leaders, including Alex. Sullivan and Congressman Donnelly, to visit Ireland.

Hero Perpetual Informers.

The Crown continues in vogue in the Maamtrasna murder trial to deplorably by the reunion, on a Sunday, at Ballinrobe, of Joseph Witness in the Sheppy murder case at Ballycalla, to the immense rage he made in the prosecution of those, who propose to impeach the evidence of such a character, completely by the Smythe murder were convicted.

Reason for Evicted Tenants.

DUBLIN, Sept. 27.—Major Chavasly, a lieutenant in Queen's County, Wednesday, fatally shooting upon one of his farms, whose health is probably, was not seen for twelve months. The Major was a resident of Dublin. The Major was recently engaged from their domicile and fed, but was prevented by the police, who had seen most people before the chase was given up.

The Irish Leagues in Great Britain.

DUBLIN, Oct. 1.—A meeting of the Irish National Land League of Great Britain held in Harrington, Secretary, said that, owing to the recent issue, and discharged, the Irish League had decided to affiliate with no Branches connected with the Irish Land League. The League, he said, had received no help from America for its work, and, in fact, the Irish Land for its all necessary to carry on work.

Impossible to Fade in Ireland.

On 4,000, The Catholic schools of 308, Michael and John are, it is understood, especially mentioned for a minimal bequest.

Donegal.—Thomas Lynch, one of clerty, Castlecastle, in the county of Donegal, farmer, has been adjudged a bankrupt.

The National League continues to spread its ramifications in the North. A meeting of a very impressive character took place for the establishment of a branch at the Lagoon, was held recently in Belfast, and was addressed by Messrs. Davitt and Dillon, Mr. Ward, and by Messrs. Daniel Tuite, John Gallagher, and Dr. Kelly. The resolutions were excellent, embracing the Irish National demands in their entirety. They approved of the principles of the Irish National League, proclaimed the demands for self-government, expressed confidence in the Irish Party under Mr. Parnell, and concluded the meeting to support the cause of the Irish laborers.

Galway.—Mr. T. F. O'Connor, M. P., visited his constituents, on Sept. 13, and received at their hands a welcome which, in some degree, have compensated him for the enthusiasm and persecution labor with which he provoked Conservatives and Unionists.

Cork.—Of all the Irish members, not one deserves a larger share of the respect and gratitude of his fellow countrymen than Mr. O'Connor.

Kilkenny.—The Commissioners of National Education have promoted Mrs. Ellen O'Gorman, principal teacher of Chemeldare National School, Kilkenny, from the 1st of April, 1884.

Kildare.—Mr. Gerald Kenehleen, P. L. G., Carnagey, has been appointed to the commission of the peace for this county of Kildare.

Kerry.—On Sept. 15, the wedding of Miss Mary Ellen O'Connell, second eldest of Maurice O'Connell, Bart., of Killarney, and Mary Pauline, eldest daughter of Colonel Hutchinson of Revell, county Tipperary, was celebrated in the chosen, recently erected by the bride's father, within the precincts of his demesne.

Longford.—Rev. Thomas O'Donnell, Cooham House, Edgeworthstown, has been appointed by the Commissioners of the Peace for the county Longford.

Limerick.—On Sept. 12, a fire broke out in the riding school of the military barracks in Limerick, when the military were at their drill, and, consequently, the fire was promptly extinguished, and the damage done was very slight. The Rev. Mr. Mackinnon, of Limerick, has been appointed to the commission of the peace for the county of Limerick.

Limerick.—The very extraordinary weather of the last few days, which seems to be unlike the best trade in Limerick, has been noted with attention, and the men and prospect to work.

Wexford.—On Sept. 16, a man named McHugh of Lodgepole, about three miles from Wexford, struck a neighbor of his, named John McHugh, with a spade, and fractured his skull, so that he died in a few hours. The man, McHugh, is not expected to recover.

Waterford.—The Most Rev. Dr. Power, Bishop of Waterford, has been appointed prime Philippines.

Roscommon.—On Sept. 17, Mr. John Jackson, schoolmaster, Cloonfree, Roscommon, accompanied by a number of police, proceeded to Mount Plessington, four miles from Athlone, and evicted eight families, comprising 40 individuals, for non-payment of rent.

Tipperary.—The Tipperary Town Commissioners have agreed with the Gas Company to light the town from the 1st September to 1st May, at £2 10s. per lamp.

A farmer named Carpio, residing at Johnstown, near Tubber, while walking in a sandpit recently, the bank fell on him, killing him on the spot.

At Clonmel, on Sept. 16th, Michael Phelan was committed for the murder of a relative, Cornelius Ryan, a child's clothes got entangled in the wheels of a threshing machine, and before the machine could be stopped, the child received injuries from which it died almost immediately.

On Sept. 19th, Mrs. Joiak, about 55 years of age, and wife of Thomas Joiak, Ballyrobert, Cashel, was found dead in bed. She had been ailing for the past few days, and had not actually treated for heart disease.

Kilkenny.—By the time that Parliament meets, Mr. T. J. Power, Waterford, will have completed the arrangements for the publication of the Irish Parliamentary Party, the date of the position in an admirable manner. Mr. Power has been in Kilkenny since the 1st Sept. 19th, was an exceedingly good one, and the results have not been small. The Tenants were represented.

Westmeath.—Two brothers named Mary and Francis Brophan, of Moskinstown, near Athlone, have arrived, discharged, and, by a dispute over cards, a young man named Thomas Brophan, the eldest of the family, of whom recovery was shortened.

Wexford.—The Most Rev. Dr. Browne, Bishop of Ferns, arrived at Wexford, on Sept. 19th, and was accorded a hearty welcome by the Wexfordians.

DR. E. B. LIGHTHILL,

(Of New York City.)

AT HIS OFFICE,

121 POST ST., SAN FRANCISCO,

Rooms 7 and 8 (Fresh)

For upwards of thirty years Dr. Lighthill's professional attention has been exclusively devoted to the study and investigation of these important ailments, and it is with justifiable pride that he refers to the success which he has achieved in their treatment and cure. His appliances are confessedly the most perfect of anything of the kind yet devised, enabling him not only to readily discover the exact nature of the complaint, but also to direct his applications to the diseased parts so effectually that relief is experienced at once and permanent cures are often effected in the shortest possible time. Many cases are given up by other physicians as incurable, and are treated by Dr. Lighthill with the happy feature of his practice that the applications cause neither pain nor distress and can therefore be readily administered by the most nervous person.

A candid opinion will invariably be given as to the probabilities of a cure, and no case will be accepted for treatment unless he does not offer a reasonable chance of success.

Dr. Lighthill takes pleasure in submitting to those interested the following letter, which speaks for itself:

FROM THE RIGHT REV. TH. F. HENDERSON, BISHOP OF PROVIDENCE, R. I.

My dear Doctor Lighthill:

Permit me to thank you most heartily for your kindness to the Sisters of our Convent. I had no expectation when I consulted you on Sister Dominica's deafness that you could so quickly restore her back her hearing; but she tells me that she hears now even better than ever before. For this, and for your kind and successful treatment of my own deafness, I thank you.

Now I would be glad to have you refer your patients to me, for I can recommend you, as a surgeon and physician, thoroughly accomplished in those departments of medicine in which you practice.

Very truly and very sincerely yours

TH. F. HENDERSON,

Bishop of Providence.

(EVENING POST.)

SAN FRANCISCO, Mar. 1, 1883.

The reputation of Dr. Lighthill's American physicians is well established in this city, and the success of the Dr. Lighthill's Electro-Medical Institute in Europe has added the distinguishing advantages of the latter possessed by the Institute, which is the only one in the world equipped with the Electro-Medical Apparatus manufactured by Hadad, Davis & Co., of Boston, which was tested upon a mummy.

It is highly desirable that the soft and adaptable nature of the instrument should be demonstrated to the public, having dealt with them for many years.

Poetry.

FOR THE MONITOR.

AN APPEAL TO ERIN.

BY DIDIMUS.

Let the nations are advancing
With thee not with them keep pace
Are thou dead, or art thou sleeping
Is the tyrant's vile embrace
Thy children are fleeing
They which patriots fears might tread
On unfortunate land and friendless
Are thy children with carnage spread,

Through such pathways young Columbia
Sought redress from tyrants sway—
Only and such freedom giveth
At death wreath her brow to-day,

And such ships with homeless hearts
Gather harvests fresh, ripe and Northward to the Hayden strand.

Thou old Tell, on thether mountaine,
Hail the land's seasters back,
Death, profoundly, charity could him,
Spotless Freedom in his track,
So, by Judith, heaven appointed,
Samaria's chaine were rent,
When she slew the drunken tyrant,
Holiness in his tent.

O'Connell, Grattan, Clay and Everett,
Place them in a Province each,
Bid them bring back Ireland's freedom
With their magic powers of speech
All the eloquence they'd muster,
All their oratoric art
Could not rent the tiniest rivet
Of her fastening grave apart.

Sister! we will yet unite!
Thou art dwelling, life is frail,
What you gathered, I gathered
Bring within the Present's pale.
They who think to jeffy stalwart
Dread no strength and youth away;
Age, when fitted and fitted for our purpose,
If we work, as well as pray.

Virginia City, N.T., October 24th, 1864.

LINES.

There is a ray in every heart
Had we the art
To find it,
There is a ray in every eye
Which cannot die.
Could we but see it.

There are kind words for every lip
Which seldom slip
Into slumbers,
There is regret in every mind
Could we but find
Its embrace.

There is a charm in every face
Had we the grace
To court it,
There is pure love in every breast
If possessing great
Support it.

And oh, to think, is sweet and fair
That force despair
We can realize,
That we can be nearer man live
In hardened brings and narrow eye
A balsam

FALLING LEAVES.

Falling gently, gently falling,
To the earth the leaves descend,
Listening to the wind that's calling,
Through the air their way they wend.
Yellow, red, and brown and golden
Falling gently to the earth.

They are taken from their bowers
That they decked with beauty rare,
Scattered in the fleeting flowers,
Often float through the wintry air.
Every place can see the leaves falling,
Falling gently to the earth.

Thus in Autumn as the leaves fade,
Crumble into dust and ashes,
When the cold winds blow and blast the blade
When there are no more soft clashes,
Falling gently to the earth.

So our friends in life are parted,
Scattered from their home, and
Some are true and loving hearted,
Some are true and loving hearted;

beautiful, but scarcely seen, electric flashes that gild the edges of a storm cloud that just passed over and disappeared, and left the distant horizon, leaving a clear sky, pure air, and the promise of a bright and glorious successor.

Nor was Mr. Martin an indifferent participator in this unexpected pleasure. Though silent, his manifestations could not but be observed, and he lingered much longer at the table than usual, evidently forgetting important appointments on the street. To him, the returning reason of his loved one was of far more value than dollars, and he made himself content until the clock had counted 12 ., and the family vacated the dining room, only to assemble in the parlor, there to continue the conversation.

After seats were taken, and not a link in the family chain absent, Mrs. Martin, addressing her remarks to Esther, said:

"Well, daughter, I am almost to happy to know that you have not only given the proposition of a Southern secession thought, but have come to a favorable conclusion. You must now continue to be cheerful, and here is your father's purse, which he gives you, with the only directions that you are to purchase at your own discretion such articles as you think you will need. Now, remember, dear, there are a great many elegant people down South with whom we shall become mutual acquainted—men, rich in mind, as well as possessed of broad plantations."

The latter outburst of word-painting by Mrs. Martin had the effect of producing a genuine laugh, in which Esther's voice rang clear and sweet as it was accompanied by a good, hearty pent-up nature had burst its prison doors and she exclaimed: "I pose the best father in the world! but, mother, I do think it barely possible none of us will, after all, visit Paradise—Florida."

"Why, Esther," retorted Mrs. Martin, "you astonish me! Do you know what you have said! Pray, now, explain your meaning."

"Oh, I really cannot explain just now," replied Esther very mildly. "I don't know how I ever shall explain, mother. But it is now three o'clock. I must go to my room, where I have something."

And she ran rapidly to her chamber, leaving the unfinished sentence a sore and fresh thorn to torture her anxious parents.

"You must follow Esther," said Mr. Martin, "and endeavor to ascertain what new fancy has changed her. Oh, if poor, she, unobserved, and take a position which will enable you to observe how she spends her time alone."

His wife acted promptly on the suggestion, and was soon in the room opposite Esther's, and in a position that commanded a full and unobstructed view of Esther as she sat near the open window.

With throbbing heart she kept her eyes on Esther, who seemed to be reading a letter which, at intervals, she would press to her lips. The letter possessed an intense interest, and detailed characteristics. It produced joy and grief, and to an observer it was difficult to decide which of the two qualities in the greater degree.

Mrs. Martin could glean no information of a satisfactory character from observation, and gaining a locality where she could not be seen, she called to Esther. At the sound of her mother's voice Esther hastily folded the letter and placed it between the leaves of a book lying on the table and responded:

"Oh, mother, come in."

The invitation was promptly complied with. She was met by Esther with a kiss of welcome, and the two seated themselves together at the window.

Esther said that she would be her confidant in a matter of much importance, and receiving an affirmative answer, she took the roll of the third chapter of Ruth, and Albert Maxwell, informing him that, although she had not yet decided on marriage, she was in love him, for reason, at least to her satisfactory—but that she would endeavor to think kindly of him; and that if she should be unable to do so, she would be better for both of them that his proposal not to Norwegian should not take place. "And from the date of that letter I had resolved to think of him as a dear deceased friend; and, to make the determination as much a reality as possible, I placed his name under my pillow, and I dreamed that I had the pleasure of dancing with my own hands I carried with green grass Esther broke down at this point and wept profusely. Her mother offered her words of comfort, entreating her to cheer up, and tell her all—she would do her best in the solution of her difficulties.

With her handkerchief Esther kept her face concealed, and presenting the book to Mrs. Martin requested her to open it and find a letter which she would please read and rendered. It was the joy that unlocked the long closed door to the heart; and, in a spirit of anger, Mrs. Martin said to her daughter:

"It is only too evident from this letter, that William Ernest Jones was talking you so unmitigated, designedly and shameful! and the fact that he has not visited us since that evening only confirms my doubts. I feel sorry that he has acted thus; he has forfeited, my respect, and, I trust your respect and confidence. Take"

"How true it is, that our wicked acts no only make ourselves of us, but cause unsuccessfully be concealed; they find us out when least expected, to our discomfiture," Mrs. Martin continued. "You know, dear Esther, I have always recognized in Albert Maxwell a certain amount of humility and goodness, quite uncommon in one of his sex. Your father's only objection to him was his unfortunate pecuniary condition; nevertheless, he admits his honesty. How well he has established his claim to humility, honesty and a true heart, is evident from his letter.

"Only think of it, he has lost all hope of ever re-establishing himself in your affections, and seems content if he can only be assured that you are convinced of his innocence of the charges of drunkenness and gambling, and lately you he will ever pray for your temporal and spiritual happiness!

"Poor young man! He certainly won my entire sympathy, and I shall love him for his manly virtues, extra-ordinary forbearance and Christian resignation under circumstances, that would have in some others kindled the fire of revenge and driven them to acts of desperation. Yes, he bows to his hard lot so submissively.

"This pathetic appeal in behalf of injured innocence had a most telling effect upon the nerves of your Father, and she involuntarily threw her arms around her mother's neck and sobbed audibly.

"To heal her wounded heart, Mrs. Martin suggested to Esther that she thought it very advisable she should promptly respond to the letter, assuring Albert that her determinations were believed, and that she would not cease to be his friend and well-wisher, and—

"But, mother," interrupted Esther, "may I not intimate that we shall be glad to have him call and spend a day with us when next he visits the city."

"Yes, yes, dear! there is not the most remote objection to that. But had you not better tell him that very soon you will—all of us, in fact—leave the city, and not return before some time in November?"

"Oh, mother! I don't think we need know I don't care to go."

"Why not, Esther."

"Well—because I don't." To tell you plainly, I had rather stay right here where I can see—"

"Oh! Yes, I understand, my dear, now. You have not forgotten love to love. And that young lover of your Father may say, in this where I will him you have declined the proposed trip to be at home to receive a visit from Albert."

"But, mother, you promised to be my confidant, and rather the embarrassment, how can you tell father anything I have said to you?"

"Yes, I promised secrecy—excepting, always, your interest, your happiness, your real anything. Why should you object to his knowing what he must, produce of necessity know at some future day? Oh, yes, my child, I shall tell him, and I shall place in his hands the letter which you gave Albert; and now! renew my pledge to you, that I shall be to you as a mother should, and endeavor to lead you safely through this disagreeable matter.

"Then, mother, do as you choose. I confide all to your hands, and by you and father's promised I shall be governed. You know I love Albert, and I know he cannot love me; and my future happiness depends upon—"

"Do not be concerned about that; it shall be so! Now, my dear Esther, endeavor to feel satisfied, cheerful and happy, and this evening, after all save your father and myself, have retired, he shall hear all, and I promise you he will not oppose any thing whatever that will insure your peace and comfort.

The next morning Mr. Martin visited Esther in her room, to find her well and happy. He was somewhat excited in anticipation of the news she was to receive, the result of that evening's consultation. Soon, however, the excitement subsided—or nature, in the strong character—for she received the welcome intelligence of her father's consent, and his purpose to be at home to receive the proposition he made her on the morning of the drive.

Esther remembered that promise, and jumping from her seat and clapping her hands, exclaimed:

"Now, mother! That is my good and kind, if you and father! And that very day I will write to Albert! Do you think he will answer it? Do you think he will come?"

"Yes, you, child: if he loves you."

"Oh, mother! I know he does!"

"Then, Esther, have no fear: if he loves you, he will lose no time in replying to your letter—and he will come. And you may promise yourself in addition, Esther, that he will love you more devotedly than ever."

"Oh, I am so happy to hear you say so!" Esther then addressed the following letter to Albert, and sent it to the post-office to be mailed.

"Dear Albert—Your kind letter was duly received, and it all seemed quite satisfactory. It will afford us all much pleasure to have you with us when we visit the city next week. I will be all myself, and I will be more than pleased.

Rumors of the Battle-Field.

Many humorous incidents have occurred on battle-fields. A Confederate colonel ran into a Federal picket-post at Malvern Hill, and discovering that the men were not following him as closely as he wished, he uttered a fierce oath, and exclaimed—

"Come on! Do you want to live forever?"

The appeal was irresistible, and many a poor fellow who had laughed at the colonel's blunder, forgot his mirth in his fear, and ran after.

A shell struck the wheel of a Federal field-piece toward the close of the engagement at Fair Oaks, and, shivering the spokes, dismantled the cannon.

"Well, am it lucky that didn't happen before we used up all the ammunition, remarkedsomewhat strained in their rhetoric.

A lone of the commanding officers, and that marked that disastrous campaign, a private in one of the Western regiments was mortally wounded by a shell. Seeing the man's condition, a chaplain knelt beside him, and opening his Bible at random read out Samson's slaughter of the Philistines with the jaw-bone of an ass. He had not quite finished when a surgeon came by, and yellow interrupted the reading by saying:

"Hold on, chaplain. Don't deceive a dying man. Isn't the name of John Pope signed to this?"

A column of troops was pushing forward over the long and winding road in Tennessee, fearing lest the rebels should cut between the Potomac at the close of the Gettysburg campaign. Suddenly, the signal officer who accompanied the general in command discovered that some of his men, posted on a high hill in the rear, were reporting the presence of a considerable body of Confederate troops on top of the hills to the right. A halt was at once sounded and the leading brigade ordered forward to uncover the enemy's position. The recruits were soon scrambling up the steep ascent, officers and men gallantly racing to see who would reach the crest first. A young lieutenant at last had distanced his men, gained the advance but at the end of what they deemed a prettyfair chase, they were thrown into convulsions of laughter at discovering that what the signal men took for Confederate troops were only a tolerably large flock of sheep. As the leaders in this fortlorn hope rolled on the grass in a paroxysm of merriment, they laughed all the louder at seeing the pale countenance of their comrades, who, of course, came up fully expecting a desperate hand-to-hand struggle.

It is, perhaps, needless to say the brigade signed to march that evening.

As the army was crossing South Mountain the day before the battle of Antietam, General McClellan rode along the side of the moving column. Overtaking a favorite Zouave regiment, he exclaimed with his natural bonhomie:

"Well, and how is Old Fifth this evening?"

"Fine-rate, General," replied one of the Zouaves. "But we'd be better off if we haven't living so much on opposition."

"Hoppo-sition!" said the General, in a puzzled tone. "What do you mean by that?"

"It is easily explained, sir. You are expected to get our rations yesterday, but we didn't, we're living on the opposition that we did.

"Ah! I understand; you shall have your rations, Zouaves, to-night," replied the General, putting spurs to his horse to escape the cheers of his regiment. And he kept his promise.

Look out Young Man.

When it is said of a youth that "He Drinks," and it can be proved, what more remains to be said? What society would him for a member? Who will trust him? What dying man will appoint him as his executor? Letters of recommendation, the backing of business firms, a brilliant success, may not save him. The world shies him as a pestilence.

"Drinks!" Yes, it is whispered all through the community, "He Drinks" Thallium-like. When a young man loses his reputation for sobriety, he might as well be at the bottom of the sea.

WINTER IN MANITOBA.

Extreme Rigor and Severity of Wintry Weather in the Northwest.

The snow outside our house was from six to ten feet deep from—say, April, I tried to wear boots last November, and one of my best from. Moccasins, useful by fashion, and comfortable, I wore instead of shoes to wear the feet, which are not cased in small pairs of stockings. For travelling on fast snow shoes are the thing. Fancy yourself driven during the winter, as, the fingers if separated, generally freeze.

I were bored to melt snow for all the water we used last winter. The cold was so intense that the metal mug water was in received from the boiler into a pail, and made a new crinkling in the metal. Now or at it frequently had to be broken with a stick before the cattle could drink. It force so hard whilst being arrived a distance of some sixty yards in the open air. My husband would sometimes come in from a short run to the stack-yard with his nose frozen—indeed it was either a crime sight to see people partly frozen. The part affected turns white in most cases all feeling. Unless you see yourself in a glass, or are told it, you are not even unless of being frozen. It this plight it is best not to go near a fire, as sudden thawing is very painful. People generally try friction, rubbing themselves with snow, or with flannel, or, in the case of the snowy, when nose is frozen and far from help, the best course is to continue the snap off. My fitters cats from and broke off at the tail, and I lost one of my pets in sorrow in the snow.

Last winter, we found I found the mercurial freeze to my neated pot, which stood a foot from the kitchen stove pipe and in a room where it was not unusual to see a fire blazing all day and every day through the winter. Yet the mercury froze in every mercury. Brass irons if left half an hour in my room without a fire used to leave a pothole of milk in the kitchen all night, and next morning, on going to place it on the picture fall to pieces and left the milk standing cold in a pan. Milk, if left unattended with fire in the room, freezes so intensely that when I put a lump of it in the into the crate, or on the top of the stove, the first part of that melted would burn to the ice before the rest of it had thawed. I managed to nail it by first chopping the ice with an axe very small pieces. Clothes which had been washed from before I could hang them on the line to dry. I used to wash them out two or three nights for the snow and heat to bleach, and they always came out perfectly thawing and dry when they were brought indoors. Even after hanging out all night and folded they stuck together, and when I have been ironing the top of a pocket handkerchief, I never just would freeze to the table, which was close by the ironing fire. Ironing under these conditions is rather slow work.

Such stores must sound almost incredible, except to those who have, like myself, witnessed the facts, though of course, only those who have been weather, the Englishman who stayed with us last winter was often heard when he came into the house thaw the icicles from his moustache, which he had grown in the board and hanging in talking to us. A pail of water left in the kitchen all night would freeze solid to the bottom, and the water had to be thawed every time one was left, for two months. The ice used for drinking and for cooking had to be obtained in the Winnipeg River, and was cut in blocks by the men in their boots (snow-shoes) and hauled home in sleighs. The kennel wood was in pieces.

Winter, of course, not equally severe in all parts of Manitoba. Now we are on the ground last winter, I was at Fort Ellice, and all the great lakes are frozen for the same period. The cold was not nearly so bearably same to American ears, and owing to the absence of wind, the cold was less wintrous, and long for something green to see. The ice on the lakes, though, looks with brilliant sunshine, glorious skies and bracing air, compensates for slights, have great compensations of their own.

Evenings at Home.

The long evenings, which follow the short days, are made pleasant by the cheerful light of all her rooms. The cares of the day are ended, the toil of the evening time has come; the bither has dropped all sorts of anxieties and perplexities, and the whole family that are assembled, are now the innocent pleasures of the home circle.

It is a relief for the woman of the household to remember that the pleasant evenings at home are strong antidotes to the temptations to spend the evenings abroad, and seeking for pleasure in and by forbidden ways. Home is pleasant and recreation will be indulged in some where by every man, and happy are they who find in the home circle the place of pleasure.

A lively game, an interesting book read aloud, or a musical function, a new song to be practiced, will furnish pastime that the evening time took for Confederate troops were only a tolerably large flock of sheep. As the leaders in this forlorn hope rolled on the grass in a paroxysm of merriment, they laughed all the louder at seeing the pale countenance of their comrades, who, of course, came up fully expecting a desperate hand-to-hand struggle.

It is, perhaps, needless to say the brigade signed to march that evening.

"Ah! I understand; you shall have your rations, Zouaves, to-night," replied the General, putting spurs to his horse to escape the cheers of his regiment. And he kept his promise.

Little Things.

Springs are little things, but they are sources of large streams. A nail is a little thing, but it governs the course of a ship. A bridle is a little thing, but it governs its use and power; nails and pegs are little things but they hold the parts of large buildings together. Seeds are little, and are little things, but powerful for good or evil. Think of this, and mind the little things. Pay that little debt; it is a promise, redeem it; you know not what important events may hang upon it. Keep your word sacredly; say it to the children, they will mark it sooner than any one else, and the effect will probably be lasting in life. Mind little things.

The magnificent new cathedral on Hill St., Providence, R. I., was opened to the public on Sunday, and thousands of people interested and admired it. Nearly all the paintings are national, representing a of the most costly and time, is worth 1,000 dollars. The stained glass windows are a marvel of beauty. Perhaps the altar stone, Rt. Rev. Bishop Hendricken, of Providence, standing over the altar of the altar and receiving many hearty congratulations. He has made the work as it was proposed.

SUPERSTITIONS.

More Extensive among Protestants than Catholics.

Ireland's sons and Ireland's daughters have been accused of being a superstitious people, and I am sorry to say the charge, all I can say is this, that in my experience as a priest, and experience of a priest is great, coming in hourly contact as he does with all ages and all classes, I should have I found among the poorer children of St. Patrick that low, grovelling sordid superstition which I have seen among the lower orders and among the peasantry of other lands even Protestant countries, and especially among the country people. Again I am speaking from my own experience, for it was so myself to be born a Protestant, and my own people, as they do the wild beasts of the forest, and eat men with the same relish as the flesh of Venice pie meat. They have lost all semblance of humanity. I mean to say, that the Protestant religion is sufficient for the soul, and, after tasting the fruit, he would say with merrie Christmas Gaw which appeared on the yard it had been gathered. Before he tasted the wine cannot say which wine was not offer-cement, and of a dull, gray color. It was the fruit, by proceedings of which he alone possessed the secret, to make it white, clear, sparkling, and effervescent. Protestantism is extremely, if not intensely insane based by some mere-mutt-ed-ness. Why, Gaw, the sale of the humble religion is now forgotten by the world and forgotten by the world, and forgotten by the world, and forgotten by the world,

PASTORAL LETTER

— FROM —

MOST REV. JOSEPH SADOC, O. P.,

Archbishop of San Francisco.

TO THE CLERGY AND LAITY OF THE DIOCESE OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Country, Beloved.—You are doubtless aware that, under the blessing of God and according to the wish of the Sovereign Pontiff, the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore will be celebrated the early part of next month. The object of that Synod is chiefly regulated by the Archbishop of that city, who has been appointed by the Holy Father to preside, as special Delegate, over its deliberations, and who, in his recent Pastoral on the subject, shows in his wonted lucid style that "the object for which this Council is summoned is not to formulate new dogmas of faith, for the one only doctrine we preach is the faith once delivered to the Saints (a). Nor will our deliberations have any political direction, for we have no political grievances to redress nor political aspirations to gratify. The Church of God has no direct relations with politics; the kingdom of Christ and of His Church is not of this world (b). His remains to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's (c). The enactment of salutary laws for the promotion of piety and sound morals, the correction of abuses, the establishment so far as practicable of greater uniformity in ecclesiastical discipline, the development of the Christian commonwealth, the quickening and strengthening of the bonds of charity which should bind to all as members of the Christian family to one God and to each other—these are the signal blessings at which we aim in assembling together." Such grave and momentous are the other object then the glory of God and the spiritual welfare of the faithful; and in this we all should be deeply interested, for to know and adore God, to love and serve Him, is the first duty of man, the end of his existence, and the only thing which will secure him a happy home throughout eternity, after his short, toilsome sojourn in time.

EVERY MAN NOT DEPRIVED OF HIS MENTAL FACULTIES

ought to know that he is and that he did not make himself. This intellectual light ought also to show him that it belongs inferior to him are equally dependent on the Creator, and that, in fact, every creature necessarily supposes a Creator, as a magnificent edifice supposes an able builder, as the fabric of the Universe proves its omnipotent Maker; or, to express it in the words of St. Paul: "Every house is built—[illegible]—but He that hath built all things, God, is, "whether it was my lot, or I told me so; and all things that are in it confessed the same thing. I asked the sea, and the abyss and the reptiles that are in them, and they answered: 'We are not thy God; seek him above us.' I questioned the air, and the whole atmosphere with all its inhabitants, and the air witnesses is deceived; I am not thy God.' I asked heaven, the sun, the moon and the stars; 'Neither are we thy God,' said they. Then I asked the mass of the world: 'Tell me whether thou art my God, or not?' and with a strong voice it answered: 'I am not; but I am by Him whom ye seek in me; He made us, whom ye serve, and we are what we are made us.'"

It is not a little surprisor that there should be men in our age, bestowing themselves perfect in their senses, who cannot bear this loud voice of the Universe, this concert of all is also so weak as not to see the absurdity of imagining that nothing is God; that is, that God is the universe or all things in it. It requires very little light to discover that God is that supposition would be unstable and immensible, material and immaterial, free and necessitated to act; just and charitable, or in the good; sinful and criminal, as in the bad; religious and worshipful, as in the saints; and, at the same time, irreligious and profane, as in the impious blasphemer.

ANY ONE OBJECT IS NOT TO UNITE OR—[illegible]

ABSURD REASON.

deceiving some fools and any idolatrous of our days; but, leaving these aside, what we mainly wonder is that was should pay to God the debt of religious worship, as indicated by Him. Man, the masterpiece of the visible creatures, above the same of all, render the Maker of all the homage of religious veneration, as the testimony of his great and grateful acknowledgment. Even they who may not have advanced one step in their mental progress over the ancient philosophers should confess with them that God is the Maker and Ruler of all things; that every thing that exists, exists only by His power and by His will, and is preserved only by His providence and for man; that he has claims on the gratitude of the human race; (f) that it would be impious to own him all, and to repay Him with ingratitude, (g) and that He keeps an account of the pious and impious men (h). These sentiments of religious veneration do the Deity, echoed by the Roman philosopher, are so deeply rooted in the human heart, and so generally acknowledged by all peoples, that unless where wilful impiety has silenced the promptings of the human breast, they are found to be universal. "If you travel through different countries," writes Plutarch, "you may see cities without walls, without institutions, without kings or wealth; but no one has ever seen a city without temples" (i). A wiser philosopher—say, the wisest of mere—had said before him "Honor the Lord . . . . Remember thy Creator . . . . Fear God, and keep His commandments, for this is all man"—the whole business and duty of man (j).

AND THIS IS IN STRICT CONFORMITY

to the natural sentiments of man which lead us to honor those to whom honor is due, either on account of their superior excellence, dignity or worth, or for their superhuman benefactors in our regard. Thus honor is paid to our parents, legislators and chief magistrates; and if one of these distinctions shineth in his bravery on the battlefield, and renders signal service in establishing his country, actuated by no private interest or sordid views, but simply by the desire to befriend the nation, his name is honorably handed down from generation to generation, and with profound reverence he is universally called the Father of his Country. And, if this be due to a mortal member of the human family, it ought to be obvious to any reflecting mind that the highest honor is due to the Creator of all men, infinitely scintillating all His superiority, sovereignty and independence, who, without any interest that might answer to Him, but simply to satisfy us with His munificent gifts, has created us, has endowed us with most noble faculties, has given us time-reality, and has built for us a country in Heaven, where to enjoy His happiness forever, on the one condition, namely, on our being His grateful, obedient children.

SEEING THE GOOD OUTCOMINGS OF RELIGIOUS DEVOTION

in the writings of the apostle of love—"Dearest worthy, O Lord, our God, let receive glory and honor and power; because thou hast created all things, and for Thy will they were, and were created" (l). This grateful acknowledgment is so just and so natural that the magnitude of receive may be classified among our ever-towards the irrational beings. For we notice in our domestic animals a sort of instinctive recognition of the friendly hand of their owner. Thus, as Pliny refers the thoughtless material, into to unity the admirable wisdom exhibited in the delicate organization of a mosquito, so the Prophet invites the ingrate Israelites to learn a lesson from the Donkey, which, better than he, acknowledges his master (l). This ingratitude seems to be particularly offensive to God the Apostate. For, after being baptized and brought up in the Christian religion, which is an even received some holy orders, he listened to bad instructors, followed their bad example, and finally apostatized from the Faith. He did all in his power to destroy the Christian institutions created by Constantine the Great, to abolish the religious legislation enacted by him, and to re-establish idolatry with all its abominations. Not content with this, he was planning a vigorous persecution against the Christians, and had vowed to put to the sword the holy bishops and doctors of the Church, St. Gregory Nazianzen and St. Basil, on his return from the campaign in Persia, from which he never returned. He did not reap much benefit from his abandoning the Gospel of Christ; for after having enjoyed the right hand of Friendship from some admirers for a very few years, while combating the Persians he received a mortal wound from a dart, from which he died, not however, until he had made his last address, in with a dying blasphemy; for, according to Theodoret, Sozomen and Socrates, he died of the wound, he flung it to the air, saying: "Thou hast conquered, O Galilean!" (m).

IT IS DOUBTLY TO BE DEPLORED THAT SOME CHRISTIANS

in our days abandon little by little the practice of their religion, and that even nations in Europe, to a greater or less degree, seem to apostatize from the Gospel of Christ; and strive by impious measures to extinguish the light of Christian civilization bequeathed to them by their religious forefathers. Impious legislators endeavor to rob the children of a Christian training, to close the churches and religious ceremonies, to turn the churches into mere profane and pure circles—into the street, to confiscate the ecclesiastical property owned by God by devout people, to hinder the exercise of religion, to letter the authority of the Bishops, and to tie as much as they can the sacred hands of the Vicar of Christ. What can be the reason of such apostasy? We have no hesitation in saying that the main cause must be found in a lil association. Christ said: "Those that not keep the Law (Decalogue) . . . . Hold the Holy Ghost warns us, saying: "He that loveth danger shall perish in it" (o) and the Apostle Paul: "Evil communications corrupt good manners" (p). The evil contagion and wrong tendency in many half-baked works and anti-Catholic writings, conceived in the anti-Christian brain of popular demagogues, have [illegible] serious to preserve in us the heavenly treasure of the Christian revelation, warns us against such association as avid the pretended liberalism of what they call the "natural religion," and against the authority of the Church of God and its revealed doctrine. Thus, in comparing supernatural instructions, we deem it opportune to state and sustain the following propositions, namely: that reason, divorced from revelation, is inadequate to enable us to discharge properly our duty to God and man. And, in the first place, we submit that no great dependence can be placed on the rules of our mind. For, notwithstanding the good opinion which we entertain of its essential of mental ability, we have to confess that very many things remain unknown to us, even concerning subjects falling before our eyes. We observe, for instance, the regular succession of the seasons, but we ignore the main causes lower in the cause of the motions of the earth, as well as those which govern the comets, the planets, or the stars, the number of which we know not. We see the effects of the magnet; but what causes it to point north is unknown to us. We feel the effects of earthquakes; but where and when and to what extent they will surprise the busy mortals, we know. The choices has paid no several talks, and in a very short time has commenced thousand instructions; yet what is the number of the malady seems to baffle all medical science. And if our reason cannot comprehend these and a thousand other natural agencies, how shall man, positively the uneducated multitudes, be able to counter the superior of religion, and to know, by the mere light of reason, the existence of God and His divine attributes, the interior and exterior worship, the rites and observances with which he has to be served and served? He shall man know his immortality, his eternal destiny and; the responsibilities involved therein?

MOREOVER, WE ARE AWARE THAT WE HAVE VARIOUS WORDS

to discharge towards mankind, to our neighbors and to ourselves; and we know how that, if left to ourselves, self-interest and unruly passions will be apt to mislead us, as they frequently do, our reason. perhaps the most important point to be considered is the fact, of the divine revelations and fact that God has spoken to man; and as it would be great insolvency in children not to listen to their parents when speaking to them, so it would be most irreligious to disbelieve or hear lightly of God, speaking to us. We do not propose making a dissertation on this matter, but the subject seems to demand at least a passing notice.

Moreover, we know that we have above regarding the finite one of the human mind, is the only possible divine revelation is no man of true utility and moral necessity. Hence it cannot be innumerated with reason what the Apostle states on the subject, saying: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners, spoke in times past to the fathers by the prophets—last of all, in these days hath spoken to us by His Son" (p).

MONTH OF THE HOLY ROSARY.

REFLECTIONS ON THE ROSARY—ITS PURITY, ORIGIN AND POWER.

SECOND ARTICLE.

The more the devotion of the Rosary is spread amongst the people the greater will be the glory given to God and Mary, the more souls will be saved, and the greater and more abundant will be the blessings that will descend on society; hence it is that saints and servants of Mary have, at all times since its establishment, been most earnest and zealous in propagating it, and none too, for devotion, which has a tendency to pluck out from the hearts of the faithful its most common blessings. There is no devotion in the Church that has so bitterly opposed or so constantly attacked or maligned, both by himself and his colaborers, as that of the most holy Rosary. The devil hates most intensely the glorious Mother of God, and he detests in an equal manner the Rosary—for it bears, as a devotion, the same relation to her as the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass does to the Most Adorable Trinity. The devout recitation of the Rosary is the last effort, the highest act of opposition to the Most Sacred Mother of God, whilst it is at the same time an act of love to the Triune Deity. Such homages, our part at once assists the Queen of Heaven and her adorable Son in our love, and thus renders secure our salvation. It is for this great reason that a most pious and learned master of the spiritual life has thus expressed himself: "For my part, I have no difficulty whatever in admitting what is stated in the Life of St. Dominic, that the Saint having exercised a possessed person, expelled the infernal spirit in the name of God to confess the truth to him."

The reason why the devil was "Were there any persons in hell that had been truly attached to the Most Blessed Mother of God through the devotion of the Rosary?" Satan answered the Saint that no one had ever been condemned to hell who had persevered in saying with devotion up to the death his Rosary, for Mary had obtained for all such true contrition for their sins. "I really believe that," says the master referred to, "and it is absolutely impossible that any one is damned, notwithstanding that he has recited the Rosary, if will believe that he never had been truly devout, that he obstinately lived in sin without the will to correct himself, or that by a just judgment of God, in punishment of the corruption of his heart, he was allowed to give up before his death the devotion. (The Calendar de Bergerac in Cornelius de Lapide.)

The same thing in substance is affirmed by St. Alphonsus in his Glories of Mary. We also read in the life of St. Ludgarde that she had learned by revelation "that when we recite the Rosary with devotion cannot make a fine garland." (Bonnet). Blessed Alan de la Roche relates that a Bishop in Spain who was that he could not relent his depraved morals of his people, notwithstanding all the labor and zeal of the Bishop, Blessed Alan de la Roche, in preaching the Rosary, and exhorting the people in the way to meditate on them. The faithful embraced this devotion with earnestness, and in a very short time a great number of conversions took place. Ignorance, impiety, disorderly conduct, and vices of every description were succeeded or replaced by piety, reverence, frequentation of the sacraments, and the practice of all the Christian virtues. The Bishop, overjoyed at the great results, thank God for the change that was effected in his episcopal city. He gave orders to all the parishes in his diocese to do the same means that he himself had adopted, and very soon same results were every where witnessed, a dress witnessed that the face of the diocese was completely renewed."

The same Blessed Alan presents to us the testimony of virtuous pastor, the words of the latterer. "I have exercised the office of published preacher for many years; I have preached in all classes of subjects to the best of my ability; I neglected nothing the could instruct, move and convert the souls that were committed to my care; but conscing that I did not accomplish all I used for, that the fruit of my labors did i at all correspond to my expectations, hose to the determination to give up theory studied discourses which I had up that time been in the habit of delivering my people, and, if possible, to sure better by preaching on the Rosary, explaining the prayers that form it and mysteries that are its foundation. MY LITTLE PLAYMATE.

I can see her now in her calico frock,
And her old sun bonnet brown,
With her merry face and her gentle eye,
And her gold hair falling down.
Though 'tis many a year since she used to wait
For me when the school was out,
And I'd hasten to join her at the first bird's gate,
My good little playmate, Sue.

There were other girls in the school, perhaps,
Who were prettier by this day,
But there never was one with merrier ways,
Or one more kind to me.
If my play grew rough I was checked at once,
By a look from her eye of blue,
For she governed me by the law of love,
My sweet little playmate, Sue.

She always stood at the head of the class,
And how hard I used to try
To learn my lesson and get advanced,
In order to stand near by!
And how lonely my task used to seem
When she went by me to her seat,
For more than the teacher's, I told the praise
Of my kind little playmate, Sue.

You ask how it is I recall her so,
And remember her face so well,
After all the years that have come and gone?
But the reason is not hard to tell,
For the little girl that I played with then
Became, when she older grew,
The dear, true wife, who is by my side,
My dear little playmate, Sue.

First Attempt at Economy.

A man being told by his wife that there were several pieces of tin-ware which needed mending, conceived the idea of getting an iron and solder and doing the mending himself. His wife, filled with vague forebodings, perhaps, and that the expense was a little, thought he would hardly pay to do it one's self, to which he responded:

"I'll admit that in this one instance it would not pay, but there is something being in want of repair every little while, and I had the tools here for fixing it, we are saved so much expense right along. It may not be much in the course of a year, but every little helps, and in time the total would amount to a nice little lump. We don't want the Rothschilds carrying off all the money in this country."

He got the iron for 2c. fdl., and 1c. worth of solder, and 6d. worth of resin. He was home with these things, and went into the kitchen, looking so proud and happy, that his wife would have been glad he had got them were it not for an overpowering dread of an impending trouble. He called for the utensils needing repair, and his wife brought out a pan.

"Where's the rest? Bring 'em all out, and let me make one job of 'em while I am about it."

He got them all, and seemed to be disappointed that there were not more of them. He pushed the iron into the fire, got the milk pan inverted on his knee, and with the solder in his hand, waited for the right heat.

"The iron only cost 2c. fdl., and it'll never wear out, and there's enough solder in this piece to do two pounds worth of mending," he explained to his wife.

Pretty soon the iron was at the right heat, he judged. His rubbed resin about the hole which was to be repaired, laid the stick of solder over it, and carefully applied the iron. It was an intensely interesting moment. His wife watched him with for certain interest. He said, speaking laboriously as he applied the iron:

"The only thing I regret about it is that I didn't think of getting this before we—

Then sounded through the ceiling and up into the small sky the awfullest yell that ever came over heard, and the same instant the soldering iron flew over the table, the pan went clattering across the floor, and the bar of solder struck the wall with such force as to smash right through both the plaster and lath; and before her startled gaze danced and capered a most ridiculous imitation of gold and crimson with chalk stripes.

"Got the camphor, why don't you?" He yelled. "Send for a doctor, oh! I'm a dead man," he shouted.

Just then his gaze rested on the soldering iron. In an instant he caught it up and hurled it through the window without the preliminary of drawing the sash. It was cross time before the thoroughly frightened and confused woman learned that none of the molten solder had run through a hole in the pan and on his leg, although she knew from the first that something of an unusual nature had occurred. She didn't send for the doctor; she made and applied the poultice herself—to save a surgeon, she said—

"We don't want the Rothschilds carrying off alpha money in the country, you know."

A Plea for the Little Folks.

Don't expect too much of your children: it has taken you forty years, it may be, to make you what you are with all your lessons of experience, and I will dare say you are a faulty being at best. Above all, don't expect judgment in them or patience under trials. Sympathize in their mistakes and troubles; don't ridicule them. Remember not to measure a child's trials by your standard. "As one whom his mother comforteth," says the inspired writer, and beautifully does he convey to us the deep, faithful love that ought to be found in every woman's heart, the unfailing sympathy with all her children's griefs.

Let the memories of their childhood be as bright as you can make them. Grant them every innocent pleasure in your power. We have often felt our temper rise to see how anxiously their plays were thwarted by older persons, when a little trouble on their part would have given to the young hearts pleasure, the memory of which would last a life time. Lastly don't think a child hopeless because it betrays some bad habits. We have known children that seem to have been born thieves and liars, so early did they display these undesirable traits, yet we have lived to see those same children become noble men and women, and ornaments to society. We must confess they had wise, affectionate parents. And whatever else you may be compelled to deny your child by your circumstances in life, give it what it most values, plenty of love.

Age of Animals.

The average age of sheep is ten years, up to that age they will breed and thrive. There are instances, however, of their living to an advanced age, and isolated cases as long as twenty years. Cows have an average of fifteen years, although, as with sheep and other domestic animals, they often exceed their allotted time. Rings on their horns indicate their age after they arrive at the age of three years. At four years old a ring is formed at the root of the horn, and every succeeding year another is added; thus, by allowing three years and adding the number of rings, it is easy to arrive at the animal's age. Hogs have been known to live for forty years, though their average is much less. The average of the horse is twenty years, but as beasts of burden they seldom attain that age. When kindly treated, however, and well provided for, they will exceed twenty, and instances are on record where they have lived to the age of fifty. The longevity of the elephant is greater than that of any other animal. The average age has never been computed, but many are known to live to a very advanced age. There is a white elephant now living in the Imperial Menagerie in Russia that is said to be over 150 years old.

The Rosary.

The dear prayers of the Rosary,
My children, do you know?
And how the great St. Dominic
Taught them long years ago?

And do you always say these prayers
Devoutly and with love,
Remembering that to those same throats
The angels dwell above?

Are in the Rosary hold:
A meditation and a prayer
Alike for you and old.

Turn ever any with reverent love
These mysteries of joy,
And Mary's lovely loft more a grace
Will come from Mary's

The Faithful Friend.

There is a pretty little Eastern legend about the dog, which I should like to tell you, because, perhaps, it will increase your kindly feeling toward the race. It is as follows:

When Adam was driven out of Paradise, all the animals that abounded had decided to follow him. But as he sped on his lonely journey, he sat down upon a rock and pressed his face with his hands. He, however, he heard a rustling among the bushes, and felt a soft tongue gently trying which he covered his face. He looked up, and met the liquid eyes of a dog brimming over with love and sympathy. The dog came to his side, and Adam was comforted, for he felt that there was at least one creature that loved him not, but protested his company to the last. The dog followed Adam for days, through succeeding ages, the dog has been, and will be, the friend of man.

I cannot think how anybody can ill-treat so faithful and loving a companion. Recently a dog I know was thrown from a train across from all children's nearby. The other day, in passing a rail, I saw a very large dog lying at full length upon the rail. He was a St. Bernard, and a splendid fellow. His mistress was a tiny maiden of five years, who had been sent to the house with a message, and the dog had followed her. "Come, Leo," and the little girl, when she was ready to go. The huge creature rose in an instant, and obeyed, as if he had no will of his own. And yet he could have crushed her with his paw, I might have said he could have eaten her at one mouthful, but he was content to lie by her, because he loved her, and it would it have been for anybody that would have dared to molest her.

Thunder and Lightning.

Now, when children hear so much and about electricity, so used to send telegraphic dispatches, and know that railroad men are anxious to see the day when engines will be run by electricity instead of steam, they may be surprised to learn that the lightning which so often frightens us in the summer time is caused by electricity. There are kinds of electricity, the positive and the negative—much of which is formed by the earth or rubbing against the dry air, and by the turning of the salt water or the sun's heat or by the blowing of the wind.

When a cloud filled with positive electricity comes in contact with another with negative electricity, a sudden flash of light is produced, and we call it lightning. The sound is produced by the air, which is generally upon lightning, and sometimes it takes a ringing to fill up this space makes the sound which we call thunder. The reason why we hear the thunder as soon as we see the flash of lightning is that light travels more than a million times as fast as sound.

If you can count five as slowly as the tick of a clock between the flash and the noise, it is said that you may be sure the cloud is six miles away.

Sometimes the lightning is very curious, sometimes it is straight and sometimes it is a short lightning, and sometimes it takes the form of a ball of fire.

When a thunder cloud is near the earth, the lightning comes straight down to the earth, because there is little air for it to pass through. When the clouds are farther from the earth, the air is the path of the lightning is pushed closer together, and, as lightning passes more quickly through the thin than through the thicker air, the electricity seems to make its way in a zigzag course.

The shape lightning is the shining on distant clouds of flashes of zig-zag lightning, and is caused by slight discharges in the clouds which do not contain electricity enough to send forth a zig-zag display

The Great Secret.

Once on a time there was a king who had a little boy whom he loved very much, and he took a great deal of pains to make him happy.

He gave him beautiful rooms to live in, and pictures and toys, and books without number. He gave him a graceful, gentle pony, that he might ride just when he pleased, and a row boat on a lovely lake, and servants to wait on him wherever he went. He also provided teachers who were to give him the knowledge of things that would make him good and great.

But, for all this, the young prince was unhappy. He wore a frown wherever he went, and was always wishing for something that he did not have.

At last one day, a magician came to the court. He saw the frown on the boy's face, and he said to the king.

"I can make your son happy, and turn his frown into smiles. But you must pay me a great price for telling him the secret."

"All right," said the king, "whatever you ask I will give."

So the year was agreed upon and paid, and then the magician took the boy into a private room. He wrote something with a white substance upon a piece of white paper. Next he gave the boy a candle, and told him to light it and hold it under the paper, and then see what he could read. There he went away.

The boy did as he had been told, and the white letters turned into a beautiful blue. They formed these words

"Do a kindness to some one every day."

The prince made use of the secret, and he became the happiest boy in the realm.

Do It Well.

Whatever you do, do it well. A job slight, because it is apparently unimportant, badly done, is not neglect, at that was demerit into bad workmen.

"There is a good rough job," said a foreman in our hearing, recently, and he meant that it was a piece of work not elegant in itself, but strongly made and well put together.

Training the hand and eye to work well leads individuals to form correct habits in other respects, and a good workman is, in most cases a good citizen. No one need hope to rise above his present situation who suffers small things to pass by unimproved, who neglects, metaphorically speaking, to pick up a cent because it is not a dollar.

None of the wisest law-makers, the best statesmen, and the most gifted artists, the most merciful judges, the most ingenious mechanics rose from the great mass.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND

Armagh.—On Aug. 23, as the passenger train from Clones, arriving at Portadown at 7.20 P. M., was coming up to the platform a porter named Maunsey Bingham was advancing to meet it when he missed his footing and fell between the platform and carriage, the train came over him. It was at once stopped, and Bingham was found to be quite dead.

A proclamation has been issued offering a reward of £500 for information which will lead to the conviction of the murderers of Mr. Mahon, of Kilverghe, county Clare, who was shot on the 19th August. A further reward of £200 for private information is also offered.

Cork.—Lady Mary Scott, daughter of the late Duke of Buccleuch, and Sir Sutherland Scott, the wife of Arthur Hugh Smith-Barry, Esq., J. P., and daughter of the late Earl of Dunraven.

It is understood that the National League intends to contest Cork City at the next election.

Donegal.—In Derrycrine, his cordial thanks for his services, extends the Greenore Relief Fund. Father McFadden says: "All the wicked people are now in Derry, and I hope, God willing, every man, woman and child will shoot them out on her friends for shelter." Referring to the action of the agent in her case, the Rev. gentleman says: "I have never met an agent deceitfully or perverse do so, but I always found him a gentleman to do good. The same alone of the eviction proceedings he always acted with 1880, and the gross amount of rent sought to be recovered was £1,000. Those are startling figures.

Dublin.—So far, the popular party in Dublin county, is winning in the revision courts. Mr. Jos. Trant Dillon is not pressed thereat, judging from a speech he delivered in the Lord-Lieutenant's Dublin street, Dublin, on Sept. 4. Mr. Dillon, in the course of his speech, said: Lieutenant Hall, which will be

FROM THE WRITINGS OF
THE SWITZERS TO HIS NATIVE LAND.
BY A. HOLDE.

Oh! Farewell forever my native mountains,
A loving heart pants out its last fond good bye,
Farewell to thy valleys, thy clear flowing fountains,
Which often in childhood delighted my eye.
Farewell! to the shrines whence my youthful devotions,
Was strengthened by Freedom's Celestial soul-stirring fire.
Farewell! to the shrine where my youthful devotions,
Was strengthened by Freedom's Celestial soul-stirring fire.
For my bark will soon lose sight of land
Away from thy charms—my soul sighs and pants
How often in childhood I rambled with pleasure
Thy wilds, thy rocks, thy valleys and mountains
While my heart gaily danced on fancies wild
How oft have I watched the wild chamois swift bounding,
From mountain to mountain in rapturous glee;
And heard the lone flute of the hunter's horn sounding,
As it echoed in hot hasts by Lugano's calm sea.
The rugged sublime of each crag and each wildwood,
Each swift-tackling avalanche and mountain debris;
Were sepulchres of comfort to my pleasant childhood,
They frowned upon stranger—to me did but smile.
The deep, rolling thunder that frightened the stranger,
Was music that lulled me to blissful repose;
The Dolphin's fierce flashes, such dread transmuting danger,
Awaked in my soul every balm mortal knows.
And shall I, who have loved these charms enthusiastically
The bright links that bind me to peace and to glory
Shall I leave them, dear Switzerland—leave thee for ever?
There lavished most on thee while heaven sends! No! I will. God forbid! let me have the will thy
Let me on my cheek the rude storm winds and heavy
Dear Switzerland! nothing shall rend us asunder,
For I love ye in life, and I love ye in death!

Literary Miscellany.

After Sorrow, Joy.

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY IN SIX CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER IV.

The next day on his return from drive news Mr. Martin placed in the hands of Esther a letter which on being opened proved to be a reply. It read as follows.

"Dear Miss Esther—Your letter of last evening is before me. I thank you for your prompt reply; and I assure you I have given me very great happiness. I hope to be in—next Wednesday, and will call at 8 o'clock P. M. then, believe me.

Truly and unchanged,
Yours, A.—"

After reading the letter, Esther handed it to her father, who also read it, and remarked: "He writes like a business father; and so, Esther, you think you love this young man well enough to change Martin to Maxwell?"

"Yes, father."

"Well, he is to be with us, I judge from his letter, next Wednesday, and before he leaves I desire to see the young gentleman in my private office."

From the date of this interview with her father, which, I forgot to mention, Esther was entirely changed. Every moment, every word, every thought, seemed to be filled with the question of the old mansion. The grand parlors, the far-off sleeping rooms, the dreary dining room, the dreaded thought was how to speak to you as I have this evening; she was happy, happy in your kindness, made so easy, and I am as your mercy—and she, whose hand I seek, is my counsel, and whose prayers are ascending for both you and myself."

"I am fully cognizant of the facts," replied Mr. Martin, "and have neither the wish nor the disposition to oppose any obstacle. Of course you and Esther have thoroughly considered the importance of the step—if you have not—"

"Not, interrupted Albert, "the graven consideration has been exercised by both Esther and myself, and for weeks we have with your consent—"

"That is quite sufficient, young man," was the hearty reply. Albert, then, taking him by the hand to bid him adieu, remarked: "Mr. Martin, your action in this all important matter this evening compels me to grasp your hand as my benefactor; for by your consent, you have bestowed a blessing worth more than can be estimated. Now bid you adieu until November, when I shall return to receive the hand of your daughter."

The following morning Esther failed to appear so early as she did the previous day however, as she quietly stole into the reading parlors, she was somewhat confused to find her younger sister alone there. She took a chair, and seated herself near her, and as guessed she knew something.

The disposition of Esther not to notice the remark, provoked other hints, which, coming from a young lady, naturally she was appealed to, and thereafter she was let alone, but quietly, yet, with a meaning smile as accompaniment.

What a Rai Can Do.

The telegraph wires in London are full at about 9 o'clock, at the case here, not usually belong to the underground system. The main wires are laid through the tunnels, in which are the gas and sewer pipes. These tunnels are big enough for a man to walk through easily. The branch pipes, containing the side wires, running off from the main line for several miles, are much smaller, and dig workmen must be called out to lose the connection between the larger and the smaller wires. Not long ago, however, were men, who were repairing one of these lateral wires, failed to attach it at a leading line, by which the wire could be drawn back into its place. The blunder seemed to involve great loss, for it looked as if the whole side pipe would have to be dug up to replace the wire. In this dilemma a remarkable step was taken. A rat was caught, and around him was tied one end of a very fine wire. He was placed in the pipe; but after running a few yards he stopped. Then came another step. A ferret was put in after the rat. As soon as the rat heard the ferret coming behind it, the fine wire begin to pay out. It was feared that the rat would show fight, but it did not and the complete connection was made by both rat and ferret. When the rat came out at the other end of the pipe, was caught and by means of the line wire the telegraph wire was drawn through. So the lateral was saved the telegraph company thousands of dollars.

GOOD-BYE.

The Depth and World of Meaning Contained in the Parting Words, "Good-Bye."

Farewell, farewell, is a lonely word,
And when we bring a sigh
But give to me that gentle word
That comes from the heart—good-bye.

There is a hearty shake of the hand, a tremor of feeling in the friendly tones, but no hint of parting. They are two friends standing on the deck of a ship that is outward bound. Both are on a journey, a voyage to unknown seas—the one who goes and the one who stays. Full of life, of hope for the future, there is no hint of sadness in the singing good-bye that seems the announcement of a bond of union rather than separation, the assurance that come weal or woe with them all will be well. It is the good-bye of victory rather than of defeat, of success rather than of failure.

The words say plainly to three lovers: "In life, remember me until we meet again." They are the salute made by enemies as strangers first parting. They must be oblivious to the ceremonies of even ordinary friendship. Their love is too new and sacred a thing to be brought out to the public gaze. They can only clasp each other's hands and look into each other's eyes and stammer one passionate, regretful, lingering good-bye.

But the heart feels most when the lips are cold. And the eyes speak the gentle good-bye.

IT IS A VERSE—THO.

An aged couple are parting now. "Oh, when to meet again? They do not know that their other eyes are upon them. They are alone with each and God. There is a solemn, tear-whose good-bye. They have no word to say. Each knows what is in the heart of the other; distance cannot separate these two.

The hearts true answered in tone and in time,
Each to others and rhyme unchanging,
IT IS A VERSE—THO.

Two young people are parting. "Oh, when to meet again? They do not know that their other eyes are upon them. They are alone with each and God. There is a solemn, tear-whose good-bye. They have no word to say. Each knows what is in the heart of the other; distance cannot separate these two.

The hearts true answered in tone and in time,

IT IS A VERSE—THO.

God be with thee. The words are have no other meaning from those whom death parts. They all have need of this prayer who are going into that limbless land from where farewells and good-byes are sounds unknown. Add the pale hands, the the sealed lips and the marble brow. It is but one who cries out in passionate, pleading agony: "God-bye." The voice of the other is mute. Dear traveler to the far-off country, God be with you!

Wonderful Feats of Indian Jugglers.

Between the European and the Indian Juggler there is one great and important difference. The following has all the usual and elaborate paraphernalia of these magical entertainments—a prepared stage, back curtains, tables, chairs, boxes, etc.; the latter has nothing of the sort, all his paraphernalia are contained in a cotton bag which he carries about with him. He is nearly naked, and his stage is the ground or the stone floor of a veranda. Very close two or three jugglers combine and pay visits to the bungalows, thus giving variety to the performance—for each juggler has his own tricks. Recently I had a visit from an amalgamated troupe consisting of seven members—five men, one woman and a boy. Probably the seven had composed their entertainments for that particular day only, and next day they might be performing separately again. If I give you a description of what this party of seven did, you will have a fair idea of a juggling entertainment in India. Two of the seven—one man and the woman—performed a sort of duet, which appeared the most difficult trick, viz tossing balls. The woman was dressed some four or five years, and had on a bodice made of rope, which was securely tied, so that she was practically in a sack of rope. She was lifted and placed in the basket on her shoulders. But a two year old child would have lifted the basket, and the result was that the whole of the rope in person, from the loins upward, was above the basket. The woman bent her head, the juggler placed the lid of the basket on her shoulders, and then there was a shower of balls, which the woman and juggler caught and where, folding it up in his hands, and behold! the lid was in its proper place and the woman was gone! The juggler then took a sword about five feet long, and with it he pierced the basket through and through in all directions—horizontally, vertically, upward and downward, but there was no sign of sudden insult. The woman emerged from the lid and jumped out the basket with his feet and danced in it, until she came to the conclusion that wherever the woman had gone she was not inside. The juggler again took the sheet, and after he had examined it he spread it over the basket, holding it tent shaped, the sure where he had was being about three feet from the ground. In a minute he withdrew the sheet—the woman, and behold! the woman was back in her old position on her knees in the basket; but the ropes and not the sheet, and she was now unbound. This trick has a few variations, one of which is that after the woman disappeared the basket is handed around to show its emptiness, and some observers is satisfied; in the middle of which the female performer reappears before the audience in a state of Congeniality. Finally, Nilna Saldan, and a dwarf, formed Macbeth, who was one of his sweet counsellors, the Lady Macbeth Middle Ages used to play at dolls with the dwarf, and he used to kiss her and carried the manner for dwarfs to excess. In the Middle Ages the Romanies had been used as Thieves-in-ordinary to all nations, bamboozled, and tricked out with paint and artificial colours, was bought as one would buy a rare object of art. Dwarfs, in fact, as the dogs of Europe, they were the favorites of the patrician dames of Venice. In the "Inventa" of Paul Veronese there is a full value for the dwarf, and gallop in the backs of the crippled dwarfs, and the Romanies, the lowlies of the Renaissance loved to lead a crooked-legged dwarf by a strong to set off their own graceful and beauty, and they were furious serving by monkeys. At the dinner given by Sir Science of Bavaria, a dwarf was served up in a pastry, from which he came armed from head to foot, drew his rapier, cut off the head of a pheasant, and placed the trophy to the Electress. In the seventeenth century the Court of Russia kind one of Peter the Great, Princess Tarakanova, sister of Peter, and generally married her dwarf with a dwarfess. At the marriage of the Empress Anne, attended to the wedding, dressed up in gala clothes, and placed four by four in fifteen miniature coaches. The cortège then defiled through the Russian Court, the dwarfs gesticulating in the Russian array. At night there was a grand dwarfs dance and ball at the Kremlin. There have been dwarfs who were heroes. Tom Thumb, Bollmann, the Indian and Charles the Fifth dwarf, literally in his master's arms. A midget, Joel, too, was the hero of the Philistines, Jaffery Hudson, the dwarf of Queen Henrietta Maria, of England. Lord Montrose as he was called, and his German colleague, Ord. The dwarf killed the giant, as Joel of old killed Goliath. The last rival dwarf was the baby of King Stanislaus of Poland, who managed to slip out in his retreat at Nancy. The king wept when his dwarf died. Like Joel, he said: "Poor dwarf, knave, I have one part in my heart that is every pit for thee."

Sweet Hope For the Souls of the Faithful.

We translate the following from the Paris Univers of September 12th:

For several centuries the private of the kingdom of Aragon enjoyed the privilege of saying on all holy days the Mass, if they were regulars. At the request of the Kings Ferdinand and Isabella, Benedict XIV, in his constitution Quod Divina Sapientia 20, 1748, extended indefinitely the privilege of the Aragonese. The Pope said the kingdom and their dependencies. This favor of the Pontiff was the subject of a most solemn monument of liberal science, profundity, and eloquence. The Aragonese the privilege has existed the holy every of the Pontiff. The petitions addressed to the Holy See for the extension of the Universal Church of this immense favor have been of great importance. Since 1853, the Archbishop of Tolosa presented to Pius IX. of eternal and glorious memory, a supplication, which was signed by ten years but nothing other prayer.

Everything is immense of Catholic piety, says the Prelate, "some have been lost, no longer offer for the souls of the faithful departed, the sacrifice of the Mass, have been usurped in the name of the Pope, a very rare and sublime favor. Besides, the number of priestes administering the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass in the world is Purgatory so far by year and day, and they will be years still more rare, while the rich—has not, its former strength and vigor.

In answer to this petition, Pius IX. renewed the privilege of Benedict XIV. on the 5th of December, 1853, that the Sacred Congregation of Rites, and we wish with jealous care that all another demands of the venerable brothers the Bishops may be obtained, by an extension of the Pontiff's indulgent examination.

"In giving to your holy thought the praises it deserves. We wish, venerable brothers, to express our joy at the fervent and sublime sentiments which you have expressed."

Since the concluding response, the hour of probable has considerably augmented so—also said, in Italy, thanks to the munificence of Bishop Gaetano de Mino. The zealous secretary, which, the Christian Pastoralis has distributed in profusion copies of the petition of the Archbishop of Tolosa.

It is hoped that the grace obtained will be extended to Spain, to Canada, and to Missions, the Bishops of which, in a great majority, have asked for the favor. Mgr. Hu Holmes, Isle XIII., has declared that he will accept it only to the whole Church at the same time. Thus, in several of the Bishops have asked for the extension of his agency, who could after mainly world. The world has spoken to a thing, which will raise them to a very state the Pontiff, and the Pope, the Mother of Jesus, during His three hours agony.

Mother's Vacant Chair.

I go a little farther on in your life and tell the sadness when I speak of the vacant chair in a rocking chair. She had a young child and died in the prime of most loved friends. I remember it well. It was an old house, and the curtains were almost worn out for I was the youngest, and the child had worked the whole family. It made a rocking chair and I remember that was gone in the house. It was just high enough for a little child to slide down into her lap. That was the joke where we used to tease her. I can hear warning, "Look out, Mary, you will be in your mother's lap." It was the little delightful place in the family circle, but as a child I was a naughty child. Perhaps I was the cause of some of the sadness that come among us. When we were young and rather spoiled, but neither cried. It was a very exalted chair. In the wide day of childhood, other chairs could not be duly seated. They always kept a place for that chair. That was the place where I was taught to read, and all those wondrous songs which mothers sing to their young children, songs in which all pity and compassion and sympathy are poured out upon the little one. Those songs are the most beautiful in the world. Mother's lap is a place of comfort, and the little one, when it is sick, or sorrowful, or in any way disturbed, is put there to be quieted and comforted. Perhaps there was a little sister who had been taken from our home, and we used to see the little form of our mother's sister, or cast one lingering look behind. He is real, his courage, his fidelity to his country, his willingness to face danger, his fortitude under hunger, thirst, and fatigue, his magnanimity and generosity and his prodigious fortitude in enduring cruelties of Indian torture preach an eloquent sermon, and it is meet that we pay that seek the kingdom of God, behind the paths that lead to it.

FATHER LAVERNIA.

was tortured with atrocious cruelty. He was stripped naked, and his flesh was torn with pitch. In this state he was led out to the place of torture, and tied to a stake, and when it had been fired, behold! the flesh was burned and when he beheld the unutterable horrors of the torture, great, whose he had to establish regulations for his Indians, fainted. Some of the Indians, who had fainted their masters on exposure, and fainted at the sight of the torture, shouted aloud. When the "Captain" was tied to the stake, which treats him brought he called upon God, and when he brought he called upon God, and when he brought he called upon God, and when he

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

May God bless and direct through the intercession of St. Francis de Sales, patron of Catholic journalists, the pious, the writers of Catholic journals who defend the Church against the calumnies of the day, and spread the holy doctrine in the purestness and principle with devotion and fidelity.—Pius IX.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the chief agent in promulgating ideas, and propagating those sentiments, opinions, and opinions present the world. In our time, religious journalism is perhaps the most powerful instrument of good, and it is, perhaps, probable to the number of subjects, for a work of mission. Hence, it is what ought to be, the support of Catholic journalism, but to conclude and defend the Church, because it may be—alas! it is, the Divine Institution."—Cardinal Wiseman, 1840 (Rome).

First and Second Plenary Councils of Baltimore.

It is now nearly a third of a century since the Catholic Hierarchy of America first met in Plenary Council in the Primatial See of Baltimore, and inasmuch as there is no subject more pleasing, useful or interesting to Catholic readers than to reflect upon the progress which the Church is making in this "land of the free and home of the brave," we lay before our readers this week—as a preface to the proceedings of the forthcoming Third Plenary Council—a brief summary of the state of the Church at the last Plenary Council, when Plenary Councils were convened.

For the first time in the history of the Catholic Church in America, the Hierarchy met in Plenary Council at Baltimore, on May 9th 1852, under the call of the Apostolic Delegate, Most Rev. Francis Patrick Kenrick, Archbishop of Baltimore, around whom were grouped six Archbishops and twenty-four Suffragan and Titular Bishops acting as Administrators of Vicars Apostolic. The names of these "teachers in Israel" are treasured in the hearts of the faithful, and in justice to their revered memory we enumerate them in the order in which they appear in the official record before us:

* Deceased. † Retired guest.

The Abbot of La Trappe, Superior of the Augustinians, Dominicans, Benedictines, Franciscans, Jesuits, Redemptorists, Lazarists and Sulpitians were present in order to bear witness to the expansion of Religious Orders and the work their members were accomplishing.

After this Council the Propaganda obtained the creation of the Metropolitan See of San Francisco, and of the Episcopal Sees of Portland, Burlington, Brooklyn, Newark, Erie, Covington, Quincy, Santa Fé and Natchez, and of a Vicariate Apostolic, embracing the upper peninsula of Michigan.

Of the thirty Prelates that attended the First Plenary Council, but five remain to eclipse the assembling of the forthcoming Council. These are Cardinal McCloskey, Archbishop Alemany, O. P., Archbishop Kenrick of St. Louis, Bishop A. Hinsdale, recently retired from the See of Newark, and Bishop Lamy of New Mexico. And of those few it is possible that four of the Prelates living will not attend the coming Council, so that the presence of six new beloved Archbishops of California may be the only connecting link in the history of the Plenary Councils of the Church thus far held in America.

The Second Plenary Council assembled in Baltimore on the first Sunday in October, 1866. The Council was—to use the language of Archbishop Spalding—"the largest ever held in Christendom since the Council of Trent, with the exception of those Ecumenical Councils held in Rome under the Sovereign Pontiff himself." It comprised seven Archbishops, thirty-eight Bishops, three mitered Abbots, forty-nine mitred Prelates, and upwards of one hundred and twenty of the most learned members of the priesthood. Sixteen of the Prelates were born in the United States; nine were natives of Ireland; twelve were born in France; three were natives of Spain; Germany was the birth-place of two; two others were born in Belgium; Austria and Switzerland being represented by one each. The session lasted two weeks, closing its labors on Sunday the 21st of October, 1866, in a scene of gorgeous magnificence such as the grand Cathedral of Baltimore had never before exhibited. The sight must indeed have been imposing when at the conclusion of the ceremonies incident to the solemn Mass, Most Rev. Archbishop Purcell (as senior member by consecration, of the Hierarchy) advanced to the throne of the Apostolic Delegate and delivered the closing address, in the course of which he said:

"The Church of the United States is on her all—you are around you this noon—Collegians, Theologians, Clergy, worthy of comparison with those of any other age or clime. May your life and health be long preserved; may your hands be lifted up like those of Moses on the mountain, in favor of the people who, under your auspices, fight the good fight of faith and right conscience, and be called, among us, the white Church, on the Chief Mediatrix of this Great Republic, and on all Departments of the Government; and when, at last, the Prince of Pastors will appear to call you to your great reward, may you receive from His hands the never fading crown of glory."

After a very touching reply from Archbishop Spalding, the chanting of the Ambrosian Hymn and the signing of the Decrees, the Papal Benediction was bestowed upon all present, and, for the second time in the history of America, the Catholic Hierarchy had closed its labors with that unity of faith, that authority of apostolicity, and that spirit of ecclesiastical power which proclaims the true Church of God on earth.

On the second Sunday in November—the appropriate festival of the Patronage of the Blessed Virgin Mary—the Third Plenary Council will meet in Baltimore, but alas! many of the Apostolic Band of Bishops will be missed from the scene of their former labors. But their places will not be vacant, their flock will be promoted by their successors, who will carry on the vital mission of the Church militant, aided by the prayers of those saintly Prelates who have gone to their well-earned reward in the Church triumphant! That Church, which—as the historian Macaulay says—"was preserved unscathed when the Saxon had set foot on Britain, before the Frank had passed the Rhine, when Grecian eloquence still flourished in Athens, when idols were still worshipped in Mecca," still lives in this New World, and she is "no fossil." Her virtues, temperate and consecrated priestly and priesthood bear the stamp of that sanctity which Almighty God has reserved solely for those who serve in His sanctuary—the holy of holies. Their voice is heard by ten million faithful Catholics in the sole spirit that a dutiful child listens to the counsels and admonitions of a pious and a prudent parent.

Everywhere throughout this land of freedom Catholic faith is flourishing to a degree bordering on the miraculous. New churches, additional schools, shelters for the sick and enfeebled sacramental aids to the unless orphan and the sinful Magdalen—are being multiplied in every corner of this veritable land of the Cross—a land that will yet be known as the garden spot of Faith in the world-wide fold of Christ.

As the Apostolic Prelate looks over the august body by whom he will be surrounded on the assembling of the next Council, his heart may justly feel a holy pride to be called upon to preside over such an assemblage comprising thirteen Archbishops, sixty-two Bishops, six mitred Abbots, the Superiors of numerous Religious Orders, and a small army of theologians, secretaries and ecclesiastical functionaries which will form one of the largest gatherings of the ecclesiastics of the Catholic Church ever assembled in any single country in the world.

May God guide the Prelates in their coming deliberations. May His grace, which has given manifold increase and miraculous prosperity to the Church in America, so penetrate the hearts of His delegates that their work may redound to the propagation of that God-given faith of which man's salvation can alone be secured.

Every Catholic should pray in a special manner for the blessing of God to rest upon the labors of our venerable Prelates, and, above all, that Holy One who has been placed by a great Pontiff under her patronage and protection may become on earth—like unto the Queen of Heaven herself—the purest of Creatures in the Church, the most perfect among Christian nations, and the glory of God everlasting.

As many important questions concerning the application of the disciplinary laws of the Church in this country have arisen since the Second Plenary Council adjourned, the deliberations of the forthcoming Council will be of longer duration than on previous occasions. It is intended to hold public sessions on each Sunday and Thursday until the close of the Council, which is set for November 20th—the first Sunday in Advent.

We have and that many honored names will be missed from the roll of Prelates who attended the last Council, and as many readers of the MONITOR may be interested in praying for the deceased Prelates, we append a list of

* Father Lamoreux, of Victoria, V. J., will represent the Bishop of Rome in the forthcoming Council at Baltimore. Father Lamoreux will accompany Bishop Junger to Rome on his return, and during the 25th anniversary of the good Bishop's consecration, his Clergy decided that an address should be presented to him by the Bishop.

THOUGHTS ON THE ROSARY.

BY DESIGN, DEVOTION, CONSOLATION AND INSTRUCTION.

FIRST ARTICLE.

St. Dominic on witnessing the frightful ravages effected by the Albigeoisian heresy on religion and morals, notwithstanding the many noble efforts that had been made by prelates, ecclesiastics and by himself (amongst others) for its extinction, felt that extraordinary help was necessary in order to crush out of existence that detestable product of hell. Many were the tears that he shed, most fervently did he pray to the Blessed Mother, most earnestly and unceasingly did he offer himself as a victim of expiation in order that the Lord in His mercy might put an end to so many evils and restore peace to the Church. He mortified himself not only by fasts and abstinence, but also subjected his innocent body to the most unmerciful treatment. But it was to Mary especially, the Mother of Divine Mercy, that he had recourse with the greatest confidence and the most earnest supplication, as to her to whose mediation are reserved the most signal graces, and against whom heresy has vomited the most horrible blasphemies. The glorious Mother of God heard most benignly her beloved servant Dominic, not only to the extent that he had supplicated her, but even far beyond what he had looked for from her unbounded generosity of heart, for, surrounded with great light, she appeared to him, and with sweet-as ineffable she thus addressed him: "He of good cheer, Dominic, thou knowest well that the salvation of mankind has cost my Son. Certainly He does not intend that the work of redemption shall be brought to nought. Here comes thy than and great confidence, for the fruits of thy labors will be abundant. The remedy for so many evils will be found in the meditation on the mysteries of the life, passion, death and glory of my only Son, joined to the recitation of the Angelic Salutation, through which was announced the great work of the Redemption."

After having informed him of the devotion of the Rosary, and after having pointed out to him the manner of reciting it, she continued with great tenderness to say to him: "Such is the Rosary which thou art to preach to the people, and which thou shalt proclaim to them as a direction most dear to my Son and to me, and as the most powerful means to annihilate heresies, remove vice, propagate virtue, implore the divine mercy and to obtain my protection. It is my wish that not only thou thyself announce my Rosary, but also that thy Order shall forever continue to proclaim this manner of praying the faithful shall obtain through this devotion innumerable blessings, and shall find over ready to assist them in all their wants such is the precious legacy that I leave thee and thy children." (Manual, Oct. Rosaries, Fr. Lamy, prima Nonpel. Ord. Quinel, Exercices de piété, 1. October.) We can well understand how much the holy Patriarch must have rejoiced at receiving such a gift from Mother of God, for besides being a proof and pledge of her marked predilection for himself and the Order that he established, they gave him an assurance that the Albigeoisian heresy would be uprooted, the morals would be reformed, and that the Church would be saved.

The Saint, filled with confidence in the Most Holy Mother of God, set to work with his brethren to announce to the people the favorite devotion of the Queen of Heaven. Whilst he and his brethren were most zealously engaged in preaching and in propagating the Rosary, they practised it themselves with the greatest fervor. We are informed by reliable authority that St. Dominic recited the entire Rosary as many as eight times in the day (Alcoque de orto et progressu Psalterii), and that his Religious said it at least once every day, and that they regarded that day as lost to them in which they could not recite the full Rosary.

In order that they might be able to say the Rosary any moment, that they might profess openly special devotion to the glorious Mother of the Saviour, and that they might continually and definitely protest against the blasphemies vomited out by heresy against their dearly loved Mother, the Saint and his sons constantly carried on their girdles their Beads, and they were on that account called the Brothers of the Blessed Mary (Acta S. P. Dom. March 17). The results which this sublime devotion produced amongst the people were incalculable and limitless, as might be expected both from the promises made by the August Queen of Heaven to Dominic, and from his own saintly and zealous life. History proclaims him the Hammer and Vanquisher of heretics; Pope Paul V. conferred upon him the glorious title of "the right arm of the Church—Bonifacius dexterum Ecclesiæ," and Pope Alexander IV. declared him the "Defender of the Faith—Propugnator fidei." (Apost. Const. and post. Concept. 1707, page 325). Verily, St. Dominic was on earth a perfect image of the Son of God, as the Eternal Father revealed to St. Catherine of Sienna. (See her Life by Blessed Raymond, Chap. IV.).

Christians having their souls illumined and their hearts warmed under the guidance of such a Saint, by the recitation and meditation of the Rosary, detested the impious doctrine of the heretics, renounced their own dissenters, and became inflamed with devotion in the service of God, so that the followers of heresy were compelled either to return to the bosom of the Church or to retire confounded and humiliated. The result was that Christian piety everywhere flourished in all classes of society. The Rosary then was at the same time the order of death to error, and the odor of life to the Church. (L. Cornelii, 2. 70). In a very short time the excellence of this admirable devotion was everywhere recognized, says Cruisot: "More than one hundred thousand converted heretics and a prodigious number of sinners dragged out of the state of their abominations by the Rosary, clearly demonstrated what this devotion can do with God for man. It was as a monument to the destruction of heresy; the most glorious devotion of the Rosary that the Church of Jesus Christ in gratitude to His immaculate Mother introduced into her Office the celebrated antiphon, which is believed to be the production of Sophronius, Bishop of Jerusalem. "Gaude, Maria, Virgo, cunctas hæreses sola interemisti in universo mundo." (Rejoice, O Virgin Mary, for thou alone hast destroyed all heresies in the whole world."

Interesting Interview with a Japanese Missionary.

Recently we had the pleasure of meeting Pere Xavier Mugabure, a native of Southern France, who has been missionary in Japan for ten years, and from whom we learned many interesting facts concerning the propagation of Catholic faith on that land consecrated to God by the labors of Francis Xavier. Father Mugabure was en route for the Atlantic States to join Bishop Jouset, who is collecting for the impoverished mission in all the dioceses in America.

Japan, or as it is known in the native language, "the sunrise kingdom," constitutes a group of islands forming an empire. It is about twice as large as Ohio, 270 from Kamtchatka, and 500 miles from the State. The population is various estimated at from thirty-six to forty millions, and the natives of both sexes exhibit much higher intelligence of intellegence than that commonly attributed to Asiatic races. The prominent characteristics of the Japanese character is a lively and volatile disposition akin to the French people, they are quick of apprehension, heroic during fresh, adventurous, liberal and hospitable. They have a peculiar freedom of thought and are not at all consistent soldiers and sailors, many of their officers, tactitians and nautical instructors are French, German, and American. Professor Mason, of Boston, who spent several years in the practice of his profession in Japan, reports the Japanese as possessing musical genius to a far greater degree than the Americans. The court orchestra, to which he gave instruction, was composed of sixteen organs, thirty-six flutes, eigh, hautboys, fire harps and the usual adjuncts of minor instruments, and the performers were capable of rendering any of the higher classical compositions.

In all branches of education, even in the obstruse sciences, the Japanese learn rapidly and are always eager to acquire the most recent discoveries in science as well as to acquire the highest branches of European knowledge. Education almost universal, the poorest among them being taught to read and write, the women being educated with the same care as the men.

In point of probity of character the Japanese seem to be an exceptional people, strangers ran St. Francis Xavier been the time, the fact that in virtue and probity they surpassed all the nations he had met, and the sentiment is fully as true now as then. All who have subsequently written on Japan bear this people.

Father Mugabure, the successor of Francis Xavier, is a native of the Indies. Three of the most powerful princes of the Japanese nobles, the primes of Bungo Arima and Omura were among the converts. In 1562 the Christians in Japan became numerous enough to send an embassy to Rome with letters and presents to the Pope, in order to secure the vicar of Christ that they were true children of the Apostolic fold.

All went well with the cause of Christianity in Japan until near the close of the sixteenth century, when their creed and pride of the Portuguese merchants—who then controlled the commerce of the country—brought disgrace and disaster on the Christian name. This persecution set in, the nature Christians were consecrated with blood, regardless of age or sex, twenty-three priests having been put to death in a single day in the city of Nagasaki. Persecution continued to rage at intervals during half a century, yet a by a special providence of God this faith implanted in the hearts of the Japanese by St. Francis Xavier was never completely exterminated. This fact is established by many authors, even among non-Catholic writers, who fully agree with C. Pauthier, Hodgson, for many years British Consul at Tokio, who says in his volume entitled A Residence in Japan.

"I have reason to believe, that in the island of Yezo, there are more than ninety thousand persons who have secretly, for half a century, maintained and preserved not only the tenets, but also many of their Christian ancestors, who are consequently about 800 pentier thousands. The Japanese are a religious people, and if allowed by the government religion, and were it in asserting that from one to eight in Japan to the other the Roman Catholic religion would be received with delight, and accepted with enasmity."

It is among such a people that the missionaries of the Catholic Church are still laboring and drawing them slowly but surely into the net of Peter. In the southern portion of Japan at least 25,000 converts have been added to the Church within the memory of man. In the northern portion of the country the missions are of more recent date, hence Father Mugabure's intimate was placed at from eight to ten thousand native converts.

The work of the Church is greatly retarded for want of money to equip missionaries, to pay travelling expenses, circulate tracts, translate, build and maintain schools, and to undertake the many other works necessary for the propagation of the Faith in a pagan land. The missionaries are allowed the very meagre sum of twelve dollars a month for their support, clothing, charity, and travelling expenses, so they are overwhelmed in every way. Yet, notwithstanding all these drawbacks, the propagation of the Faith has been wonderful. In Tokio, the Capital of Japan, there are finishing a large Cathedral designed and built in 1879 by Bishop Osouf; here also there are two large Seminaries, one of which is attended every day and attended by many Japanese converts with great regularity. In Asaksa there are about a thousand practical, persuasive and fervent Japanese converts whose moral lives are most consoling to the missionaries. Father Mugabure, as an illustration of the fervor manifested by these neophytes, mentioned the case of a Japanese lady, 51 years old, who receives Holy Communion twice every week, and who of her own volition has established a society to pray for the souls in purgatory.

The missionaries in Japan all belong to the Congregation of the Missions of Paris, and their labors are in the proportion of the Faith are increasing. Besides the Fathers having charge of the different churches in the larger cities and towns, eight or nine missaries are constantly peripatetic throughout the country, visiting stations, preaching at new places, giving catechetical instructions, and thus building up the Church of Christ. All the missionaries speak the Japanese tongue, which is difficult to learn, and have thrown into contact with the natives, the Fathers seem acquire it and constant use soon make it a perfect. About twelve hundred natives receive Christian baptism in the northern portion of Japan every year.

There are two female Religious Orders performing works of mercy and charity in Japan in connection with the Church. These are the Sisters of the Infant Jesus and the Sisters of St. Paul de Chartres. The former Order has two institutions in which they teach nearly seven hundred Japanese girls all the branches of education usually given in female academic schools. The Sisters of St. Paul with Japan about three years ago; they have two training schools for girls and a hospital. They instruct about two hundred children, and attend to the sick. This Order has received nearly a hundred Japanese young ladies who have manifested a vocation for the religious life, and thus the foundation is laid for the future supply of Sisters for the Mission in the Sunrise Kingdom.

Father Mugabure informed us that the Church was tolerated with great liberality by the Government of Japan, and that the missionaries everywhere they went with great cordiality. Having no dogmatic creed to build they are not brought into conflict with the necessity for such a factor in Christianity. Hence they are free to be converted until they possess sufficient insight into the doctrines of divine faith so that their intelligence is enlightened and convicted takes possession of their minds. Then they become Catholics, and no amount of sophistry, bribery, or persecution ever could cause them to apostatize.

All the prominent Protestant sects are largely represented in Japan, but their labors in many instances are principally confined to nursing their babies and drawing their salaries. The natives are attracted to their preaching by the novelty of the performance, but—as many other heathens—they are so called "converts" in name only, and they are known as "rice Christians" or persons who "take their pottage" for attending Protestant worship. The wives of the preachers are another source of attraction to the natives, and the average Japanese Protestant will go to Church on Sunday in order to feast his eyes on fashionably dressed ladies. The Catholics of Japan like to satisfy their curiosity by casting at the ladies from the land of the setting sun.

English Justice to Ireland.

A specimen of the methods by which the English government dishes out justice to Ireland, has recently come to light by the premature publication in the London Statesman of the proposed re-distribution of Members of Parliament throughout that great Britain. It was assumed that such a measure would give Ireland a large increase representation in Parliament, but it seems that England is determined to diminish that representation rather than to increase it, and for this purpose the British officials have decided to disfranchise sixteen cities in the Sister Isle. The metropolitan where the proposed cut is to be made are Belfast, Cork, Dublin, Dundalk, Dungarvan, Galway, Athlone, Dublin, Kilkenny, New Ross, Kinsale, Kinsale, Bandon, Drogheda, Downpatrick, Dungannon, Downpatrick and Portarlington.

The design of England in thus infringing the rights of these cities is purely for the purpose of admonishing Ireland's voice in the British Parliament and shorts outside the Parliamentary Irish party by means of an increased representation in England of a hundred and ten members, and a gain of ten members in Scotland.

As an excuse for this defranchising scheme, the British representatives of England have recently come to edit four members of the representation of Cork, two each in that of Mayo, Dublin, Galway and Antrim, one each to Donegal, Kerry, Tyrone and Tipperary, and two to that of the city of Dublin. But this excuse is a mere subterfuge concocted in order to stifle public opinion for the present, so that England can enrich the Irish members with the proposed law, for the purpose of making it even more stringent and unjust hereafter.

We are glad to see that this iniquitious scheme has caused a tremendous sensation throughout all sections of Ireland, and it is very likely to exercise great influence in the forthcoming elections, for it is amazing the whole people against English injustice as to return a phalanx of Parnellites to Parliament whose voice will din into the ears of the English members the wrongs of Ireland until they finally accede to the long-offered prayer of the Irish people, and let Ireland "go in peace."

A Nuisance in a neighboring city, ordered copies of Father Gibeson's Reply to Ingersoll, last week, and asks, "If such a copy is in hands of millions." So do we, and so should everyone in America who calls himself a Christian. But the only way to get this pamphlet into "the hands of millions," is for Catholics to circulate it extensively. We have now a second edition of five thousand copies ready, which we will send to any address in the United States at $5.00 per hundred copies, $2.75 for fifty copies, $1.50 for twenty-five copies, $1.00 for fifteen copies, 50 cents for six copies, or 10 cents for a single copy.

$3,500 copies of Father Gibeson's sermon entitled and unanswerable reply to Ingersoll have been published, and we hope that it will continue until at least 100,000 are distributed among all classes of Christians in this country.

Converts to the Church in Germany.

For a dozen years or more the powerful influence of the German Empire has been wielded against the Catholic Church. All the persecution that could be crammed into antagonistic legislation has been formulated by the black-hearted Bismarck. Prisons have been erected, houses have been sent out of Prussia as so many pests, Catholic churches have been taken away from those who built them and given over to some unutterers sect that sprang up from the soulless rationalistic civil power that warred against the Church of Christ. Yet, under such a persecution of antagonized civil power as great as the world witnesses, the Church of God has become the haven of rest for even some of the blood-relations of the ruthless representative power that persecuted the bride of Christ in the dominions of the Emperor William.

That conversions should be made under such adverse circumstances is a miracle itself, but Almighty God works in wonderful ways, and very often, in this nation, man feels that the bark of Peter is about to be submerged beneath the turbulent waters of malignity against the mainspring of God's munificence to men—then the powerful aid of the Omnipotent is felt to every dominion and to Catholicity by legal enactments aimed at its destruction.

And thus it been in Ireland, England, Scotland, Poland and Germany, where recent conversions have convinced many that the faith of Europe, We have before us, in a work entitled Converts to Rome, a partial list of converts received into the Church in Germany, and in order that our Catholics may realize that it is not a dry, uninteresting catalogue of names, we have found "the way, the truth and the life," we append a catalogue of German converts to the Church of Christ, in the hope that it may be of some service to those who it seemed as if the darkness of Egypt overspread the light of truth, and that Almighty God is become estranged in the realm in which the German persecution prevailed.

Among the converts mentioned in the volume we have quoted, are:

Her Most Serene Highness Princess Ida of Hohenlohe, Stolberg, Wernigerode, Princess of Wurtemberg, H.R.H. the Grand Duke of Hesse, H.R.H. the Prince of Hohenzollern, H.R.H. the Prince of Saxe-Coburg, H.R.H. the Prince of Saxe-Meiningen, a relative of Sovereigns H.R.H. the Prince of Thurn and Taxis, H.R.H. the Prince of Ysenburg, H.R.H. the late Princess Alexandrine of Wurtemberg, H.R.H. the Princess Ida of Hohenlohe, H.R.H. the Princess Hedwig of Mecklenburg, only surviving sister of the Queen of Prussia, H.R.H. the

Farm and Home.

SWORD AND PLOW.

There was once a court, as I've heard it said—
Who felt that his sod drew near;
And he called his sons before his bed
To give them his goods and gear.

He called for his plow, he called for his sword
That gallant, good and brave;
They brought him both at his chief father's word,
And thus he his blessing gave:

"My first born son, my pride and delight,
To thee my sword retain;
My castle on the lordly height,
And all my broad domain.

"To thee my well-beloved younger son,
My plow I here bestow;
A peaceful life shalt thou enjoy,
In the quiet vale below."

Contented each the gift did take,
Now all was given away;
The sons held true his last behest,
Even on their dying day.

"Now tell us what came of the steel of fame,
Of the castle and its halls!"
And tell us what came of that vale so tame,
And the humble peasant wight?"

Oh not of me what the end may be!
Ask the country round!
The castle is dust, the sward is rust,
The height is but desert ground.

But the vale spreads wide in the golden pride
Of the Autumn sunlight now;
It teems and it rhymes for age and wide,
And the boor abides with the plow.

Parental Neglect.

A sad comment on the carelessness of parents may be made, on the drowning of three children in Detroit river recently. Mary Maney and Milla Beecff, aged 12 and 11, went together without older company to Sandwich. They fell in the company, and made the acquaintance of two boys about 17 years of age. The whole party went on the river in a small boat, which was upset by the wake of a passing steamer, and all except Miss Maney, sank to rise no more. She succeeded in clinging to the boat until next day when it drifted so near the shore that her feeble cries were heard by a neighboring farmer who rescued and revived her.

So little interest had been taken by their parents, in these young persons, that their absence was hardly noticed, until the news of the accident was brought by the sole survivor.

Can the amount of vice and misery among us, be wondered at, when such a state of parental indifference to the care of the young exist. These children, were but a few of the hundreds that were allowed on that day to mingle with, and behold, the worst scenes of revelry, and profligacy. Their hats was mounted, dashboard, compared with that of many whose moral ruin will be traced to the same neglect of parental care and restraint. Better sink young in the dark water, than to live the life to which the path on which they had entered leads them.

Be a Good Wife.

Marriage with a worthy man is a woman's privilege, and her best and highest development, mental and physical, can be attained in this state. Men and women were made for each other, and a very old but nevertheless true truism is that a happy marriage is the very Garden of Eden. An unhappy marriage is the reverse, and the greatest of all calamities that can befall a pure, affectionate and noble woman. Faith in God and a strong resolve to do every duty can alone keep such a one from absolute despair. Miss Bremdon says, "a good woman who does not love her husband makes a good wife." If this is true it is because she is controlled by duty instead of the changing caprices of affection. "Trouble in the flesh" will come to every married couple. Who, not crazed with love, would wish to be married to an angel? Wives and husbands were always quite willing and even eager to see their children settled for in life in marriage, knowing that they would find shelter and protection thereby, if not in the affection, at least by the law, which compels the husband to support his wife—a support perhaps meager enough and grudgingly bestowed. Look around on all your friends, married or single, and ask yourselves the question which is the preferable lot. If you are strong enough to fight alone the battle of life, to earn your own bread and butter, you are just in the condition to give the respect at least of a husband, and, having a hearty, genuine respect, admiration and love are not far distant. The truth is, dear girls, too many enter into this holy condition hoping to find in it only ease, adulation and pleasure. Such persons will find the reverse of what they seek. Read Tennyson's "Princess." Had not he the true conception of happiness in this condition?

A man must be bad, indeed, that can treat with disrespect a woman who respects herself. As a rule a good woman will make a good home—we know of exceptions to this, however. But if you have made up your minds to follow the best of your own wills, and gave a way for yourselves, you may do well; but to those who intend to enter the married state, should a good opportunity come to them, I have only to say, see to it that you individually understand what is required of you as a wife. Be willing to make concessions at any time if in the wrong, and, above all things, don't find fault with your husband before others.

What Large Crops Would Do for Us.

The potency of good crops and of other important commercial influences is generally underrated. A large yield means an enormous addition to the available wealth of the country. For illustration, let us suppose that the needs of our population of 57,000,000 can be moderately supplied, but no more, when the yield of wheat is 400,000,000 bushels, of corn 1,200,000,000 bushels, of cotton, 6,000,000 bales, and of other productions in like proportion. Such a yield, let us say, suffices to feed and clothe our people and to buy what they need from abroad. But instead, there comes a yield of about one quarter greater, the gross product of agricultural rises, for example, from $2,400,000,000 to $3,000,000,000. Our needs having been previously supplied, the increase of $600,000,000, or $900,000,000 is so much added to our gross profit on the year's work, and when markets can be found for products, the entire value of that increase is added to the available wealth of the country. In short, we are in the position of a merchant who can barely cover expenses with a moderate business, but can make an enormous profit if the business becomes a little larger.

This year's crops are going to add a very large sum to the clear profits of the country, unless we allow speculation to slaughter our foreign trade again. With $600,000,000 more to be applied to the development of resources, the building of houses and mills and railroads, or to be invested in securities, an impetus will certainly be given to all markets and all branches of trade.

Spoon Music.

The performers who are to assist in the entertainment must each be provided with a with a wide glass and spoon. The air is then played over and when the pianist arrives at the passages marked "spoons" each glass is to be touched with an the edge with the spoon. If done with delicacy it is astonishing what a pleasing effect may be produced, especially if the wine glasses provided be of thin glass. The brass gentle the touch the greater will be the success achieved. Nothing is needed but clear, gentle ringing notes, sounded in harmony.

THE WEEK'S NEWS
—FROM— IRELAND.

Antrim.—At the recent meeting of the Parnell Branch of the National League, Ballast, it was announced that during the coming Winter lectures would be delivered by Messrs. Colomel, Johnston, Shanks, Williams, O'Connor, and others.

Armagh.—William Tarleton, late of Knockmoyne, in the county of Armagh, farmer, now an absconding debtor, has been adjudged a bankrupt.

On October 1st, at Portadown, a young man living at Clonsilladerg, named Edward Magee, while standing on a railway car was struck by a block on which he ought to have ducked, and his skull was fractured. Magee was killed instantly. Deceased was 22 years of age, and was the only support of two sisters. Conclusion of the train, it is said, was the cause of death.

Clare.—A young man, named Thomas Sheehan, met a shocking death on September 27. While driving along the road from Ennis to Kilrush, his horse reared, at a dangerous and unprotected part of the road, and Sheehan got out of the cart and took the horse by the head, whereupon the animal jumped off the road into a deep morass, burying Sheehan beneath it. The horse was also killed.

Cork.—Alderman Hopper, of Cork, has hit upon another happy phrase. He says he does not give as much credit to Irish Members who reside in Ireland for being National, as he does upon the Irish McCarthy, who, being home National opinions in either Houses of Parliament, made against the Irish Members, who are home Nationalists, and who, in the interest of Irish public opinion.

At a special session held on September 30, at Bantry, under the Crimes Act, Jeremiah Sullivan was sentenced to two months' imprisonment with hard labor, for hackney driving, taken possession of a horse, the property of the Earl of Lonmare, from which Sullivan had been evicted. The latter pleaded in defense that he found it impossible to have the place where he had been worked.

On Sept. 28, a National meeting was held at Coolmagourney, in the Bantry district, Cork, and very numerously attended. The Parish Priest was not invited from his holding at Castletown, during the Land League agitation, and, as there was a large attendance. Resolutions were proposed amongst other things, condemning the native Parliament, and declaring that those who trial of the laws to beat the people out of the country, should not be permitted to hunt over the lands.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., was presented, on Sept. 29, with a purse of £100 by his fellow-nationals and the Young Ireland Society of Ballincurrig, a large suburban district.

Lieutenant Colonel Chadwick, late of the Barrow Militia, Thomas Hardy, aged 50, sailor, after sailing his engage, went to retire to bed, and while passing through the bathroom, accidentally expired of heart disease.

The first meeting of the newly appointed Ballinasloe and Skibbereen Harbor Board was held on Thursday, at Ballinasloe. The Rev. Father Davis, P. P., was unanimously elected chairman.

Mr. Ferguson, Q. C., Chairman of the West Cork Jury, on the opening of the Court at Bandon, at Bantry, on Sept. 29, in a very pleasant address, said he was not unwilling to be disposed of, in his case, with a sale of white gloves, in which he recognized the compliment, Mr. Ferguson and that it was not that he had been the recipient of such a welcome recognition of the impartiality of the juries of a large district.

The Rev. John Willard, O. P., died on Sept. 29, in Cork. Father Willard was born in Cork in the year 1826, and after a sound religious education, he entered the Dominican Order, and was sent to Lisbon, where, after completing his studies, he was ordained. He then returned to Cork immediately after his ordination, in the month of May, 1850, and was stationed in Sunday's Well Convent. Father Willard was a great favorite with the people of Cork, and spent the whole of his life in Cork, with the exception of a few years in Dublin, on "Sunday from an Edinburgh Pulpit." Father Willard's sermons were very popular, and received an enthusiastic reception.

Mr. Michael Dwyer, of Ballinacurra, died on Monday, September 29, at the residence of his son-in-law, Thomas Dwyer, Q. C., Cork. He had been a leading Nationalist, and, in the early part of his life, he had taken a prominent part in the Repeal agitation, and was

MISERERE DOMINE.

At times! the heart in mourning turns
Beneath its misery!
At times! stifled are its moans;
Miserere Domine!

From out the depths the bitter cry
Of soul brokenly
Ascends: to reach thy home on high,
Miserere Domine!

List to the prayer; the supplication hear,
Of sad pertensity;
Mark not our faults, thy wrath we fear
Miserere Domine!

As humble heart, and broken with grief,
Claims thy pity, mercy
Haste thee, and come to our relief,
Miserere Domine!

With there is hope, and life, and love, O God;
To pity and to mildly,
Thy mercy shines thro' all thy reign
Miserere Domine!

From morn's welsh till dawn are
We wait for victory;
Our soul bend, humble, and live grieve
Miserere Domine!

THE LAND BY FANCY FORMED.

BY A. DOYLE.

It sparkles with lustrous diamonds,
With hopes of a thousand things;
And a dove who hoards its valleys,
To the angelic spirit wings.

And the song that her ever lips utter,
Soothes the soul that is gloomy with care;
The lilies that once seemed to decay
With Nature's bright magic grown fair.

There's a fountain of Peace in that valley,
And it quenches the hot thirst of strife;
Here the soul thirsts and is the first,
Sips the draught that imbues it with life.

Ah! oft have I come to this fairy-land,
And infinite rest in its shades;
I have sealed the force of my sorrow,
In the waters that silver its glades.

I have looked to the blue sky above me,
And my eyes seemed to pierce its fair hue;
When Lo! just behind its arched portals,
Stood of hope gilded bright on my view.

Oh! the vision that unfolded on pathway,
So grand! so entrancing! so fair!
But alas! when I grasped at their beauties,
My sager hands stretched empty air.

I awoke from the spell that had chained me,
And bounded to life once anew;
The lay life were spoke the wild anguish,
Yet the depths of my soul hold the pain!

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY IN SEVEN CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER V.

The following Sunday was ushered in by dark clouds and distant thunder, and before the hour for going to church the rain fell in torrents and the wind swayed the shade trees in the most threatening manner; therefore the family abandoned the idea of leaving home, and quietly seated themselves for the usual hour of conversation, which insensibly turned upon Christian denominations, and the various doctrines held—a subject never before discussed in this family circle, and being something unusual and new, the conversation flowed on pleasantly, and new ideas had presented itself. Finally, one remark young Eisner made to a Catholic, or I should judge him to be, from the very fanatic manner in which he spoke of Mass by the letter of the Father. How is that, Father?

"You are covered in your surmises, father."

"Ah! yes, you know it, and will not take a step in the dark."

"No, father; I shall take a step from the dark into the light."

"Well, my daughter, your language is rather enigmatical, I think. Since you have ventured so bold a reply, suppose you tell us, and we promise entire attention, why there is more light in the Catholic Church than in any of the other Christian churches?"

"Father, father, while I have not spoken unadvisedly, I should not have been so bold. Still, if you would prefer that which would appear arrogance in your child, I will endeavor to make my declaration at once intelligible.

"Oh, certainly, father. I meant nothing else."

"Then, if it is agreeable to you, mother, and all, I shall explain."

With one voice the entire family expressed the deepest interest, and hoped that she would tell them something about the great Catholic Church.

"Now," commenced Esther, "I do feel under obligations, and will at least attempt an explanation. We are taught in the Bible that our Saviour in his last interview with Peter, gave unto him the keys of Heaven, and delivered to him the most important commands. He endowed him with the extraordinary power of binding and loosing the souls of men with the assurance that he sate would be entitled in Heaven; and it was on that occasion He established His Church on earth, and promised to guard that His would defend it, and be with it to the end of time. Now that is true; and if true, then Peter, the Head of the visible Church of Christ on earth, and the first Pope, and Christ, the Founder, and present Defender, was and is the True Light, that has illuminated its path from the commencement of Peter's commission, through the nineteen centuries which have elapsed, and who reigns in the presence of Leo, the Thirteenth, the successor and representative of Peter's Chair.

"This beautiful and, allow me to add, reasonable and truthful deduction from Holy Writ, makes the Son of the Father, the Son that illuminates the hearts of all true Catholics, and causes a halo to encircle the heads of the multitudes of the humble religious, who have given themselves, soul and body, into His service. And then, I have ventured the assertion, that I am about to step from other darkness into the Light."

Upon Esther's conclusion of this sentence, and before she had time to proceed with her explanation, Mr. Martin interrupted with,

"I am quite delighted with the argument, and your earnest manner of defending the religious principles of which I should not at all be surprised some day, not in the distant future, to see at least one member of the family a Catholic."

"Father, if you mean myself, indeed you need not be surprised. I have given the subject not only a thorough and careful examination, but a prayerful one as well—and my mind on that question is settled."

Mrs Martin had quietly listened to the strange enumeration of Esther, and signified her appreciation of the remarks of Mr. Martin by nodding assent as he spoke.

Under of Esther had the effect of calling from her mother expressions of surprise and approval.

She said: "I must declare I do not care if she does become a Catholic; for, after all, it cannot be denied that there is a beauty and earnestness in the worship of the Catholic Church that is not found elsewhere—that is, so far as my observation extends. I have never before heard such convincing reasoning of the claims of that Church to its origin from our Saviour, Husband! and I am well really anxious to know more about it; and I think I shall invite the Bishop very soon to spend a evening with us, that we may further prosecute the subject. Mr. Martin made no reply—looked amused—and seemed himself, as soon as his office, where for two hours he sat in silent meditation.

Later in the day he sought his wife's presence, and asked her with much apparent feeling, if she meant what she said in regard to having a Catholic Bishop a guest of the house, and receiving an affirmed answer, at once gave his consent—and since it had been agreed upon, he trusted she would not defer the invitation too long; the fortunate conversation had left his mind in a very unsettled state; he thought it quite right to correct, he would like the Bishop to confirm it; there, he would expect to see the Bishop be made aware at once of their desire.

This proposition was acceptable to Mr. Martin, and the next day a note from his wife was dispatched to the Bishop, couched in modest, but earnest words, soliciting his presence, with the request that he signify his acceptance by the messenger, who had orders to await a reply.

The Bishop read the note, and made no comment; but at once retreated an answer, which was indeed a missive of glad tidings. Esther was called in and advised of all that had been done. She was very glad to learn that the good Bishop would come to her home, she knew him well—he was so good and pleasant. How delightful, she said, as she threw her arms around her mother's neck in very joy.

This tableau, so unexpected, greatly affected Mr. Martin, and he looked around him as if he felt something was wanting. Addressing himself to Esther, he said in tones of tender reproach, "Why not be a Catholic without his knowledge or consent.

Her prompt reply was, "Dear father, you are not angry—will you be so my answer?"

"No, my daughter—how can you be angry with you?"

"Then, you say, I am not a Catholic by Baptism—I have desired Baptism; but was diverted by one, and my daily prayer for the conversion of you, mother, and the children—and I have obeyed in my humble childish way."

A solemn moment ensued. Two hearts were touched that never before yielded to prayer. The man, who, with one stroke of his pen, could command many millions of dollars to roll at his feet, suddenly found himself speechless; and departed without questioning his daughter any further.

From that day no account of time was taken in the Martin mansion. The many friends of Esther were daily visitors, and the happy lady was busy indeed. Letters of the rarest kind were dispensed most lavishly, and no one was more happy than the relieved parents of the restored daughter.

But greater joy and a greater change was yet to come. As a matter of course the youth and beauty who daily associated with Esther had been told of the expected visit of the Catholic Bishop to the family where they had their confidants, and it soon became a current rumor throughout the city.

Ministers of other denominations who had been accustomed to see the form of Mr. Martin in their houses of worship, readily became unnirtled, and, with and latish manner invitations to the family to visit their services on the next Sabbath.

The very cordial manner in which these good people were received and entertained and the effect of quieting their nerves, and such in his turn, departed, reassured in his mind that he had succeeded in his mission. They therefore gave themselves up wholly over to the retrograde step of the Church of Christ, Protestant.

The evening for the Bishop's visit at length came, and, true to his promise, that distinguished gentleman appeared at the door of the Martin mansion, and was joyfully met by Mr. and Mrs. Martin.

To needless to say that the entire evening was most agreeably spent, the conversation taking the course most desired by the family—an exposition of the faith and doctrines of the Church.

It is late hour the Bishop remembered an important appointment, promising however that he would be in a few days again visit them. He desired before leaving, to see Miss Esther, if she had not retired for the night. Mrs. Martin then sent for Esther who had not retired, but had been engaged in prayer for a favorable termination of the Bishop's visit.

With a sweet smile on her lovely countenance, she walked into the parlor, and taking the Bishop's hand knelt and kissed it—as set, she had been taught by Albert, of reverence for and obedience to one in so high a position.

The venerable bishop was quite unprepared for this demonstration of filial affection in a non-Catholic person, and he imparted his blessing, saying: "God bless you my child."

The interview was necessarily brief.

"Now," commenced Esther, "I do feel under obligations, and will at least attempt an explanation. We are taught in the Bible that our Saviour in his last interview with Peter, gave unto him the keys of Heaven, and delivered to him the most important commands. He endowed him with the extraordinary power of binding and loosing the souls of men with the assurance that he sate would be entitled in Heaven; and it was on that occasion He established His Church on earth, and promised to guard that He would defend it, and be with it to the end of time. Now that is true; and if true, then Peter, the Head of the visible Church of Christ on earth, and the first Pope, and Christ, the Founder, and present Defender, was and is the True Light, that has illuminated its path from the commencement of Peter's commission, through the nineteen centuries which have elapsed, and who reigns in the presence of Leo, the Thirteenth, the successor and representative of Peter's Chair.

"This beautiful and, allow me to add, reasonable and truthful deduction from Holy Writ, makes the Son of the Father, the Son that illuminates the hearts of all true Catholics, and causes a halo to encircle the heads of the multitudes of the humble religious, who have given themselves, soul and body, into His service. And then, I have ventured the assertion, that I am about to step from other darkness into the Light."

Upon Esther's conclusion of this sentence, and before she had time to proceed with her explanation, Mr. Martin interrupted with,

"I am quite delighted with the argument, and your earnest manner of defending the religious principles of which I should not at all be surprised some day, not in the distant future, to see at least one member of the family a Catholic."

"Father, if you mean myself, indeed you need not be surprised. I have given the subject not only a thorough and careful examination, but a prayerful one as well—and my mind on that question is settled."

Mrs Martin had quietly listened to the strange enumeration of Esther, and signified her appreciation of the remarks of Mr. Martin by nodding assent as he spoke.

Under of Esther had the effect of calling from her mother expressions of surprise and approval.

She said: "I must declare I do not care if she does become a Catholic; for, after all, it cannot be denied that there is a beauty and earnestness in the worship of the Catholic Church that is not found elsewhere—that is, so far as my observation extends. I have never before heard such convincing reasoning of the claims of that Church to its origin from our Saviour, Husband! and I am well really anxious to know more about it; and I think I shall invite the Bishop very soon to spend a evening with us, that we may further prosecute the subject. Mr. Martin made no reply—looked amused—and seemed himself, as soon as his office, where for two hours he sat in silent meditation.

Later in the day he sought his wife's presence, and asked her with much apparent feeling, if she meant what she said in regard to having a Catholic Bishop a guest of the house, and receiving an affirmed answer, at once gave his consent—and since it had been agreed upon, he trusted she would not defer the invitation too long; the fortunate conversation had left his mind in a very unsettled state; he thought it quite right to correct, he would like the Bishop to confirm it; there, he would expect to see the Bishop be made aware at once of their desire.

This proposition was acceptable to Mr. Martin, and the next day a note from his wife was dispatched to the Bishop, couched in modest, but earnest words, soliciting his presence, with the request that he signify his acceptance by the messenger, who had orders to await a reply.

The Bishop read the note, and made no comment; but at once retreated an answer, which was indeed a missive of glad tidings. Esther was called in and advised of all that had been done. She was very glad to learn that the good Bishop would come to her home, she knew him well—he was so good and pleasant. How delightful, she said, as she threw her arms around her mother's neck in very joy.

This tableau, so unexpected, greatly affected Mr. Martin, and he looked around him as if he felt something was wanting. Addressing himself to Esther, he said in tones of tender reproach, "Why not be a Catholic without his knowledge or consent.

Her prompt reply was, "Dear father, you are not angry—will you be so my answer?"

"No, my daughter—how can you be angry with you?"

"Then, you say, I am not a Catholic by Baptism—I have desired Baptism; but was diverted by one, and my daily prayer for the conversion of you, mother, and the children—and I have obeyed in my humble childish way."

A solemn moment ensued. Two hearts were touched that never before yielded to prayer. The man, who, with one stroke of his pen, could command many millions of dollars to roll at his feet, suddenly found himself speechless; and departed without questioning his daughter any further.

From that day no account of time was taken in the Martin mansion. The many friends of Esther were daily visitors, and the happy lady was busy indeed. Letters of the rarest kind were dispensed most lavishly, and no one was more happy than the relieved parents of the restored daughter.

But greater joy and a greater change was yet to come. As a matter of course the youth and beauty who daily associated with Esther had been told of the expected visit of the Catholic Bishop to the family where they had their confidants, and it soon became a current rumor throughout the city.

Ministers of other denominations who had been accustomed to see the form of Mr. Martin in their houses of worship, readily became unnirtled, and, with and latish manner invitations to the family to visit their services on the next Sabbath.

The very cordial manner in which these good people were received and entertained and the effect of quieting their nerves, and such in his turn, departed, reassured in his mind that he had succeeded in his mission. They therefore gave themselves up wholly over to the retrograde step of the Church of Christ, Protestant.

The evening for the Bishop's visit at length came, and, true to his promise, that distinguished gentleman appeared at the door of the Martin mansion, and was joyfully met by Mr. and Mrs. Martin.

To needless to say that the entire evening was most agreeably spent, the conversation taking the course most desired by the family—an exposition of the faith and doctrines of the Church.

It is late hour the Bishop remembered an important appointment, promising however that he would

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the chief agent in popularizing ideas; and popularizing ideas is the chief work of government in the world. In our time, religious journalism is not only a useful and serious instrumentum, nor only a work independent of the workers of society, but a sort of apostolate. What is and what ought to be the whole of society, the family, the school, the workshop, the city, the world, whatever it may be—always all, the life-blood.—BEATIS, THE GREATS MONSIGNOR CHEVRIER

Malicious Masonic Mockery of Christian Rites.

If there is any Catholic in California, or elsewhere on the coast, who may be inclined with the idea that the Masonic sect is merely an organization of a beneficial and philanthropic nature, we think it only reasonable to hope that the developments of the diabolical nature of Masonry which we publish below will help to open the eyes of all such Catholics to the sterling and enduring fact so often repeated by the Popes, the Prelates and the Priests, when they declared to the faithful that Masonry is the worst foe of the Church in the world.

Hear the potent voice of the present glorious Vicar of Christ in this extract from his recent Encyclical on the Masonic sect:

"Whereforo, against this association reason and truth itself speak out, in justice and natural rights, to fight.

"And the more so because other most cogent reasons confirm the nature of the society, long as it is the enemy of all virtuous living. For however great may be its zeal for the spread of full deceit, and the habit of lying, it is impossible that the aims of things should not be, to a certain extent, be discovered by its consequences. "A good tree cannot bring forth bad fruit, neither can a bad tree bring forth good fruit" (St. Matt. vii. 18). Now the fruit of Masonry can proceed from no other than the stock and the grafting whence it has been plainly shown, and from which We have already mentioned, it comes to light what is its ultimate end, viz., utterly to overthrow that discipline of religion and social order which Christianity has founded, and to erect upon its ruins a new one after the own mind, on the principles and foundations of naturalism.

To ascertain the force of the warning words of the Holy Father, it is only necessary to peruse the following account of proceedings which took place publicly in this city on last Wednesday night, proceedings in which the sacraments of Baptism and Holy Eucharist—as administered by the Church—were burlesqued with a degree of diabolism that must have given delight to the demons in hell!

Here is the account of the blasphemous burlesque as printed in the daily press, omitting that portion which alludes to the musical mishaps of the evil-minded executors:

"King Solomon's Hall, in the Masonic Temple, was filled to repletion last evening by the members of Le Pothole Union Lodge, No. 1, Free and Accepted Masons, and conservers in other places, who have adopted the name and written an adjective form. This novel ceremony was performed in the Masonic Temple, and it was pronounced to be a success. It is universally admitted that the Masonic fraternity are not anxious to be christened, sanctifying mirth to all, then inserted into the hall, accompanied by the ecclesiastics and godmothers, and that part the ceremony was duly gone through with drawn swords. The Worshipful Master then well carried all, and the Worshipful Master then addressed the godfathers and godmothers, reminding them of the responsibility of their charge and closed with a prayer for the children, which was responded to by the sexton, the choir lodge and the choir.

The choir, by the way, was then lighted in the very and salt was distributed on the food prepared, being symbolized of purifying the soul of its sins and giving the hospitality of the lodge to the children.

The ceremony of the christening next took place, under the supervision of Worshipful Master Daniel Levy, assisted by Senior Warden Jacob Pentecoster and Junior Warden A. Ottlin. The godfathers and godmothers then took the children, and the Worshipful Master, with the aprons of consecrated to the altar and perform of wine, Consecrated to the altar and perform of wine, the children, who evidently were afraid of the fetters that issued from the flambeau. All having partaken of the hospitality of the lodge, they then repaired to their seats. As it would take too long to christen each child separately, a young boy named Charles Ross was selected and administered the ceremony for the remainder. They drank the wine offered to give them strength to pursue old hospitality. The latter was then applied to the boy's head, the triangle to his breast and the square of wine given his hair. The secret for was then revealed to choose his soul, as the mark of fidelity, which was given by the godparents. The oil was next administered, being symbolized of hospitality.

Upon the oil being administered by the Worshipful Master, who formally adopted them by passing a sword over the heads of the children. The memorial medals and aprons, with the certificate and a package of candy, were then distributed to the children.

Dr. John Dennis, the orator of the evening, then addressed the assemblage and gave a brief description of the progress of Masonry from its inception to the present day. Worshipful Master Levy thanked the orator for his interesting address and closed the ceremonies with a few remarks, and the choir sang the Doxology.

Here is food for reflecting Catholics! The sheep, the cities, the children, the very sacraments of the Church sacrilegiously represented before an assemblage of Jews, infidels and Impenitentes! Food passed around in such an assembly—in insulting mockery of the most august sacrament of the Holy Eucharist! A Jewish "Worshipful Master" goes through the Christian formula of baptizing—as Christians—a number of children! Do our Catholic and other Christian readers not see the drift of all this? Why, it requires no very penetrating vision to discover the devil demon-stated in the whole business. The Masons are just seeks to destroy Christianity, hence it burlesques the rites, sacraments and most sacred mysteries of the Catholic Church, and it proclaims plainly to the world that it can perform for its members all the functions pertaining to the Catholic Church, hence Freemasonry contains Christianity enough for those who are members of that sect! And this is one of the reasons why the Masonic sect considers itself the most august sacraments of the Catholic Church.

But was it not eminently in the Satanic spirit of Masonry to have the ridiculous rite of Masonic ministry of Christian baptism administered by a Jew! The representative of a race that repudiates Christ performing Christian baptism! The outrage is perpetrated knowingly in order to parody in the most blasphemous manner known to the Masonic sect the baptism of our Blessed Saviour by St. John the Baptist!

Have these Masonic ceremonies any value in the eyes of God? No! They are an abomination in His sight because they are a profanation of sacraments instituted by Him for His glory and man's salvation. But when such rites are parodied by Masons they become an abomination in the sight of God, and, instead of being acceptable to heaven they give satisfaction to Satan cause rejoicing in the regions presided over by his Satanic majesty.

The Union Catholics should learn from such proceedings is to avoid all such associations. They inevitably lead men away from God and lead them hand and foot to the chariot wheels of Baleshub. Those who mock the mysteries of God's holy faith would fain place a crown of thorns upon the sacred head of the Son of God—were in again to crucify Him afresh. And yet there are Catholics who think they can do this body guard of Baleshub who try to convince themselves that the Catholic Church does not include American Freemasonry in its condemnation of the Satanic sect!

To all such the Church says plainly: "You cannot serve two masters." You cannot be with God's Church and against it, hence to receive the rites of your religion you must renounce the Masonic sect or stand convicted as an apostate to Almighty God. There is now—as there has been for hundreds of years—an irreconcilable conflict between the Church and the Masonic sect, and every Catholic who is counted among the cohorts of Masonry is a traitor to the true Mother that made him a Christian.

No amount of casuistry can conceal the cloven foot of the Masonic sect. Its impress of the Infernal one is as indelible as is the hand of God in the starry heavens. Masonry is the Antichrist of modern days. It is the "man of sin" predicted by St. Paul in his Second Epistle to the Thessalonians, for the reason that the Masonic sect "opposeth, and is lifted up above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself as if he were God."

This is precisely the attitude assumed by Masonic Jews and infidels when they mock the Bishops and Priests of God's Church, when they travesty the sacred functions of God's anointed, and burlesque the rites that were created to be celebrated only in the holy of holies, and by those only who were specially consecrated to the service of that God who will call to dreadful account all those who carricature the Eucharistic and Baptismal sacraments of His Church. Masonry may make light of mocking God; the sect may assume that will is his endeavor to annihilate the Almighty Lord and Sovereign Ruler of the Universe in the minds of men, but it shall never seduce a single Catholic sent with its hell-woven spell if the words of the MONITOR can reach that misguided sentrea in plunges into the pit of perdition prepared for it by the malicious minds of men who see in Masonry and kindred secret organizations the one sole power in the world capable of attempting so crush Christianity out of existence. The attempt is being made by just such Masonic conspiracies as we have mentioned on, but the final triumph will only result upon the standard of the College of Apostles, but also the divinely constituted Chief Pastor of the Universal Church of God. Just as Washington is always quoted first among American patriots, as the Evangelists, in naming the Apostles, always place St. Peter first, the names of the others being placed in order, so that if Judas Alias is always where it ought to be—luminous. Now, if according to the biblical summary of Masonry Rev. St. Paul was "the greatest of the Apostles" why did not the heavenly-inspired writers give his name precedence in some place in the bible! No! They knew well to whom the honor of "precedence in apostolate power was given by our Blessed Redeemer, hence they one and all placed the name of St. Peter first.

The work of building the Church was never thought of until the insignificant sect to which the Rev. gentleman from Benicia belongs sprung into existence, and the line then let loose has been travelling around the world ever since, being pitched into the public arena whenever an Episcopalian preacher found occasion to circulate it. It is a strength, however, to know that notwithstanding the efforts of the combined world outside the enemies of the Catholic Church have adopted this falsehood. The voice of God proclaimed St. Peter as the "Rock of the Apostles; the pens of the Evangelists have recorded his right in that respect; all the Popes that succeeded him have proclaimed St. Peter's supremacy; all the Fathers of the Church have re-echoed the same sentiment; and even some enlightened Protestant writers candidly acknowledge St. Peter's Primacy in the Apostolic College.

Thus the Catholic Church can prove from the highest and holiest authorities throughout all ages that St. Peter was the Rock of Christ's Church, that he was the "Key-Bearer" of the Kingdom of Heaven, that he was the Confirmer of the Apostles; that he was the Chief Pastor of the Flock—and thus Supreme in authority in the Church of Christ.

We fear there must be a Sleepy Hollow in Benicia where the Rev. Delos Mansfield, A. M., has been taking a Rip Van Winkle nap for many years. The Rev. gentleman is decidedly "behind the age" even regarding the doings of his own sect, because he is still upon the New Testament, recently revised under the authority of a general assembly of Episcopalian clergymen, he will not find there—remarkable honor—paid to St. Peter by his co-religionists "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." "Thus," says the revision committee of Episcopalian clergyman, "did Peter explain the origin of the Old Testament Scriptures, and by clear implication that of the New Testament also." Here we see St. Peter quoted as the first authority for the inspiration of the Bible, and the compilers did this because they believed that his evidence—as the head of the Apostolic College—would have weight in the Christian world than if they quoted any of the other Apostles. Hence Dr. L. Delos Mansfield, A. M., should not be so ignorant regarding the doings of his brethren, and not have the Benicia branch of the British made sect so far behind the times of its religious co-partners.

The Rev. Mr. Noble's pamphlet, which we have before us, has evidently been published for the purpose of circulating the bible during the last three centuries. Hence Dr. L. Delos Mansfield, A. M., would not be so ignorant regarding the doings of his brethren, and not have the Benicia branch of the British made sect so far behind the times of its religious co-partners.

The Replica of Three Protestant Preachers to Ingersoll.

REV. T. K. NOBLE'S proposal of his Sermon on the Bible, and the Bible Only.

REVIEW OF INGERSOLL'S LECTURE ON "GIRDS AND GOD," BY REV. DELOS MANSFIELD, D.D.

GOD, GOD AND MAN, BY DR. BEELEN, R.C.

REVIEW OF INGERSOLL'S LECTURE ON "GIRDS AND GOD," BY REV. DELOS MANSFIELD, D.D., LL.D., BY REV. T. K. PARK, D.D., LL.D., Rochester, N.Y. Steele & Avery, 1883.

We have read the three works above enumerated with much interest, but with small profit, for the reason that Protestantism becomes a veritable "barren fig tree" when it undertakes to defend Christianity against the assaults of Infidelity. Nor where is the want of authority to speak for God, the absence of a commission, and the lack of a divine, infallible, immutable and indestructible faith—more apparent in a Protestant preacher than when he attempts to speak dogmatically, or to defend Christianity in the polemical arena. It is really melancholy to witness the way these three representatives of false religions floundered about in the swamp of sectarianism, entirely helpless until they hang on to some overhanging limb formed by the Catholic Church centuries before Protestantism was patchworked out of Hades in order to saturate the world with Satanic religious error.

The Rev. Mr. Noble's pamphlet is, in a thing of "shreds and patches," a kind of Congregational "crazy quilt" comprised of fifty-three and odd-looking remnants from different and indifferent writers. And so far as fallibility is concerned—the Rev. preacher might just as well have thrown a mowball into the ocean with the hope of extracting the saline qualities from the briny deep, as to preach such patchwork platitudes with any expectation that left dotty would suffer in the least from such a sermon.

The Rev. L. Delos Mansfield, A. M., had such a high opinion of his "Review" that he printed it and left it for sale at Waldstedt's, 797 Market street. The Rev. gentleman is the Rector of St. Paul's Church, Benicia, which may account for his calling St. Paul "the greatest of the Apostles," which he was not. But it is a cardinal principle in the Episcopalian sect to hate Peter and to love Paul, so as to sneak the Primate of the "peaky Popish Church!" Hence Dr. Delos M., A. M., would not be true to the three-century traditions of the sect founded by that horrible historical character known as Henry VIII., if he did not start out to spank Ingersoll by formulating a Sermon!

If the many "revisers," improvers, corrupters and theological thinkers of the Protestant ilk who have been disembowelling the bible during the last three centuries, have not expurgated the proofs of St. Peter's primacy from that sacred volume, we would refer the Reverend author of this sectarian slander upon St. Peter to verses 16-19 of the 16th chapter of St. Matthew; to the 22nd chapter of St. Luke, verses 29-32, and to a dozen other portions of the New Testament whereon he can find sufficient testimony to satisfy any rational mind that St. Peter was not only the head, of the College of Apostles, but also the divinely constituted Chief Pastor of the Universal Church of God. Just as Washington is always quoted first among American patriots, as the Evangelists, in naming the Apostles, always place St. Peter first, the names of the others being placed in order, so that if Judas alias is always where it ought to be—luminous. The Rev. gentleman next says his handful of hornets a brief biographical sketch of Ingersoll's Calvinistic father, and as a sketch of the Protestant progenitor of blasphemous Bob may serve to give a reason for Ingersoll's hatred of Christianity, we append the and manner which shows how Calvinism kills Christianity in the souls of those who have the misfortune to be immersed in its stagnant and unchristian doctrines.

"In my youth," says Rev. Mansfield, "I knew the father of Robert Ingersoll, who was a hard-shell Calvinistic Baptist, a minister of the gospel of eminent abilities, earnest and sincere in what he knew in those days as "revival meetings." He was a strong and efficient man. His theology of the most Calvinistic type, but with a heart larger and broader than his theological creed. It was impossible, that this sweetness of his father's creed could ever have now before—gave the feel impose to his sons sympathies, which, although not accepted at present, the Christianities of New England was a reaction from the hard, and in some cases, cruel theology of the Calvinistic type, the sentiments of Mr. Ingersoll may have been a reaction from the harsh and inhuman theology of his father's sects, and in some instances, many of those Calvinistic theologians, and I repeated them as not any part of the true Christian faith. For the teachings of Christ—some of which were numerous—we have no scripture, simply that the children are to be happy with the darkness of the times and the ignorance of the age. I have fought many a battle with my venerable grandfather, for half a hundred years ago, in the Hillsboro Presbyterian Church—on the Hillsboro charge—which taught that "God was the efficient cause of every human evil, sin and sorrow, and that God would be as much glorified in the damnation of the bad, when they are left to suffer for their sin in the salvation of the good whom he had willed to be saved. What blasphemy! Some of our ancestors—not very long ago—were burned at the stake for less than "God was the efficient cause of every human evil, sin and sorrow." Now! Who of my hearers ever heard such a blasphemous doctrine? Now! Who, probably, in whose hair time has worn to the silver tinge, ever heard such a sermon? Not one!

Poor Protestantism! What a pitiful sight it presents even in the hands of a preacher! It is a question in our mind as to which has done the most damage—Robert Ingersoll or the Rev. L. Delos Mansfield, A. M. Even in "the house of his friends" the latter gentleman—if he could—has received a stab in the back that may prove mortal.

We trust our readers note in the above extract how neatly Rev. L. Delos Mansfield, A. M., used the Episcopalian bellows to blow out the gospel light that Calvin ignited! Dr. Mansfield calls it "a cruel theology" and says, perhaps, as some future Benicia bellows will blow out the farthing candle (Situation) by Henry VIII. The Rev. gentleman also very generously makes the admission that from the Calvinism of the father proceeded the unbelieving Bob, and this fact may account for the applause which great Ingersoll whenever he alludes to what he blasphemously calls "the cruel theology." Here, alas! Calvinism was paid to St. Peter by his co-religionists "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." "Thus," says the revision committee of Episcopalian clergymen, "did Peter explain the origin of the Old Testament Scriptures, and by clear implication that of the New Testament also." Farm and Home.

HER ONLY ONE.

"Good dame, how many children have you?"
Then, with a boiling and troubled brow,
Sadly she looked at an empty place:
"Yes, I have two."
"Nay, Madeline" the father gravely said,
"Ye have but one, for God has taken one
He left the other."
"He must be dead."

"Yes, I have two: one a little child,
Home to her mother's arms clinging fondly
His pure, great face and garments white,
All modelled.
With clear, bright eyes and soft, fair hair,
He climbs up on his mother's knee
Folds baby hands and whispers to me
His evening prayer.

"The other, he took a wilful way,
When the sun West, and kept for his name,
With deeds of cruelty and shame
He hot here.

And as a mother's prayers are never only
So, in my heart the innocent child,
And the reckless man, by sin defiled,
The same I hold.

"But yet I hope them ever apart;
For I will not stain the memory
Of the boy who once prayed on my knee,
Thus to my heart.

The man he grew to still come saints,
My mother love for away he from,
Father and mother will bring him home—
Oh, but how.

The stranger stood in the broader light,
"Oh, Mother! Oh, Father!" he sweetly said,
"I have come back to your side, to stay
Forgive me each thoughtless word."
And as the answer he prayer was over,
And the father wept, and the mother smiled,
And the mother blessed and blessed her boy,

Family Expenses.

After religion and politics there is nothing about which intelligent people differ so radically as what they call the cost of living. A shilling man in some departments of business will earn several thousand dollars a year, spend nothing foolishly, and yet all his wants be supplied. Some acquaintances of his with a similar salary, and a large family, live comfortably, sends his boys to college, drives a good horse and has a snug little bank account. There are mechanics earning two dollars a day who comfortably feed and clothe a family of half a dozen people, while some of their fellow workmen, married, but without children live meanly, wear shabby clothes on Sunday, and are economically spoiled from their homes for non-payment of rent. The principal cause of the difference may almost always be found in the family's leader, and the family wardrobe. Some families must breakfast either on buckwheat or mutton chops; others will serve just as much meat and make it just as palatable at a quarter of the expense of choice cuts, because well-cooked. Temperament has much influence on the latter. Excitable people will eat twice as much without satisfying their hunger, as those of better physical balance, yet they will not do more work. Some wives will save the price of a ton of coal by remaining for one of the children an old dress or suit of clothes; some others, seeming to be destitute of that skill or inclination, and have every thing new or go without. Economy is a science which quite a number of men and women have mastered by close observation and diligent practice; others do not seem to know of its existence. It takes longer to learn economy than to learn a trade, but when learned it is the most consoling science in existence, no matter how much or how little money its devotee may have.

The Nightcap Question.

I begin to think that perhaps that custom of my ancestors, that at 10 o'clock moment I plunged my hand into my coat pocket, and pulled out a salt smoking cap—a pretty thing, wrought for me long ago by the dainty delicate, deft fingers of one who now rests in the graveyard at Augusta. This cap was given to her thing, I pinned it reverently upon my head, with an act of faith, and laid me down. The result was magical. Never since I was a boy can I remember to have experienced so perfect a repose. Not a cloud rippled the surface of my brain, and I awakened hours afterward with a sense of satisfaction that must be a foretaste of heaven itself. An incipient headache had vanished. Powers of mind that had been dulled were restored to activity and keenness. Not a trace of irascibility remained, but in its place came trooping the sweet angels that Father Tabor says constantly hover over the good-humored man. I declare that the nancyrophous was so complete, that I almost needed an introduction to my own self. And during my sleep was created by one grand, complete and unusual blunder, a dream, amusing a nightmare. Subsequent experiments have been relatively successful; so I am getting to be an enthusiast on the subject. Some folks say that it is a delusion, a mere freak of the imagination. Be it so. If a nightcap can extinguish my imagination at bedtime, I thank God for the discovery.

Origin of County Fairs.

Our sixty years ago the State of New York established the typical county agricultural fair, a system which has been adopted by the larger number of States, extending to the Rocky Mountains, in Colorado, in 1874. These fairs have been the great educators of the public in all that relates to agriculture, and are to-day important adjuncts and supports of the many State Agricultural Colleges which have been founded since 1862. Other fairs, more varied and comprehensive than the agricultural, embracing more particularly the much wider range of manufactured products, have been held in some of our larger cities for many years, notably those in Boston, of the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia, of the American Institute in New York, of the Maryland Institute in Baltimore, and also the exhibitions of Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, New Orleans, San Francisco and the Manufacturers' Institute of this city. Such local and special fairs and exhibitions as those in this and other countries have culminated in the great international or world's expositions of the past thirty years.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Health Hints.

Sickness of the stomach is most promptly relieved by drinking a teaspoful of hot soda and water. If it brings the offending matter up all the better.

When one has had a fever and the hair is falling off, take a teacup of hot sage, steep in a quart of soft water, strain it off into a tight bottle. Sponge the head with the tea frequently, wetting the roots of the hair.

It is said that by the following simple method almost instant relief of earache is afforded: Put five drops of chloroform on a little cotton and place it in the bowl of a clay pipe, then blow the vapor through the stem into the aching ear.

The following is said to be an infallible cure for cold and hoarseness: Boil two ounces of flaxseed in one quart of water, strain, and then add two ounces of rock candy, a half-pint of brandy or honey, and the juice of three lemons; mix and boil them together. Let it then cool, and bottle for use. Take one cupful before going to bed—the better you drink it the better.

A Railroad Accident.

It was a hot dusty day, when two or three passengers entered the train on the Iowa Division of the Chicago & North-western Road at Bridgewater. Among them, was a stylishly-dressed young man, who wore a stiff white hat, patent-leather shoes, the neatest of cuffs, and shiniest of stand-up collars. He carried a cane, and carefully brushed the dust from the seat in front of me before he sat down.

Just across the aisle, opposite him, sat a tired woman holding a sick baby. I never saw on any face a more discouraged look, or, despairing look than that on the mother's face. The baby was too sick even to cry. It lay, moaning and grasping in its mother's lap, with the dust and cinders flew in at the open door and windows. The hot and dust made traveling, even for strong men, almost unbearable.

I had put down the stylish young man in front of me as a specimen of the dude family, and was making a mental admiration on the probable existence of brains under the new hat, when, to my astonishment, he leaned over the aisle and said to the woman opposite:

"Madam, can I be of any assistance to you? Just let me hold your baby awhile. You look very tired.

The woman seemed much astonished, though the request was made in the politest and most delicate manner.

"Oh, thank you, sir!" said she, tremulously. "I am tired," and her lips quivered.

"I think the baby will come to me," said the young man with a smile; "Poor thing! it's too sick to make any objection. I will hold it carefully, madam, while you fan down and rest awhile. Have you come far?"

"From the Black Hills."

"What! By stage?"

"Yes; but the baby was well when I started. I am on my way home to my friends in the East. My husband—my—"

"Ah! yes! I see," I see" continued the young man, in a sympathetic tone, as he glanced at the bit of crape on the little traveling hat. By this time he had taken the baby, and was holding it in his arms.

"Now you can lie down and rest a little. Have you far to go?"

"To Connecticut," replied the woman, almost with a sob, as she wearily arranged a shawl over a value and prepared to lie down in the seat.

"Ah, Yes, I see! And you haven't money enough to go in a sleeping car, have you, madam? The poor young man's cheeks burned and put one hand over her face, while the tears dropped between her worn fingers.

I looked out of the window, and a mist came over my eyes, while I changed my calculation of the young man's mental ability. He looked thoughtfully and tenderly down at the baby, and in a short time the mother was fast asleep.

A woman sitting across the aisle from me, who had heard as much of the conversation as I had, came and offered to relieve the young man of his charge. "I am ashamed of myself for not offering to take the baby from the mother before. Poor little thing! It is asleep."

"So it is. I'll surrender it to you now, with a cheerful smile."

At this point the train stopped at a station, and the young man rose in his seat, took of his hat, and said, in a low, nervous voice:

Ladies and gentlemen, here is an opportunity for each one of us show that we have been brought up in a Christian home, that we have had Christian fathers and mothers. This poor woman, pointing at the sleeping mother, "has come all the way from the Black Hills, and is on her way to Connecticut, to her husband is dead, and her baby is ill. She hasn't money enough to travel in a sleeping car, and she is all tired out and discouraged. What will you do about it?"

"Do!" cried a big man down near the water-cooler, rising excitedly, "Do! Take up a collection—the American citizen's last resort, and the way the silver dollars, quarters and dimes and ten cent pieces rattled would have done any man good to hear it.

I wish I could describe the look on the woman's face when she awoke, and the amazed look on her face when she tried to thank us all, and failed; she broke down completely. But we didn't need her thanks,

There was a sleeping car on the train, and the young man saw the mother and child transferred to it at once. I did not hear what she said to him when he left her, but it must have been a hearty "God bless you."

More than one of us in that car took the lesson to himself, and I learned that a man stylish as well as poor clothes may cover a noble heart.

THE WEEK'S NEWS — FROM — IRELAND.

Fun Portrait of Trevelyan's Successor.

London, Oct. 30.—Opinions in Irish circles seem divided yet as to whether the Government selected Mr. Trevelyan, the Chief Secretary, as a sop to them or to Mr. Trevelyan; but the result is accepted alike by Irish members of Parliament here, and by agitators at home, as a great triumph. The Irish people are not so much concerned now as formed heretofore about the personal character of the Chief Secretary, knowing or conjecturing he has job to perform beyond the ordinary duties of a Cabinet Minister, and that he will bring under your very eyes, if he can, Mr. Healy's whipjack tongue and Mr. O'Connor's cutting sarcasm during the next few weeks, he will be indeed the model Chief Secretary for whom the Government has been looking; but, if Mr. Gladstone thought the support of the Parnellites would be won by kicking Mr. Trevelyan downstairs, as the phrase goes, he will be much deceived. The Nationalist party have bigger game, and deeper by far than Lord Spencer's head to bag, and an honesty like Mr. Trevelyan's cannot, and will not, be the instrument to bring the Irish cause, as well as wholesale reform of Ireland, to grief.

Lord Rosebery is Coming Over.

London, Nov. 1st.—Already rumors are afloat that Lord Rosebery will come to Ireland. Lord Rosebery has the sympathy of Irishmen because Mr. Gladstone is his friend of Lord Rosebery is Scotch pride when success is literally thrown at his feet, and when success is literally impossible. The inquiries are likely to be attended with a struggle, and, if the medal between the English parties proves form enough on examination, he will be proud to be thrown at the Irish for their mutineers. From the Irish standpoint the situation is the most hopeful that has arisen since the union. An old patriot said to me this morning, as he was watching the ceremony in the House of Lords:

Irish Peers Will Not Give Fair Play.

London, Nov. 1st.—The Limerick trouble has revived in England and Scotland the feeling that the new national land bill, which has been the subject of a great deal of discussion, will not be a fair one. It is generally believed that the Irish peers will not give it fair play. The Irish people are not so much concerned about the Limerick trouble as they are about the Irish peers, who have served with evils in the past. Nov. 4. If the corporation still holds out, it is thought that there will be considerable rioting by its failure to find a legal remedy.

Poets and Humorists.

London, Nov. 2.—Mr. D'Oyly Carte's "Pinafore" succeeded in Dublin, and in Ireland has changed the obnoxious song, "He is an Englishman," to "He is an Irishman," so that now it is hoofly applauded, where formerly it was hissed. Mr. Carte's Pinafore Company

Dublin Journals.

Dublin, Nov. 2.—The United Ireland says that Mr. William O'Brien, the editor of that paper, has applied for a new trial of the suit brought against him by Crown Solicitor Redmond for libel, in which £3,000 damages were awarded.

Gladstone's First Trouble.

London, Nov. 2.—Earl Spencer, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, will remain at his post until the close of the session of Parliament in 1885, when the Earl of Rosebery will probably succeed him. The Irish Executive urges the imprisonment of the Limerick mutineers if they persist in refusing to pay the police tax. He thinks it probable that the Government is about to levy a tax upon citizens without the consent of assembly. Nov. 3. The Limerick mutineers have appealed to Gladstone, Rosebery, the Chief Secretary for Ireland.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Antrim.—Captain Thompson, J. P., of Castlehaven, has been very seriously ill for some time past.

Armagh.—One of the most gallant fights in the Northern province, or, perhaps, in Ireland, was made on the Ballymoyer estate. Within eighteen this week resulting Lord Gosford, Major M'Kinnon and a Protestant land agent, with a strong force of police, visited Lord Gosford. While talking with the agent, they were called to a house where the police resis

MA COLLEEN DHAS CRINTHAN A MO.

BY DUBHOIS

The sun to his lustre is bathing
The heather on summit and valley,
And gilding the lry ustalling,
That twines round the mossbanks; hazy,
As lightly our fleet skip is sailing,
Away o'er the ocean bright green,
That bears us from then and dear Erin,
Ma Colleen dhas Crinthan a mo.

Before me in splendor are towering,
The sun beaten cliffs of the west,
Which, oft times of old had rejoiced
O'Sullivan's fierce battle shout;
But soon from our sight they'll be waning,
As westward in course I go,
After from the hills of my kindred,
Ma Colleen dhas Crinthan a mo.

Oh! fair is the scene, by the twilight,
When speeding from Dirk to Dingle,
But bitter the thoughts of the exiles
When leaving his native Innisfail,
And bitter and heavy the quick tears,
That down o'er my face keep flow,
For Ireland is distance is failing,
Ma Colleen dhas Crinthan a mo.

What torrents of bliss filled my bosom,
And love light flashed forth from your eye,
When you whispered by Dermot's old castle,
You called me your pastor boy
Ah! then I would forth to the battle
Within sight of the banners of Ros
Pulloned the valley of Kilcrea,
Ma Colleen dhas Crinthan a mo.

We fought, but how vain were our efforts
To sever the bonds of the slave,
And those who have bleeding hearts fewer
Away o'er Atlantic's blue wave;
But memory will bring back the days
Thine image wherever I go,
And time of the land of my fathers,
Ma Colleen dhas Crinthan a mo.

SONNET ON LOOKING INTO THE HARBOUR DUBLIN.

Entombed in silence, crowned with shroud-like hights,
No ruffle ends the glass, calm, crystal breast
No sound disturbs the still polished rest
Save where some ripples in their shorward flights
Break on the crags with musical delights.
The tide is ebbed, and the sun, with small
Shadowy beach, that belts of mountain sizes,
Wallin together some shadowy fine—
And tiny circles rim. Oh could I tell
The thoughts that wandering through
Fly this lovely place, I would thoughts
And weave a firm, undying sonnet
Which memory lovingly keeps bright
The years and distance edge sight.

A Carriage Accident

And What Came of It.

The lady was evidently in a hurry, or surely she would have waited a little longer to see the result of the accident—an accident caused by the careless driving of her own coachman. She was seated in a very smart-looking vehicle; and turning a corner near the park her horses had knocked over an old woman. A crowd collected instantly, but the lady instead of alighting merely called a policeman to her and asked if the woman was killed.

No, she was not killed, certainly, but she was dazed and frightened and seemed to have a difficulty in breathing. Of course the lady was not responsible, but for such a common complaint as that. It might not even be the result of the accident. Perhaps the poor soul had always had a difficulty in breathing. It was a very disturbed morning, and the lady was hurrying to catch an appointment. Perhaps the poor soul had always had a difficulty in breathing. It was a very disturbed morning, and the lady was hurrying to catch an appointment. Supposing she did contain breathing should become more difficult, supposing in fact, it should cease—would she, the lady be blamed?

The policeman told her to do so, and so impose her coachman would most certainly be called.

"Very well, here is my address," said the dame in a very fashionable gold-mounted card-case. "Where will they take the two sufferers? To St. George's Hospital? I will call to-morrow and inquire after her. In the meantime there may be things she may want. Give the coachman a fee to shut the shortcut and ask them to look after her.

And the lady drove off, leaving her coachman and drove away leaving her character behind her.

They were not very hard on her after all. Was she not handsome, and rich, and fashionable, and prosperous looking? The coachman was driving a little carelessly. Yes; but was that his master's fault? How was she to know he was endangering the lives of women by, and undeliberately the old woman had been starting about her in a helpless sort of way. Why, had she not been regarding the occupant of this very carriage as in dashed forward, carriage whether or not she stood dangerously near the horses. And the part on a bright sunny afternoon was meant for just such brilliant equipage and handsome ladies; and poor, dazed old bodies should not wander about to look with no one to look after them. So the kindly, though composed matron of fifty-odd folks, was not very hard on the pretty lady. Yet all she meant I overwrote to carefully and drove away so fast.

Yet there was one poor creature who had the misfortune to stand in the way of the high stepping cobs was being borne tenderly enough to the nearest hospital. It was not more than sixty yards of age, although time had bent her upon the ground. But then her hair was scanty and quite white, and her face was deeply furrowed, and much more than all she had that look of helplessness which belongs either to the very old or very young.

A sad had been called and strong arms had lifted her and supported her tenderly on the way.

"You're bearing it bravely, mother," said a rough man who had volunteered his services.

"Don't call me that," she said "I have no child."

"Had a little grave," thought the man.

But when a little later she was comfortably resting in one of the hospital beds she talked rationally enough, and was gently grateful for all the care that was taken of her.

"No, I don't feel no pain," she said in answer to an inquiry of the nurse. "What made them say pain? Wouldn't you at least remember that her father had forgiven her, and tell her what he said of her when he was dying?"

The old woman's jaw dropped, in that terrible spasm of rigidness—death had made a terrible forward spring. The end was very sudden. Her eyes were bright and hooky, and useless as she shook her black frame as she spoke.

"He said, 'My poor little girl, my poor little girl, may God forgive her and take her to His arms once more!'

There was silence for a moment. Merciful hands gathered the feeble form to her breast, and with a white face but dry eyes wiped the blue lips from which the life had gone out.

"I feel better, dearie," said the old woman at last. "I am going to see my old man."

"Don't go without a word of forgiveness," pleaded the lady passionately. "How will you bear to meet him and say that with your dying breath you cursed your child? Think when her time comes there will be no loving husband waiting for her. She may not have a friend here to smooth her pillow. Oh, dear, don't die without a word."

The faint breath came fainter and fainter. A visible change stole over the grey face. Twice she tried to speak. It was a struggle against death. For a moment she lay still that the lady thought the end had come. Then the dim eyes opened once more, and, with a desperate effort came the words:

"My poor little girl! May God—forgive—this—her—to—his—father—"

AN ADVENTURE IN THE HALL OF ST. PETER'S.

It was one August day—the twenty-first of a certain anniversary—that a party of friends found themselves in the shadow of the Cathedral of St. Peter at Rome. As we lounged about in the twilight of the basilica, with its vast spaces, its ever-burning glowing square cubicals, the tapering obelisk in the middle—as like the one in New York as possible—the fountains spurting up their water-clear like great snow-white tiger lilies striped with rainbows, and the innumerable colonnades of the sculptor-architect, Bernini, closing round the front of the church like the claws of a gigantic crab. Every cubbie stone in the square had seen a thirty gleam right into our optic nerves and light up the face of the church till its native colors seemed on fire. There was no coolness anywhere to be found, except in the shadowed aisles of the ever-planing fountains, or behind the pillars of the colonnades. A glance at the Tiber river near by made you recoil from its drab-smell, foul that seemed to boil and coze sluggishly in its sun. The Castle of St. Angelo, on the other side, seemed to emerge from the fiskiness, regained a part of its original proportions, and lifted its head proudly out of with the relics of the Cesars, over which the archangel-weathercock exulted in the sun, and shone like a mountain flame. The sky, absolutely peeled of clouds, was a blue vault, like blue crystal in which molten turquoise was all aquiver.

Was it any wonder that we had fled to the all embracing cathedral church of the world for refuge against the beleaguering light!

Here within, all was dim and twilight-like and cool, and the air was fragrant with fading incense was sweet. It was delightful to touch the cold marbles, to hold the moist wings of the "young-eyed cherubim" and rephold the mighty basin of new basile, to put the palm of the hand against the spy rotchry and the shadowing mahachinia.

Away up yonder, in the vast arch of the dome, the feathery quill of St. Mark seemed to wait down coolness upon the pilgrims below, the tombs of princes and prophets and were one cloaks round with visions in comparison with the heat and laughlin-mass without, the chapels behind the iron gratings were redolent of mountain breezes in the coolness which they suggestively breathed upon. The shiny tons of the interior of the church was tranquilizing. No pilgrim, just from the glare and heat and blood and fire on the sensitive floor or contents in their gloaty forwarded the lusts and passions of the sun. The air was rich and still and filtered, the pieces of white glass were nebelous; the long-drawn aisles were forest vistas full of shade. Valhalla, one could not be minor or lambrous in such a place. Yet, after a dinner than the perfect arch of the dome crowded with its far withdrawn recesses. Had it been a cathedral of ice with pillars and arches of Turkish stones, it could not have been more refreshed.

"Let's go up into the roof," cried one of the party, wearying of the monotony of the church.

No sooner said than done. A courteous ecclesiastic guided us up the inclined plane of the Vatican, and he left because we had promised that we would ride up on horseback or roll up in a carriage and four.

"Take us to the roof of the dome," cried another, thinking his hasty outcrop of the word, "and the lady." Did you always live in London?

"No, dearie; we lived in the country when we first—"

"Married," said the lady. "

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

May God bless and direct through the intercession of St. Francis de Sales the pious undertaking of the Catholic press, the writers and publishers of which have for their object the cause of religion, the rights and claims of the Holy Apostolic See, and adhere to its decisions and to its doctrines and fidelity.—PIUS IX.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the chief agent in popularizing ideas, and, perhaps, the most powerful means of influencing the masses of the world. In our time, religious journalism is not only a useful and serious occupation, not only a work, being possible to the writer of society, but a work of apostolate. What is, and what ought to be the object of Catholic journalism? To defend religious principles."—Card. Wiseman's Lect. on Catholic Journalism.

Farm and Home.

THE WIFE'S RECOMPENSE.

They tell me I have no wages
For the daily work I do,
For the goodly share
Of toil and care
The changing seasons through.

I smile at their crazy assertions,
With never a sigh or a groan,
For the wages given,
The gift of Heaven
Are worth better than I.

My husband's smile is the morning
And his parting kiss the night
To the shining face
For a long, long day
As my heart can prove.

And then his dear returning
Brings so much peace and joy
To the little kid
That I count the gold
Any time but whence alloy.

Then the kisses of our children,
And the prattle in between,
With the merry play
That ends the day,
Makes such a home like some.

Then I retain sit and wonder
How people can be content
With richer great
And wealthier state,
Without any blessing sent.

My home and my little children,
So bright, and sweet and easy;
And my husband's love
My wages prove,
And I'm proud as a queen today.

Household Hints.

TOMATO PIE.—Peel and slice some fine, ripe tomatoes; sprinkle over them a little salt; let them stand a few minutes and pour off the juice; add half a cup of sugar, two-thirds of a cup of sweet cream, one egg well beaten, and flavor with nutmeg or the grated rind of a fresh lemon. Make a rich crust; roll out very thin; fold, and bake in a moderate oven half an hour.

SODA CAKES.—Rub a quarter of a pound of butter into half a pound of flour; mix with a little water, enough to form a dough. Roll out into thin round cakes, prick them, lay them in shallow tins, and bake.

PEACHES AND CREAM.—Peel and slice the peaches just before sending to table. Cover the glass dish containing them to exclude the air as much as possible, as they soon change color. Do not sugar them in the dish—they then become preserves, not fresh fruit. Pass the powdered sugar and cream with them.

POTATO PONE.—Wash, peel and grate two pounds of potatoes; add an ounce each of sugar and butter melted one teaspoonful of salt and pepper; mix well together, place it in a baking-dish, and put into a moderately quick oven until done and nicely browned.

TO PREPARE CUCUMBERS.—Take two hundred or three hundred, lay them on a dish, and let them remain eight or nine hours; then drain, laying them in a jar, pour boiling vinegar upon them. Place near the fire, covered with vine-leaves. If they do not become sufficiently green, strain off the vinegar, boil it, and again pour it over them, covering with fresh leaves. Continue till they become green as you wish.

HARD CORN.—Take six ears of field corn, six twelve ears of sugar corn. Cut the grain partly off and scrape the rest; add one tablespoonful of butter, a tablespoonful of sugar, and a teaspoonful of salt. Add three well together, and add a pint of new milk. Bake in a dish that you can set on the table without disturbing it.

HOMINY.—Wash the hominy; cut the top off, and put them in boiling water and cook until tender; when they are done drop into cold water a minute; then peel and slice them; season with butter, cayenne pepper, salt and cover with boiling milk.

[illegible] bread by some good housekeepers is not more appetizing if a nice stuffing is made as if for turkey or duck. Break the bones of the "fish" so that you can fold it over, put the stuffing between, and sewn them together with strong thread. Baste often, and serve with brown gravy.

GINGER SNAPS.—Half cupful lard, half cupful butter, one large cupful of brown sugar, one cupful water, one tablespoonful ginger, one cupful water, one tablespoonful of salt, one teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful of cinnamon and clove, one quart of flour, 11-2 teaspoonfuls baking powder. Rub the smooth paste the lard, butter and sugar; then rub it into the flour and baking powder sifted together. Mix into a firm dough with the flour and extracts. Roll out the dough thin on a floured board, cut out with a round biscuit cutter, and bake on greased pans, in a hot, steady oven, for eight minutes.

GREEN CORN STEWED.—Cut from the ceb, and stew twenty minutes in boiling water, using as little water as the corn can be stewed in without burning. Cover with rich milk and stew until quite tender, adding, before taking up, bits of butter rolled in flour.—Season with pepper and salt to taste; boil five minutes longer and serve.

Matters Matrimonial.

Our young women are cautioned against marrying dissipated young men; but with equal, if not greater propriety, may not young men be cautioned against marrying idle and extravagant young women?—for a great many unhappy marriages are the result of the latter as well as the former.

Foolish mothers too often act injudiciously by indulging their daughters in their fondness for the giddy pleasures of life, and allow an almost unbridled habit of indulgence, not dreaming that they are, therefore unfitted for the stern realities of life which must surely await them.

Let them marry wealth or poverty, they will be unable to support either condition.

Let them remain single, and life will become more and more burdensome as it advances.

But once married wife, husband, before you wonder oddly why your wife don't get along with the household responsibilities "as your mother did."

Why is doing her best, and no woman can endure that best to be slighted.

Remember the long weary nights she sat up with the little babe that died.

Remember the love and care she bestowed upon you when you had that long fit of illness.

Do you think she is made out of cast iron.

Wait—wait in silence and forbearance, and the light will come back to her eye—the old light of the old days.

Wait wife, before you speak reproachfully to your husband when he comes home late and weary, and "out of sorts."

He has worked hard for you all day—perhaps far into the night.

He has wrestled hard in hand with care, selfishness, and greed, and all the demons that follow in the train of money-making.

Let home be another atmosphere entirely.

Let him see that there is no other place in the world where he can find the peace, the quiet, and pleasure of life.

No Cats.

There is not a single rat within the limits of the town of Leadville, Colorado. Cats have been imported there by the hundreds, and in all varieties of color and size, but not one has ever survived the sudden change of residence. However, as there are no rats and mice in Leadville, there is no real need of cats, and it makes little difference whether they live or die. The thin atmosphere at that altitude (10,200 feet) is as fatal to the rattenkin as their fur, and the inhabitants are thus mercifully spared the inflictions of both.

The Boneless Man.

Two days after leaving Barbourville, writes a correspondent of the Cincinnati Times-Star, I spent the night at the cabin of a poor farmer among the hills, and during a social family conversation, in which I participated after supper some one inadvertently spoke of Hector Davis, "the man without bones." I immediately asked what was meant by the expression, when my host explained that Hector Davis was one of their "neighbors," living some three miles farther on among the mountains, and that he usually had not one bone in his body. As I expressed some scepticism, he recommended to show me over to Hector's the next morning. We knocked at the door of Davis' cabin about nine o'clock next day, and the first thing that struck my attention upon entering was a middle-aged man sitting half upright and supported by a rude and peculiarly shaped framework. He was introduced to me as Hector Davis. He soon fell into conversation with him, and found him to be a man of fair intelligence, and eager to tell all about himself in a voice that was as strong as my own. I creeped his hand upon first entering, but his fingers all rolled up together like a cabbage-leaf in a nearly sort of way that made me glad to let go of them. Taking hold of his limbs they yielded to the pressure until they were flattened out to twice their proper width. The only indication of bone was in his skull, which, while pliable almost as shoe-leather, still offered a kind of protection to the poor fellow's brain. His neck was limber as a dishclothe, and when his head was released from its support, which was something in the shape of a similar scoltrumus used in photograph galleries, it rolled helplessly about upon his shoulders like a football. His arms dropped at his side, but with the aid of its muscles it was enabled to partly raise the forearm, although the hand curled over limply, and as for the whole a sort of rigsag shape. He shifted of his slipper and requested me to step on his foot. I did so, and it at once grind itself out until it looked as if a railroad train had passed over it. It slowly resumed its natural shape, but it was a half-hour before he was able to get the foot in his slipper again. "I know you would like to try my leg in a knot!" suggested. I found no difficulty in performing this feat, while my friend accomplished the same with the other leg, and after we had also tied knots in both his arms, he presented a very ugly problem indeed, and one that would have set a professional contortionist crazy. When we had unravelled all the knots and straightened his limbs again, he requested us to lift him gently from his framework and place him on the floor. This was a very easy task, for his body weighed about in our arms like an eel, and it was only by securing a firm grip upon his clothing that we managed to keep him from falling. We finally succeeded in straightening him out upon the floor, and then my friend, who seemed to understand the business man's programme, unlipped a barrel standing near, and out which I afterwards learned contained turnips, of some proceeded to roll off over the prostrate Davis, from his toes to his chin, and back again to his toes. The only manifestation of pain he made was when the barrel passed over his heart and lungs, but it left him in a horrible shape. I can only describe it by comparing it to that of a man made of mud, and then thrown out to harden against a wall. But I had no time to contemplate his features, as it almost immediately called to us in a rather weak voice to "roll him up." This was proceeded to do by doubling his head over his chest and then continuing to roll in as up as you would a carpet, until we came to his feet, and he formed a perfect cylinder about as large as a half barrel. A voice feebly piped from the centre of the cylinder for us to unroll him, and as soon as had him once more spread out over the floor. While his body was among the former shape, it was not quite so ludicrous as when he was in this shape, the effect of his body proceedings hitting in his funny chest, that Hector, who was forty years old, had always had sound health and provided well for her until five years ago. He first observed a softening of the bones of the toes, and this rapidly spread to all parts of his anatomy, although, beyond making him helpless, he never experienced any inconvenience from it. All his vital organs performed their functions properly, and he believed he would live to a good age. She had a younger son, then in the field at work, who assisted her in handling him, and altogether they got along comfortably. She did "not know what the doctors might think of Hector," as she had not seen a doctor up in them thar hills for eight onto twenty year."

Where do the Jesuits get all their Money?

This rather pertinent question was once made to Her. Father Kerkhove, S. J., a very popular, as well as saintly, preacher, who died in Belgium some years ago. The following Sunday he ascended the pulpit, and after giving his sermon, told the audience of the question proposed to him, and added that if each person present would bring another with him the following Sunday he would publicly answer it.

As might be expected, on the appointed day not only was the church filled to overflow, but a large crowd stood at the door; all were anxious to hear the answer to the pulpit question. When the hour arrived, Father Kerkhove ascended the pulpit and delivered one of the most eloquent sermons that lasted over an hour, and which was listened to with greatest attention. He closed his discourse, gave his blessing and prepared to leave the pulpit, seemingly forgetting the all-important subject that had brought together so large an audience, when suddenly turning, he said: "Oh! I had almost forgotten my promise. You want to know Where the Jesuits get all their money, that they always build such fine churches and never want anything. Now, as I did not know myself, I went to my Superior, and said, Tr. Superior, where do the Jesuits get all their money? Shall I tell you what answer he gave me? Here it is. At this moment the most perfect stillness reigned in the church, the people had their very breath, expecting some great disclosure. "He said, 'Father Kerkhove, that is none of your business.' Now, if it is none of my business, I, who am an old man, ought to be able to manage it for many years, than my dear brethren, it surely can be none of yours.' In the Name of the Father, etc.

It is related of the same Father, that a lady one day approached him for having once omitted to raise his hat in salutation of the country which he met her in the street. His answer was characteristic of the man. "Madam, is it possible, will I never pay it will never happen again." From that time on he never failed to raise his hat out with uncovered head. He could be seen every day, in the streets of the city, no matter what the weather, with his hat uncovered but under his arm.—Stephens' Friend.

What is Christian Marriage?

THE QUESTION ANSWERED BY A PAULIST FATHER.

THE SACRAMENTAL CHARACTER OF THE CONTRACT DEFINED.

Sinful Marriages Designated.

Rev. Father Searle, C.S.P., recently preached a sermon on Christian Marriage in St. Paul's Church New York, in which the readers of the MONITOR will find many points of interest and instruction:

My Christian married man or woman is which at least one of the parties is by the reception of the sacrament of Baptism a Christian, and therefore by right a member of the one true Church, which is entered by the door of the one baptism established by our Lord. It is only about Christian marriage that the Church claims a right to legislate, in the proper sense of that term. The laws of the Church, like those of any other kingdom or society, apply only to her own subjects. It is true that by an equality of interpretar of the divine law she can and does speak authoritatively both as to that part of it which is eternal and immutable and necessarily governs all men, and also to that other part which comes from special divine enactment, which may vary with times and circumstances, and may apply, though not necessarily, to others as well as to Christians. Even, therefore, about marriage in general the Church may have something to say, as for instance, when she decrees divorces unlawful and invalid for the unbaptized as well as her own subjects; but as her principles on these and consequent points are pretty well understood and loyally accepted among us, it is hardly necessary to dwell upon them at present. It is Christian marriage and the laws and teachings of the Church about it, as distinguished from marriage in general, which we have now to consider.

It is with regard to it that the special contract between Church and State arises.

THE STATE CLAIMS ALMOST EVERYWHERE,

as it does here among us, that it has the right to fix the conditions which determine its validity and legality; that any parties whom it pronounces able to contract marriage can validly and lawfully do so, and that those whom it forbids cannot, and of course it makes no distinction between baptized and the unbaptized in this respect. The Catholic Church, on the other hand, asserts that it alone has this power where its subjects are concerned. This is the issue between the two powers, and a very important one it is.

Now, this claim of the Church is Catholic doctrine which we as Catholics must accept. It is not merely my opinion or that of some other priest: it is the voice of the Pope speaking as the successor of St. Peter, and that of our Lord through him. That sacramental unions of Christians belong to the ecclesiastical tribunals, and that the Church claims a right to legislate in the proper sense of that term. FOR THE MONITOR.

LADY GRACE O'MALLEY.

"LADY GRACE O'MALLEY," nothing more, carved on the old stone tablet,
In an Ulster Island Abbey, by mosses overgrown;
"Lady Grace O'Malley," Quietly the sea spoke to her,
Where Clew Bay waves, like sentinels, their watch around her keep.

There in the fresh of Spring-time the shamrock starts the grass,
And the wild birds on the bushes light as to their nests they pass;
There in the golden Autumn eve the lonely Islanders come,
And tell her grand, old story as they rest beside her tomb.

There shone, in days of glory, the banner, the banner of the Isles,
Just like the fabled plume of Argan, watching her from her home;
I wonder if the Pirate's" still guard those shining lights,
Which oft I've seen flashing on wild, Irish, stormy nights.

Oh! when the winds of Winter the sea moan in the caves,
And despairs to an angry roar the moan of the waves;
Wild, weird voices from their ocean home the spirits of Clew Bay
Lash the billows, boiling foam, the glittering wave of spray.

They crash upon Gear "Inislotrk" and thunder in Achill's caves,
While from its height the grand, old "Rock" looks down on "Clearnaven," the sea
Yet, undisturbed, the sea spoke, while Mayo's mountains and valleys
Echo "Croghpatrick" laughs at Lynchburgy, on the "Twelve Pins" crowns in snow.

All Irishmen should know her story—how she fought in Ireland's cause;
Where or on the ocean waves, she met English men or Saxon
Fighting for Faith and Fatherland, as light as O'Malley weight, Fighting against England's power—as Irish and American should.

PADRE JUNIPERO SERRA.

THE PIONEER OF CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION IN CALIFORNIA.

[Written by M. M. Skidmore (Marie) for the Sister's account given in St. Mary's Academy, Chicago, on Monday, Nov. 24th, by the members of the Sunday Scholars.]

When the Padre Junipero Serra
Met on the Thousand Pine
To the enlightened callings beyond it,
Where thousands are thronging today,
Its mates hastened to meet him,
Its wigwam sweltered than where
The unfolded walls of San Carlos
Rose on the hillside like
He came from the Mariana Missions,
Where long he had toiled with his brush,
The brown-robed monks of Saint Francis,
Who were sent to the Indian Isles.
He came from the Sons of Loyola,
The zealous Jesuits, who
Had brought the Religion of Salvation
To the Indian Islands long ago.
Who have learned rather than from
In the Mother-praise, over the sea,
And the pioneer Padre of Mexico
Were freed from the vineyards to fan
Were the new-planted field of the Master.
In the Southern Peninsula half,
Where the brave Padre Salvatierra
Had reared the first temple of prayer,
And on the much land of Francisco
To our bright El Dorado were sent—
Of the Apostles to gather,
The divine laborer were sent.
All alone of the Indian Mission,
Left the Padre Junipero alone,
Prepared for the great San Diego,
The Pueblo of Indian Mission,
Then, on to the Northland they journeyed,
To the unexplored regions alike;
Where, over the proud mate of the stranger,
And the fruits of the gardens shining,
Thus, Padre Junipero Serra,
By Monterey's enlightened Bay
Saw a lovely, yet desolate
Where thousands of Christians
Gave Sunday the imaginary
The photographs will be
Hide, even in exile so
Still on, Sunday, the wilderness
With longing wanted,
Lonely, hopeless, and
The Padre Junipero spoke—

Half a hundred the same principal
Retained over that oak covered land.
And no figures stood forth in the landscape,
Save the lithe Indian band—
Lithe, lithe through the wilderness wide
Of silence, the Indian band—
With eyes superval be rifled
Many stones of the Crucified Shepherd!
Come home to the Tree Fold of Christ!
Spread above for their mates, to
The Blood of the Mar-tred suffered
Of the wood of that forest entirely
Dark forms through the wilderness
Of where Sunday is a summer of Mercy,
And bowed to Love's tender control.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1884.

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

Max Müller and Ernest Renan through the Intermediate of St. Ethelbert, the Saxon Chronicle, and Bishop Ireland, on the subject of Catholic journals and the defense of the cause of religion, the rights and liberty of the Holy Apostolic See, and advice to the faithful and people with directions and fidelity.—Pius IX.

"Journalism is the greatest power under heaven; and power is the chief agent in popularizing knowledge. Journalism is the great educator of the world. In our view, religious journalism is not only a useful and serious occupation, not only a work indispensable to the welfare of society, but a work of the highest dignity. What is and what ought to be the office of the Catholic journalist? It is to defend and defend the truth, whatever it may be—science, art, the Divine Revelation."—SISTER, THEODORA MORGAN CRITCHES.

The Rosary and the Souls in Purgatory.

(SECOND ARTICLE.

Would to Heaven that we had the same zeal and piety that we read many souls possessed, and we would labor more earnestly for the liberation from the expiatory flames of those who ought to be most dear to us. We are informed that the Blessed John Massias, a Dominican lay-brother, delivered during his life time, not one million of souls from Purgatory: he himself so declared on his death-bed at the convent of this Confessor. Amongst other acts of devotion that he was in the habit of practising for the deliverance of the suffering souls, he recited daily one entire Rosary. Surely the deceased Rosarians must derive immense benefits from the almost continuous prayers that are recited by the associates! Every Hail Mary that escapes from the lips of the members of the Confraternity is like a drop of dew and moderates the heat of the devouring flames. The Rosary itself is a mysterious harp represented by that of David at whose sound the agitations of Saul were quieted and disappeared. It has often happened that souls from Purgatory have appeared to parents and exhorted them to be assiduous in reciting the Rosary, for, remarked they, there is no means after the Holy Mass that is more capable of obtaining for their relief or deliverance than the Rosary. Here we may be asked if those now in Purgatory who did not belong to the Confraternity while they were living, can now be made to participate in all the riches of the Rosary? Pope Alexander VI. (Illiec) has permitted the living Rosarians to have the names of their deceased relations and friends recorded in the Register of the Confraternity. On bodes down the condition such deceased Christians partake fully and freely of all the advantages of the privileged altar, as well as all other benefits accruing from membership.

We will now relate a few examples which are extracted from some of our approved manuals of the Rosary, and which have been productive of much good.

"After a few days," said the Holy Virgin to Blessed Alan de la Roche, "I liberate from Purgatory the souls of the members of the Confraternity of the Rosary." (Hist. Sac. p. Cit. Part. II.) St. Catherine of Rieci often saw our Lady of the Rosary conducting to Heaven a great many souls that she had just liberated from the fiery prison. Young Alexandre who had been saved in a most miraculous manner from hell, revealed to St. Dominic that she would have had to pass many years in Purgatory, both by reason of the tragical death that she had occasioned to her unfortunate victims, and also on account of the vain adornments she had employed on herself for the purpose of destroying the purity of many, but that she expected to be delivered therefrom quite soon through the merits of the Confraternity of the Rosary in which she had the happiness of participating. In fact, fifteen days from this apparition she came again to St. Dominic, and addressed him in this: "I come, O good Father, in the name of the souls in Purgatory: Recommend to all to have the names of their beloved dead registered in the book of the Confraternity: they will thus be enabled, like the living, to share in all the advantages of the Rosary, and such dead will be made to enjoy the beatitude of Heaven so much the sooner." When she had thus spoken, St. Dominic saw her ascending in triumph to the Kingdom of the Just."

From the example just cited we can see how the term of expiation in Purgatory may be abridged! Irreprochable witnesses have testified under oath that certain souls from Purgatory, marked on their foreheads with red crosses, appeared to persons who were resting the Rosary for their benefit, and that those souls exhorted their living friends to persevere in this salutary practice, the most efficacious after the Eucharistic oblation for the relief of the souls confined in Purgatory." (Cornelii a Snack, de Rosario, Serm. 15.)

A person of piety who had been dead for some time appeared one day to one of her intimate friends, and said to her: "Have my name registered in the book of the Confraternity of the Rosary. On account of my sins I am condemned to fifteen years in Purgatory, but if I have the happiness of having my name recorded, though I am dead, in the list of the Sisters of the Confraternity, I shall be delivered sooner by reason of the incredible number of rosaries that are recited for them. Comply with my request, and recite the Rosary for me until I appear again to you." The wishes of the dead person were attended to, and she did not have to wait longer than fifteen days to return to her friends. "Through the influence of the most poly Rosary," said she, "God has changed the years of my expiation into days." After having returned sincere thanks to her living friend, she disappeared only to enter into the company of the glorified. (Id. ibid).

Father Peter Busie, a Jesuit, had the custom of reciting the Rosary for the souls in Purgatory every day, even before he entered the Society. But on one occasion, through forgetfulness, he went to bed without having offered his customary tribute to the Most Blessed Virgin, and he soon fell into a deep sleep. But he left himself suddenly waked up by a young man who, whilst placing a Rosary in his hands, said to him: "The souls in Purgatory are seeking for the alms that you are in the habit of giving them." He immediately remembered that he had not recited his Rosary that day. Grieved at his forgetfulness, he at once began to repair his fault by saying his prayers in his room. But a mysterious hand held hold of him, forced him out of the house, and led him before the Church of the Rosary. As the door was closed he knelt before it, and recited the rosary of Mary with great devotion. He was quite consoled by what he had done, and on being just then attacked by some evil doers, he was miraculously delivered from danger by the Queen of Rosaries. (Auxeumus, Aphris Scandinavii, Sodalpartie, Cap. IX.)

A Valuable Contribution to Catholic Literature.

THE CENTENARY OF CATHOLICITY IN KENTUCKY. By Rev. Jos. J. Walsh, author of "Lectures on Kentucky Catholics," etc., Louisville: Charles A. Rogers, 1884.

It is a good sign to see such works as this produced by the Catholic press, and now that Kentucky is a century old in the Catholic history, this volume will be hailed with delight by all Catholics who desire to familiarize themselves with the history of the Church in a portion of the U. S. that many whose ancestors emigrated many of the most stalwart Catholics now living in other portions of the Union, and who are the pioneers of the early Catholic settlers in Kentucky.

This volume contains not only a vast amount of historical information, but it is also interspersed with incidents connected with the settlement of Kentucky which add additional interest to its perusal. We select two incidents as specimens of the character of the people who first settled in Daniel Boone's Discovery:

"The family of Samuel Davis, residing in 1782 in the county of Lincoln, was surprised by a party of Indians, husband and father was but a little from his own door. Returning, after a brief absence, he was horrified to find the cabin filled with Indians. Threats were made, followed by one of the band, he managed to escape to the house of his brother, about five miles distant. His appearance told the tale of his distress before he could tell it himself. Obtaining a horse and accompanied by the entire force of the settlement, he made his way back to his cabin only to find it tenantless. There being no appearance of bloodshed about the premises, it was at once conjectured that the Indians had carried off his wife and children. Taking up the pursuit, they had not gone far when they encountered the party, who had attacked the blooding of a child. The animal belonged to the family, and had been wounded by the Indians in their retreat to Hill's. Knowing by this circumstance that they must be in the vicinity of the savages, they pushed forward and soon had them in view. Two Indians had the woman and children in charge, and these discovered the approach of the whites and gave the alarm. One of these latter, hastily advancing, took down the condition such deceased Christians partake fully and freely of all the advantages of the privileged altar, as well as all other benefits accruing from membership.

"Mrs. Merriman also wrote from the French capital that the rent of the unused convent near Sacred Heart Hyacinthe used to exhibit, was $7,000 a year, and she very frightfully informed her female friends in San Francisco to keep Paul and his parents in the front rank of Parisian society—expressed a society of female reformers in this city who were to furnish the funds while Paul and his parents and the petroleuses Fire were to do the "reforming" so long as a red cent remained!

At the last meeting in this city the lady lecturer announced to the two other ladies who made up the audience of "reformers" of the Roman Catholic Church, that she paid ex-Vice Hyacinthe $1,000 and that the funds on hand would only permit of a solitary dollar's worth of "reforming" as soon as the funds left in the treasury The lady secretary of the reforming trio then read a letter which she had received from the secretary of the Paris society, in which that lady set forth that $20 was all the coin the Gallican church had left when it consoled its lonkatting tour in Rome.

The Late A. M. Sullivan.

The Dublin Freeman's Journal, in the course of a lengthy biographical sketch of the lately deceased Irish patriot who was a credit to his Church and an honor to the land that gave him birth," inserts the following pen-picture of his first experience in prison life, as sketched by the gifted hand of A. M. Sullivan himself as he stood alone in his cell when the jailer had turned the key which locked him out from all he loved in the world:

"I gave one glance around the narrow space, with its floor of stone and window hardly barred. What! was this only a dream—a nightmare? Was I not lying on my bed at home in the twilight? Behind Pale was the hills which would call for me in vain? My wife, my darling—I had spoke the rude prison pallet and felt for an instant as if my heart would break. Suddenly I sorrow to my feet. Hold! I exclaimed almost aloud, 'is this my portion? Hey light is my lot, how trivial is my suffering, mental or physical, must be compared by those born to better men, wherever or whenever in any age or clime the struggle for national liberty is present? I was already sustained by the sentiments of manhood, and resolved to accept with composure the penalty I had incurred."

This spirit evinces the true soul of sterling patriotism, and, as the Freeman truly says, "Honesty and firmly was that penalty borne. The release of A. M. Sullivan at the end of three months was received with universal joy and, as usual, the people delighted to honor the man the Government had struck down. He was nominated Lord Mayor of Dublin, but declined the honor. A pecuniary subscription was started for him. Sullivan was almost Quixotic in his absolute disregard for material consideration: he stopped the subscription, and devoted several hundred pounds which had been collected to the fund which he originated, and which gave us the noble Grattan statue. When, a little time afterwards, the Home Rule movement rose above the horizon, he took a leading place in its ranks; and in the early battles at Longford, Kerry, and elsewhere, he was always in the fore front of the fray. Finally, when the general election of 1874 came, Louth sent him to Parliament to represent her, the coolest hung forever unmovable from the fact that he, upon this occasion, defeated the so-called powerful and popular of the Queen's Minister's in Ireland, the now Lord Carlingford. Mr. Sullivan's success in Parliament was an entire success. His eloquence delighted all sides, and thus it was that, while on the one hand he never yielded a jot or tittle in his devotion to Ireland, on the other, he was able "the applause of listening Senates to command. His maiden speech was praised by Cabinet Ministers and ex-Cabinet Ministers, but it won plaudits he valued ten thousand times more. "I wish," wrote John Mitchell, "to felicitate you upon your first speech in Parliament. It was so strong, so happy, that I wished it not only to be your first but your last in that place."

Mrs. Loysen's Latest Dodge.

It is really remarkable how easily some people can be duped into the idea that there is great need of "reformation" within the Catholic Church, and that all that is needed in order to effect it is to have certain rich people contribute liberally some in order to support in comparative idleness some itinerant ex-priest who may at the time be going round the world after the manner of Satan—"seeking whom he may devour." The reforming crew at present seems to have become chronic with a few people who were humbugged by Mrs. Loyson and her liaison the mule manager of the Gallican cause. This small but select coterie of conservers of the Catholic Church held a convention in this city recently, at which the reforming brigade was represented by their ladies whose zeal in the organization of what they call the "Hyacinthe Catholic Reform Society," would be more commendable if used to reform poor old Hyacinthe himself! It seems that Mrs. Merriman—M. Loyson's presiding partner—with a foreknowledge that "funds" would be required from San Francisco to keep Paul and his parents in the front rank of Parisian society—organized a society of female reformers in this city who were to furnish the funds while Paul and the petroleuses Fire were to do the "reforming" so long as a red cent remained!

At the last meeting in this city the lady lecturer announced to the two other ladies who made up the audience of "reformers" of the Roman Catholic Church, that she paid ex-Vice Hyacinthe $1,000 and that the funds on hand would only permit of a solitary dollar's worth of "reforming" as soon as the funds left in the treasury The lady secretary of the reforming trio then read a letter which she had received from the secretary of the Paris society, in which that lady set forth that $20 was all the coin the Gallican church had left when it consoled its lonkatting tour in Rome.

THIRD PLENARY COUNCIL

Editorial Notes.

The Plenary Council now in session in Baltimore will close its labors on Sunday the 30th inst., and the sermon on that occasion will be preached by Most Rev. P. W. Riordan, Coadjutor Archbishop of this Diocese.

An addition still, it is stated, be made to the capital sum by which it was to be created in the forthcoming Consistory, and whose names have already been announced. According to the Paris Univers, this prelate is Bishop O'Connor, of Nebraska.

A small chapel of great historic and artistic interest has been discovered at Catalonia. It was built in the fourteenth century, and in it was celebrated, in the presence of the King of Spain, a Thanksgiving Mass, on the occasion of the discovery of America by Columbus.

—The recent changes in the Belgian Ministry will not affect the understanding arrived at between the Holy See and M. Malou, the late Premier, who has with touching devotion followed his "unpopular" dismissal—popular to the Infidel members of the Masonic Lodges—into temporary retirement.

—The Marquis of Loudonderry died recently. He was one of the landowners of Ireland where he owned 23,000 acres in the County Down. In case any of our readers would like to name a baby after him we have to inform them that his full name was George Henry Robert Charles William Vane-Tempest!

—We are happy to hear that the Cemetery Commissioners of Paris have marked out a plot of ground, 6 feet by 6 in the O'Connell Circle, for the interment of the remains of the late Rev. Dr. Cahill. This is most satisfactory, as not alone did Dr. Cahill express a wish to be buried in Ireland, but he also desired that his body might be deposited near O'Connell's remains.

—Immediately on its becoming known in Catania that Cardinal-San Felice, Archbishop of Naples, had given all he had to his own afflicted flock, had despoiled himself of his cross and sent it to the Archbishop of Catania to be sold in aid of the sufferers there, a number of Catania citizens went to Monsignor Dusmet, the Archbishop, with 2,000 francs to redeem the cross, regretting that at the same time they had the Cardinal to take it back as a gift from them in memory of grateful Catania.

—In a letter at Auriouville, three miles from Tribes Hill, Montgomery County, N. Y., it is to be erected a new Jesuit shrine, to be named Repose Martyrum—Our Lady of Martyrs. It marks the spot were Pere Jogues and his companions were martyred. A society of Jesuits, suffered martyrdom at the hands of the Mohawk Indians, among whom they had come to labor. The locality was determined upon by General Clark of Auburn, after—

"Long years of search
Through Western New York and the Agent Iroquois
Where Clarke in vain
Elizabeth must go, and fair will recret it
And speed the good work!

Cardinal McCloskey's Position.

A "Constant Reader" wishes the Catholic Standard to "settle an argument" in which he is involved with several others. The question in dispute is, "whether Cardinal McCloskey is or is not the head of the Catholic Church in America?"

Leo XIII., the Sovereign Pontiff of the Church, is the Visible Head of the Catholic Church in America and throughout the world.

Our inquirer means, we suppose, to ask whether His Eminence Cardinal McCloskey has precedence and authority over all the Archbishops and Bishops in the United States. The fact of his being Cardinal, of itself, entitles him to no such precedence and confers upon him no such power. The office and dignity of Cardinal have nothing to do with his relations to the Church in this country, and give him no special authority or power over other Archbishops and Bishops. They make him a member of the Sacred College of Cardinals at Rome and one of the Sovereign Pontiff's official Counsellors.

But though the mere fact of being a Cardinal gives Cardinal McCloskey no ecclesiastical authority in the United States, he possesses, we believe, such authority as regards certain specific matters, by special appointment and authorization of the Sovereign Pontiff of the Church.

The Presidential Question Settled.

The official count of the vote of New York having resulted in a majority for the Democratic Presidential Electors, the next President and Vice President of these United States will be Grover Cleveland and Thomas A. Hendricks. It is to be hoped that partisan spirit will now be laid aside, and every citizen who values the prosperity of the country above mere party will give that moral support to the Democratic Administration which every good citizen owes to those legally called to rule over the destinies of this great nation during the next four years.

—Several of the Italian journals recount instances of conversion among prelates and others who have been led to reflect upon the error of their ways mainly by the splendid devotion to duty shown by so many heroic priests and nuns during the prevalence of the cholera epidemic. Two more Sisters of Charity have died from the disease, caught at the bedsides of patients in the public hospitals

—The opening of the session of the Catholic University of Ireland in Dublin comes the other day was auspicious. The Cardinal Archbishop of Dublin, though delicate, was then old several other prelates, and also a large number of priests and laymen well and honorably known to the Catholic world. The sermon of the Very Rev. Dr. Egan was a most lucid and powerful exposition of the history and prospects of Catholic education in Ireland. As proto of Catholic education in Ireland, Archbishop John Joseph Lynch, Toronto; Archbishop Gross, Oregon City; Bishop Gilmore, Cleveland; Bishop Ryan, Buffalo; Bishop Ireland, St. Paul; Bishop Marty, Vicar Apostolic of Dakota; Bishop Seghers, Vicar Apostolic of Oregon; Bishop Dwenger, Fort Wayne; Bishop Chatard, Vincennes; Bishop Rademacher, Fort Wayne

Farm and Home.

PRESERVING TIME.

Said Mr. Baldwin Apple
To Mrs. Bartlett Pear
"You're growing very plump, mamma,
And she vary fair.

"And there's Mr. Clingstone Peach,
So mellowed by the heat,
You may wed, she really looks
Quite good enough to eat.

"And all the Misses Crab-apples
Have blushed so very red
That very soon the farmer's wife
To pick them will be led.

"Just see the Isabellas!
They're growing so spare
That I'm sure I don't know
To get purple to the fare.

"Our happiness is over,
For Mr. Green Gage Plum
Says she knows only her worth,
Preserving time is come.

"Yes!" said Mrs. Bartlett Pear,
"Our day is almost o'er,
And soon we shall be unpalatable,
In syrup by tin score."

As I before the month was ended,
The bride that looked so fair
Had vanished among the leaves,
And the trees were stripped and bare.

They were all of them in pickle,
Or in some kind of preserve;
"I'm older," sighed the Apple,
"I'm jelly!" cried the Grape.

They were all in jars and bottles,
Upon the shelf arrayed,
And in their midst poor Mrs. Quince
Was turned to marmalade.

A Recipe for Wives.

"You love each other, do you not?"
"Yes, ma!—"
"But—what?"
"Oh, Ar has a good, a very good heart, but if you know what a trying disposition! For three years now I have struggled and prayed and scolded, but alas—"
"Three years! if for three years you had tried my recipe, you would no longer feel the superiority of his disposition, you would not even suspect that there were stories about his affectionate heart."
"Is there then a recipe?"
"Yes, and one so simple that I hesitate to give it to you. Instead of struggling against your poor friend, struggle against yourself; instead of praying so much that he may correct what does not depend upon his will to change, pray for yourself that you may become better; instead of reproving, smile, come what may; in a word, diminish the number of your own faults, and become saintly.
"A saint, a real saint is patient; and patience is like the woollen garments in which we clothe ourselves in winter that we may not feel cold. Have you ever dreaded yesterday the weather from being cold?
"A saint is gentle; and gentleness is the soft bulwark with which sanctity surrounds us to blunt the edge of sharp or unjust words which might rend our hearts.
"To labor for the amendment of others is often difficult and even impossible; to labor upon ourselves is always possible, and I add, always efficacious."
"But is it not difficult to be a saint?"
"We have only to let the good God do with us simply as His wills, be a docile instrument in His hands."

What Girls Should Learn.

To sew a mouse without screaming.
To read some books besides novels.
To be light-hearted and fleet-footed.
To wear shoes that won't cramp her feet.

Explicit Directions Required.

Irate Customer—See here, sir; this is a fraud—a regular humbug, sir.
Druggist—What is the matter?
"You sold me this lump of borax yesterday, didn't you?"
"Yes, good borax, too."
"And you said it would kill roaches?"
"Yes."
"Well, it won't. The closest is as full of roaches as it was before."
"Guess you didn't use it right."
"I didn't?"
"No; you take the lump back, and when you see a roach go for it."
"How?"
"Hit it."
"Why, what with?"
"The lump, of course."

How to Behave.

Small Points of Table Etiquette

There are a few points of table etiquette not directly connected with the giving and receiving of dinners and teas, but which are of the first importance, as they concern individual behavior. We would be inclined to think every one acquainted with them, and adhere to them a matter of propriety, or custom on our part, if it were not that we see them so frequently violated. Those of our readers who are, or always have been familiar with them, will perhaps pardon our speaking of them for the sake of those who are not.

We do not expect to see these conditions in the best society, but there are many people perfectly well bred for the best purposes, who are ignorant concerning these things, which, although trifles in themselves, are of infinite importance in the whole.

Soup is to be taken from the side of the spoon, not from the tip, and it is not to be stocked in, but the soup, if slightly tilted, it is rather poured into the mouth than otherwise, but the slightest inhalation being sufficient for the rest.

Another generally neglected obligation is that of spreading butter on one bread as it lies in one's plate, or but slightly lifted at one and from the plate; it is very frequently buttered in the air, bitten in pieces, and laid back in the face and eyes of the table with the marks of the teeth on it.

Let us mention a few things concerning the eating of which there is some mistake or doubt.

A cream cake and anything of similar nature should be taken with a knife and fork never bitten. Asparagus—which should always be served on bread or toast, so as to absorb superfluous moisture—may be taken from the finger and thumb; if it is fit to set before you the whole of it may be eaten.

Celery, cresses, radishes, and all that sort of thing are, of course, to be eaten from the fingers; the salt should be laid upon one's plate, not upon the cloth. Fish is to be eaten with the fork, without the assistance of the knife; a bit of bread is the left hand sometimes helps one to master a refractory morsel.

It is best to be very moderate in the beginning of a banquet, for one does not know what is to follow, and all the rest may be spoiled for one by an opposite course.

We remember the case of a lady in Mexico, who, dining with the Governor of the province, was served for the first course with a hash.

She was somewhat surprised; but it was a very good hash, and she really made her dinner upon it. But the next course was also hash—there were seventeen courses of hash before the main dinner of a very delicious character came the sun, made its appearance. Of course a tiny morsel of each hash, for the sake of the rarity, she ate, but she should have taken; as it was she sat afterwards like Tantalus.

Berries of course, are to be eaten with a spoon. In England they are served with their hulls on, and three or four are considered an ample quantity. But then in England they are many times the size of ours. Now they take the big berry by the stem, dip it into powdered sugar, and eat it as we do the radish.

It is not proper to drink with a spoon in the cup; nor should one, by the way, ever quite drain cup or glass. Spoons are sometimes used with puddings, but forks are better style. A spoon should never be turned over in the mouth.

The knife should be grasped freely by the handle only, the lovelinger being the only one to touch the blade, and that only along the back of the blade, at its root, and no further down.

In seeding one's plate to be helped a second time, one should retain one's knife and fork, unless one's plate is full.

At the conclusion of a course where they have been used, knife and fork should be laid side by side on the plate.

The servant should offer everything that is of the great, that the guest may be at liberty to use the right hand.

If one has been given a napkin ring, it is necessary to fold one's napkin and use the ring; otherwise the napkin should be left unfolded. One's teeth are not to be picked at the table; but if it is impossible to hinder it, it should be done behind the napkin.

One's plate is bone at the table, but, as with corn, only one hand is allowed to touch it; yet one can usually get enough iron it with bade and rich meats to set over days and choice pies, plums, grapes and apricots, while he must content himself with a Bald-win apple in mid-water! Why should he not have a beaming home with its hearth in front and large borders of the rich, set flowers; his house one story and small perhaps, yet hung with wood-bins, wild grapes and roses against the background of orchard and shade trees, spreading their flashing boughs with goodness, as if it were the large crown, with its area of shrubberies? Why should he not have in his garden choice fruits of the season—straw-berries, currants and gooseberries, jostling each other in earliest perfection, red and black cherries, golden and purple plums, plenty of black caps to make up for the lost strawberries, and grapes as soon as raspberries are ripening blanched salads, peas in succession, as well as his corn, and asparagus—no salts his groceries and cotton! Why should he not have as fine peas, peaches, winter apples and grapes at Christmas as will the president of the Horticultural Society. He can if he only makes up his mind to.

Living from the Garden.

Gardeners, and above all, farmers have no right to live meanly, or to think of themselves as obliged to drudge ceaselessly. One may be summer and fall with having early vegetables and berries a month before his tardy supply comes on, to be out of them in dog-days before the hotels and cheap boarding-house keepers in the city have begun to see the end of fresh things; he has no need to live on doughnuts and boiled dinners, pickles and pork, when other try the changes of spring lamb, fresh fish, boiled chickens, salads, duck and green peas, capons and veal until turkey comes again. He might not to see town house fingmart with flowers while his wife has only a bunch of syringa or cinnamon roses, with a tuft of asparagus, to sweeten the parlor when she thinks to pick them. What better right have rich men to sit over dessert and choice peas, plums, grapes and apricots, while he must content himself with a Bald-win apple in mid-water! Why should he not have a beaming home with its lawn in front and large borders of the rich, set flowers; his house one story and small perhaps, yet hung with wood-bins, wild grapes and roses against the background of orchard and shade trees, spreading their flashing boughs with goodness, as if it were the large crown, with its area of shrubberies? Why should he not have in his garden choice fruits of the season—straw-berries, currants and gooseberries, jostling each other in earliest perfection, red and black cherries, golden and purple plums, plenty of black caps to make up for the lost strawberries, and grapes as soon as raspberries are ripening blanched salads, peas in succession, as well as his corn, and asparagus—no salts his groceries and cotton! Why should he not have as fine peas, peaches, winter apples and grapes at Christmas as will the president of the Horticultural Society. He can if he only makes up his mind to.

Hand-Shaking in Different Nations.

The Scotch hand-grasp is the roughest; the Frenchman shakes hands with the air of stiffened and drawn-together fingers, which signifies that he wais himself recoil with politeness as with a fortress, to keep off intruders. Never expect anything of a person who shakes a soft hand in a lazy way; it has had a wide experience of false cordiality, which was betrayed by "old soldiers," who, in battering through hotels, and boarding-houses have lost all sensibility to one-sided hands and cheeks, and not inconvenencing one's neighbors; the elbow ought to be held still, and close to one's side, which cannot be done if the chair is too near the board.

One must not lie or lean along the table to get one's arms open in it.

Nor is one to touch any of the dishes; if a member of the family, one can receive all the dishes of hospitality through the servants, and whatever there are servants neither family nor guests are to pass or help from any dish.

A Recipe for Cottage Cheese.

Take one quart of sour milk, place it in a tin pail, and place the pail in a kettle of water, and let it boil until the whole mass is thoroughly curdled. Then take it from the fire and let it cool a little, and then pour it into a cheese cloth, and let the whole drain. When it has ceased dripping, place it in a dish, and season with cream, salt, and butter, to suit the taste. Some prefer it without any seasoning, but it is very good when seasoned as above.

DEATH OF GENERAL O'NEILL.

In Lender of the Fenian Expeditions to Canada Dies at El Paso, Tex.

General J. H. O'Neill, the leader of the famous Fenian invasion of Canada in 1866 died at El Paso, Tex., Oct. 31, from brewerhage of the lungs. He was taken suddenly ill and died in fifteen minutes. His death was a great surprise to his friends. General O'Neill was the head and front of the celebrated Fenian expedition in 1866. His troops expected of success laid out their with every hope of success laid out their plans. In March, 1866, the plan of Sweeny, another Fenian leader, was completed. It was based on a series of combined movements, and St. Patrick's day was designated as the time to commence operations. The whole Canadian government seemed to shake. In less than twenty hours 15,000 or 16,000 men were in Buffalo ready for the invasion. The proposed invasion exhausted itself. In the month of May the danger being apparently passed away, several of the regiments of volunteers were dismissed. Summer advanced. The Fenians in the United States were much more numerous than had been supposed. The Canadian officials were afraid of some disaster might result. Sooner or later there must be an outbreak. The Fenian feeling was constantly growing stronger. They were divided into two sections, one being commanded by Stephens, the other by Roberts. The former is related to a unique Ireland, the latter was lent on Canada. About May 15, with the exception of being joined by many disaffected Canadians, the Fenian leaders commenced to make preparations, this time on a very much larger scale, for a descent on Canada. Three lines of operations had been determined upon: from Chicago and the other western cities on the Lake Huron coast; another from Buffalo and Rochester, across the Niagara frontier, and a third, which was the most formidable of all, from the cities on the Atlantic coast, to organize in eastern New York state. The force was to assemble near Ogdensburg to go to Ottawa and to operate along the eastern frontier. The city of Buffalo, which was expected. The city of Buffalo, was just swarming with Fenian lands, which had been collected from all quarters. Before daylight Friday, the 1st of June, a party of 1500 strong, under the command of General O'Neill crossed the Canadian line three miles below Niagara Falls and established themselves on Canadian soil, without any opposition. The first step was to take possession of the ruins of Fort Erie, near where they had landed, and of the Buffalo and Lake Huron railroad depot, near by. They captured all the provisions and horses they could say hands on, and the volunteers were offered further than this. During the day an American was crossed, the Michigan, which of late years has been at the Charlestown navy yard, patrolled the river to prevent the crossing of reinforcements. Notwithstanding small boats with recruits and supplies did cross, no hindrance of any consequence being attempted. Hot, whatever another have begun the expectations as to a Canadian rising in their favor, they were wholly disappointed. Their only real hope was that from the American side. General O'Neill went forward ten miles further, and Pelham, where he halted for the night, in a position to be an elevated wood, turned Limeridge, where a temporary breastwork was at once constructed. In the meantime the Canadian military authorities had been actively engaged in making preparations to drive this dangerous band out of the Dominion. The fact soon got out and went against O'Neill. The latter's men were worn out with marching and fighting. The party was finally captured by United States marshals, and nearly all were placed on board the Michigan. Some escaped across the water on boards and logs, and some hid.

THE WORK OF THE VICIOUS.

Arthur Orton, alias Thomas Castro, who for a while figured as the famous "Tichborne Claimant," has been finally released from Newgoate Prison. He was sentenced in the Court of Queen's Bench, London, Feb. 28, 1874, to fourteen years' penal servitude for perjury. He was sent first to Millbank, was subsequently transferred to Dartmoor, and then to Portland Prison, from which, a few days ago, he was removed with great privacy, to avoid a public demonstration, to Pentonville Prison, London, pending the expiration of his penal term. The indection in his term of service is for good conduct during his imprisonment. The claim of the "Claimant" alone a stigma in the most celebrated conspiracy case in English annals, since it is the first instance in English legal records where an impostor assumed identity with a known person. The brightest possible recapitulation of the story is this:—

Roger Charles Tichborne, born Jan. 5, 1829, in Paris, was, after his father, heir to the title and estates of his uncle, Sir Edward Doughty Tichborne. He was brought up and educated in France till he was sent to the Jesuit College at Stonyhurst, England, and in 1849 entered the British army. In 1852, he offered himself to his cousin, Kate Doughty, daughter of Sir Edward, but her parents refusing to entertain the match, he sold out his army commission and went to sea. He is known to have landed at Valparaiso June 19, 1853, and on April 20, 1854, he sailed from Rio de Janeiro for the New York on the ship Bella, which was lost, with all on board, at sea. Roger's father succeeded to the Tichborne title and estates, and died June 11, 1862. In the presumed lost son of Roger, his young brother, Alfred, succeeded. He died Feb. 12, 1866, and was succeeded by a posthumous son, born in May following, and to whom the Tichborne baronetcy and estates will come at his majority.

But meanwhile, Roger's mother, all her life resident in Paris, obstinately refused to believe that her son was lost, and in 1866 she began to advertise in the English and Australian papers for "Roger Charles Tichborne," whom she believed to be still alive. A year afterwards a butcher at Wagga Wagga, Australia, known to be Arthur Orton, but then calling himself Thomas Castro, asserted that he was the missing man, and that he had been saved, the sole survivor, from the wreck of the Bella. By the same token of an attorney who professed to believe in him he opened a correspondence with Lady Tichborne, who supplied him with money to come and see her. He visited her in Paris in January, 1867, and the one old and weak-minded woman, who for years had been ready to recognize anybody who should claim to be the long-absent Roger, assented her belief that the impostor was her son. She died March 12, 1868, leaving the field clear for the claimant.

Meanwhile, in 1867, he began an action for the recovery of the Tichborne property, then worth $120,000 a year, but it may here be stated that the long litigation following so reduced this magnificent income that the trustees were compelled to mortgage it to carry on their suits in court. Sending commissionsfor South America and Australia displayed the trial for the first two years, and it was not began till May, 1871, when it lasted 103 days, till March 6, 1872, when the jury interposed. Meanwhile it became satisfied that the claimant was not Roger Charles Tichborne. This was simply nonsuiting him in his attempts to get the estates.

He was immediately indicted as "Thomas Castro, otherwise Arthur Orton," for perjury. Meanwhile an extraordinary number of people believed in him and in the justice of his claim. He received contributions of money from all over England. He raised some money on the sale of bonds payable from the proceeds of the Tichborne estates when he should get possession of that property. The perjury trial lasted from April 23, 1873, to Feb. 28, 1874. The jury were out less than thirty minutes and found that the defendant was not Roger Charles Doughty Tichborne, as he claimed, and that he was Arthur Orton. His summary sentence to penal servitude follows.

The principal points to prove the perjury and reveal the astounding imposture were these:—He was five years younger than the man he assumed to be. He was shown to have been born June 1, 1834, the son of George Orton, a London butcher, and to have been christened Orton. His whole career from his birth was carefully traced. It was shown that while he claimed to be Roger Tichborne in Australia he did not dare to use Roger's balance to his credit at two Australian bankers. On his return to London he first sought out his Orton relatives. He was grossly ignorant of what Roger was well educated. He knew no French, while Roger spoke it fluently. He was shown that he did English, speaking English even with a decidedly French accent. Roger was thin with straight hair, and his ears adhered to the side of his head. Orton was an inch taller, his hair inclined to curl, he was grossly fat and proportionately paunchy, and his ears had large free lopped lobes. No trace of certain tattoo marks known to be on Roger could be found on the claimant. It is almost impossible to conceive the great mental and physical discrepancies in the two different persons.

Nevertheless thousands of people in England and elsewhere firmly believed in the claims of the impostor and believe in him even now. Time (has adjusted) is said to have lately settled an insanity of 60 upon him. He has received cheers in the stage and publicly exhibit himself, and indicements have been held out to him to come to this country for that purpose. His own desire is said to be to go to Tichborne, where his notoriety, he fancies, would be the means of bringing him much money. In all probability when the first excitement of his release is over he will subside to his merited obscurity.

The first of a series of meetings in behalf of the Tichborne claimant was held in London last month. The claimant was accompanied by his son, who spoke, and declared his innocence in a large and enthusiastic gathering. Mrs. Weldon also made a speech. The claimant in his speech declared that his persecution by the Government was terrifiable to the last degree. Gladstone's daughter had married into the Tichborne family. He stated that he had determined to devote his life to obtaining justice for himself and his children. A resolution was passed by the meeting demanding that the claimant should be restored to his rights.

CATHOLICS IN POLITICS.

Father Harte Discourse on the Treatment of His Constituents.

At the meeting of St. Mark's Academy last evening, Rev. M. M. Harte, S. J., read a paper on "A Moral Question in American Politics," that being the extracum of Catholicism. He said that the question of morality was not raised in regard to a someone, Protestant or even non-religious, but the moment a Catholic was mentioned in connection with office a hue and cry was raised. It was true of both parties. He instanced the Democratic National Convention of 1880. When one man was generally spoken of as a most available candidate for the Presidency, the fact was not that when such many years before he had sent for the priest. That settled his chances, and his name was incontinently dropped. Mayor Grace received only 2,000 majority as against Hancock's 42,000. Priests were denied admittance to prisons, reformatory institutions, etc., or when they did secure it a great commotion was raised.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM— IRELAND

The Dublin Scandals.

DUBLIN, Nov. 10.—Mr. Curtis, the ex-post office secretary, will make application to-morrow before Court of Queen's Bench for a rule nisi for the entire police fund which he brought some months ago against Mr. Wm. Hilbre, M. P., editor of United Ireland. He places the damages at $10,000. The action for libel was one brought against him.

Mr. Fitzgerald, one of the men accused of unnatural offenses, was tried in Dublin yesterday. The jury could not agree.

The People of Limerick Determined.

DUBLIN, Nov. 12.—The expenses of the city of Limerick today, by an overwhelming majority, refused to pay any attention to the demand of the extra police tax. They also passed a resolution demanding the immediate withdrawal of the extra police.

Ireland in the Present Session of Parliament.

NEW YORK, November 11.—The Irish cable from London of October 31 says: The autumnal session of Parliament was opened today by the Lord Chancellor, in the Irish House of Lords, in the absence of the Lord Lieutenant. Rule numbers of the House of Commons indicate no change in the Government's policy that this session is solely for consideration of Irish municipal reform. The intention of the Ministry is to try to confine discussion to the Franchise Bill which passed the House of Commons at the Queen's speech, but the Parnellites say there will be a great deal of other matters which must be fully discussed this session. One is the charge that was known to be brought against the Irish Mountmarrs members, its other is the section that Beverley Cornwall, Solicitor Bolton and other Bulldog officials were obtained by the prejudice of Irish jurors, in which they had been unfairly proved guilty.

THE MOUNTAIN-GIRT VALLEY OF SHARE.

BY DUMONT.

When lassed by the balmy breezes
That down off the Indian isles
Career over Caribbean waters
Where Summer eternally smiles,
I've dreamt of that, sweet, sunny Eden
And oft times away yor the Seas,
In spirit I lingerly wandered
The haunts of my boyhood's happy home,
For, oh there is naught in the Tropics
To benefit with those we compare,
Loved land of the brave and the lovely,
Fair mountain-girt valley of Share.

Away, where the calm Sacramento
Rolls down over magnetic of gold,
And thousands of brownie are herding
Their flocks upon mountain and wold,
I've wandered when twilight was leaving,
And whipped the delicious perfume
Of oranges, limes and bananas,
And trellised vines fair in their bloom,
But, oh, that the tair Occidental
Is where one land I cherish most dear
'Tis the sweet, happy home of my childhood,
The mountain-girt valley of Share.

I've roamed thro' Yosemite Valley,
And gazed with amazement on Clark's
On the torrents that there, south the mountains,
Leap down in inconceivable height,
I've climbed the Sierra's proud summits,
And basked in its twilight and glow
Of a cigar-ne, calm Indian Summer,
But, oh, I've yearned for home
But oh to behold the Sierra's proud summits,
Or hear the Pacific roll in the shore,
Or the lonely Sacramento and dark-eyed
Great mountain-girt valley of Share.

Long ago,
The shades of the fair golden State,
And the happy hearts which were gathered
Come to me' the famed Golden Gate,
I carry the sacred Cross
The land of the free and the blest,
And right to that Eden Island
That gems the Atlantic's white crest,
Far home, to remember and relate
Dash come no finger still have
And place for my home by the ocean,
The mountain-girt valley of Share.

"WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT."

BY A. DOTLE.

—And spirits of pride, and erring reasons spite
One truth is clear whatever is is right.
—Pope, "Essay on Man."

Let senseless critics throw away
Their lines to and replaying;
Let modern wise men sneer and say
Some sarcastic lewd sayings;
But yet who hath to Reason's light,
Remonstrate the lay gays and age
"Whatever is, is right!"

The march of life must still go on,
Tho' we may murmur sometimes;
We know by every page to come,
There will be a change in the times,
Toward attaining of the lighter
And like grumblings try to show
"Whatever is, is right."

The melody that hears to the sphere,
Needs not a new revisor;
For God is wise and earthly seers,
Essay not to be wiser;
Let us not cast a shade on light,
A trace to human hopes and fears,
"Whatever is, is right."

Each flower o'been seen is on the breast,
A rank divinity is shown
Each star whose light beams on the sea,
Tends not some new adorning,
No man may make its emile more bright;
Adieu with silly sophistries—
"Whatever is, is right."

Let Shaspie—man the Universe
Its harmony surpassing,
Man teach man to meet and serve,
No thought of a reviling.
For God's Platonic wisdom, 'Man is slight,
So hand this great and thoughtful verse—
"Whatever is, is right."

Why do we hope, Reason's light
Of them the darkest cloud of woes,
Will show a silver lining;
Content in that of all, right—
So let us in this truth repose—
"Whatever is, is right!"

Also! for those who will complain,
The earth should look still greater;
The star of hope, the star of pain
Is clear in Reason's light,
But tho' they grope in endless night,
The light is nothing to meet
"Whatever is, is right!"

Ekere,
Seek not to know God's mystic ways,
No mortal should be knowing;
And let us rather speak in praise,
No stubborn spirit showing
Each spike of pride, and reason's spite
Within our hearts let this truth blaze—
"Whatever is, is right!"

Evelyn Bernard's Life and Love.

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY IN TWO CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER I.

In a quaint, quiet old city, whose name I will remain a secret—the name is not known, there is nevertheless a building with a dilapidated dome, that I believe to be unique. These facts are as certain as the existence of the city itself.

This court house is a hive for workers, busy as bees, and bearing analogy most to many and women, and the business in this of applicants a still larger list of mamas. The city is not large, though it rises the large shire whose centre it is, and it has come to pass that people are more interested in such others private affairs than they might be were the field of interest a wider one. So if any new clerk is appointed at the court house, the matter forms a topic of importance, and everybody tells what everybody else has said or heard on the subject.

One morning in September about ten minutes before the time for the day's work to begin, an eager group stood at a window in the second story of the court house with a gilded dome, busily talking.

"Her name is Bernard—Evelyn Bernard," said one.

"Oh! what a sweet name" cried another, a young lady with flowing ringlets and dreamy eyes. "Is she as pretty as her name?"

"I don't know—never saw her—never heard of her before. There's a father, and a stepmother, and a dozen stepsisters and brothers, more or less. The father is in engagements, and the mother is an invalid, and this Miss Evelyn has them all on her shoulders. I did not stop to think of her looks when I heard that.

"And how did she contrive to get a chance here?"

"Judge Barnes knew her father. Her how can she work in such a place, where salary is more than I can see. They live in a bit of a cottage of High Street, and it is very—but, hush, she is coming now with the Judge."

Every one stared, which could be done with impunity, as the girl never glanced up, tho was tall and slight, and though not a beauty, was so graceful and loveable in the mere look of her face that nobody ever cared whether her features were lovable or not. The Judge brought her courtesies and introduced her. Something in her shy yet cordial and unaffected manner attracted them all. Evidently she was a girl who was accustomed to trust everybody, and whose trust had never yet been betrayed.

James Purcell, thirty years old, dollest and simplest, and kindest of men, as his comrades called him, always blundering, never ready to account to them for the use he made of his slender salary, yet always dressed in shabby, old-fashioned clothes, tender-hearted, and bald-headed. James Purcell saw Evelyn Bernard's lovely face, recalled the story he had heard of her hard efforts to keep a whole household above water, and said to himself resolutely, "We must help her."

He was always trying to help somebody. To add to all his other disadvantages, to commit in the eyes of his fellow clerks a folly more full of stupidity than all his other follies, James Purcell was a Catholic, nor was he in the least ashamed of it, nor did he so much as seem to know that it was anything of which to be ashamed. But the band of hunted, hidden, old-fashioned men who claimed him as their intimate friend was a source of constant mirth and dismay to his companions at the court house.

"Mr. Hasbaum will tell you your day's duties, Miss Bernard," said the Judge, "Mr. Purcell here the kindness to see that Miss Bernard has all she needs." And lifting her sweet grey eyes, Evelyn saw the two men who were, in their diverse ways, to lay a claim upon her life.

A worker ready to learn and swift to do they found her. Soon she was writing at her desk as calmly as though she had been there always.

"That is how she makes one feel," thought James Pugsell; "just as though she had been there always. I hope she will never have to go away—she, poor, poor, so fair. I hope something will turn up so that she may not have to divulge of her business her."

Hasbaum watched her too, thoughtfully. He was not accustomed to spend much thought on the clerks who were set to attend to him. This girl, however, was evidently no common person. She was his pity by her ardent need, his admiration by her lovely manner.

He took some legal documents on even to begin, an eager group stood at a window in the second story of the court house with a gilded dome, busily talking.

"Her name is Bernard—Evelyn Bernard," said one.

"Oh! what a sweet name" cried another, a young lady with flowing ringlets and dreamy eyes. "Is she as pretty as her name?"

"I don't know—never saw her—never heard of her before. There's a father, and a stepmother, and a dozen stepsisters and brothers, more or less. THE CONDUCTOR'S STORY.

The Omaha express stood waiting in the Union depot at Chicago. There was a large passenger list to be west that night, and an unusual amount of express matter. Another passenger coach was therefore added, and when the signal for starting was given the engine puffed and groaned as the second door of the yard with hard unmoulded load. Soon, however, we were flying over the country under the impetus of the powerful engine, which had decided only a little coaxing and petting at the start to give her the will strength with which she drew the thoughtful train of passengers and mail.

Our old friend, "Billy" Evans, was the conductor. Coming into the depot he greeted us cordially, barely glancing at the ticket we gave him, but promising to make a promise to meet us soon to "have a talk" on some or other subject, whether it should be men, between on one, and "cop, sir," on other side.

This being a through and fast train for the west, very few stops would be made, and then only at important stations. Soon our friend passed, and settling himself comfortably by our side in the smoking-car, he began:

"We've got a very heavy train to-night, and when we pass, we will undoubtedly have at Aurora by a freight wreck. No, I don't know, no, but so she makes all sorts, we shall be near an hour long.

"Oh, I have seen some bad accidents on this road, and I expect to see more, I haven't you? so expected.

"Yes, I have, I never was in a very bad wreck, myself, I have always been fortunate, and I hope it will continue so.

"Speaking of wrecks, the worst one I ever saw was that which occurred at Tyrone, Iowa, some years ago. You see, No. 9, going east, and No. 3, going west, had orders to meet at Tyrone, but the operators were running like the wind. The operator at Tyrone received the order and with it an order for a freight train that had been standing on the side track to come out and wait for us. The operator, the poor fellow got the order mixed, and he sent the freight out of Tyrone it was ordered to run east, while the passenger was expected from the east. Orders on the road, and the engineer of No. 3 unanimously obeyed the death command, and he was expected from the east and to death.

"Thank God! No. 3 came tearing down the heavy grade a mile or two from Tyrone. No. 9 was roaring on to meet her. There would be a terrible wreck! Just as No. 3 disappeared from view the operator covered his mistake. But it was too late. He stood helpless for a moment, paralyzed with horror. Then rushing to the instrument, he telegraphed as follows to head quarters:

"No. 3 and Thare met in a terrible wreck on the grade east of Tyrone. Send help and surgeons!

"Soon the news of a slightly crash shook the night air. With an agonizing shriek the operator sent the fatal order.

"Yes, it was a fatal wreck. Many were killed and wounded. It was painful to hear the groans of the wounded, and to be put out of their misery. No, I don't want to hear the details, I have seen enough for our road is very catchy.

"The narrowest escape I ever had was a good many years ago. The road was now in its infancy, and I was conductor on train in the west. It was a dreary, rainy, chilly night in March. We had a heavy freight train, and were making good time despite the bad condition of the road. Soon after midnight a storm arose, and the rain and wind were terrible. But we had to keep on and make up the night. I was in great uneasiness among the passengers and, to tell the truth, I was in fear for our safety myself.

"We had received dispatches from H—— we learned that Camp Creek was way beyond its banks and was rapidly rising, and we had regarded a bridge. We knew that the storm was now blowing a gale, it had turned cold, and snow was beginning to fall. We knew that on we dare, and I trusted to Providence to carry us safely through.

"I had just stepped down in a seat to have a short rest, when I felt the jerking of the car wheels on the track as the brakes held their fast. There was trouble ahead, I knew, and I sprang out to see. Looking on—[illegible] the lights of the flames [illegible] on the surrounding country. I saw the engineer and fireman in ten feet [illegible] on engine and on the very bridge, which was a blaze of huge bonfire fire. The bridge had gone down.

"But we had kept the fire and kept it burning. Was the engineer? Yes, he was, I learned; for there, standing in the storm and cold, was a shivering, half-naked man, a babe, and about her stood three shivering children. The passengers had crowded upon the seats as this, and many a hand was outstretched to help the lone woman and her little ones into a place of warmth and safety in this train.

"There should be story. She lived in a poor shanty not a mile distance from the bridge, and had gone to show with a crash into the rushing waters. Knowing our train would soon be due, she built the fire on the track to warn us. Having so done, she had gone back to her shanty and had piled her bed clothes in a heap, hoping that the fire would burn during the night, and with what assay torment she had endured, "She told us with a sob that baby's fire burning.

"About that time everybody was think forring. I think one or two of the ladies fainted, and the men fell crying that night last long. The big, red faced old man just ahead of us, who was swearing at us through the train in a manner that would have done credit to any well-organized gang of roughs, suddenly disappeared, and came up to him with their valuables. They showed gold, silver and paper money that that said it was full. Some gave a ring, a pin, a gold watch, some bills, and the fellow put in his hat, and then wiped his eyes with the back of his hand, and he cried. It was substance art and one that no doubt saved many lives.

"How much was collected? as asked, with unnecessary curiosity, as the train moved on.

"Well, sir, I don't remember the exact amount, but enough to buy baby a cradle that would grow the little home which the rest of the money purchased."

Curiosities of Mesmer.

Black lead is not lead at all, but a compound of carbon and a small quantity of iron. Vinegar is made of sugar, flour, bread, and water grass; it is nothing but strychnine and the Fire Brigade. Water is not water, and does not come from Burgundy, the greater part of it is rosin and pitch-oil. Gut is made from the entrails of sheep. Butter is not butter, but a kind of cheese, and cheese is not cheese, but a small remains of a decayed species of cattle fish. Hermann says that it is impossible to counterfeit and does not contain a particle of silver. Cinnamon is made of the bark of a tree. The Egyptian cannot now in her hands. Pompey's pillar is not originals in Turkey, and are not baths, but heated chambers. Whale bone is not whale bone, and is not not to contain a single property of bone.

CHARGE OF THE SIX HUNDRED.

A Heroic Act that Immortalized Infantry in England's Service Thirty Years Ago.

October 25th was the thirtieth anniversary of the courageous charge of the Earl of Cardigan's light Brigade at Balaklava, near Sebastopol. A gentleman who was an eye-witness of the terrible scene, and survivor of the fatal battle of the fresh Nolan and his noble comrades

On the morning of October, 1854, our eyes turned to the heights of Balaklava, on the passes conductor. Coming from the direction of the allied forces. On that day the Russians had made a desperate attack on our position, as we desperately repulsed. Word was sent to headquarters that the enemy, under cover of a heavy fog, had taken the heights (of substantial in force and was massing himself so as to threaten the safety of the heights. I was at once sent with an order to the cavalry and horse artillery to move and be ready to assume the offensive. They had not to wait long. The British troops were swept as by a whirlwind, and without Mohammedans, man the world was never so. Just. The heavy cavalry on the right and the light brigade on the left were advanced, with the artillery in the centre playing a game at long bowls. Meanwhile a Russian battery was continually pouring forward, whose well served guns promised to be annoying enough.

"Lord Raglan, who did not know the full strength of the foe, saw that the day should must be removed; but whether to the left or to the right, he could not tell. Just before the leap was made, a staff officer rode up to the commander-in-chief, and, in a few words, delivered the order. The judge had a moment's hesitation, and then, pale and with his eyes, with a wave of his hand, he gave the order. The commanders of the cavalry brigade, Lords Lucan and Cardigan, were turning like the wind. The operator at Tyrone received the order and with it an order for a freight train that had been standing on the side track to come out and wait for us. He Plead Guilty.

An old darkey was under indictment for some petty larceny, in a country village, and. The Judge appointed me to defend him. I was young and very fresh at the time, and it was my first case of importance.

I went forward to consult with my client, in the hall of the court house.

"Ho Hooah, sir, do the lawyer what am depended to do for you?"

"Yes," was the reply.

"Well, sah, I'll tell darkey, "take his way, dedge, I pleads guilty."

"Journalists in the greatest social power, because it is the Catholic Press, the Catholic Press, the Catholic Press, Catholic journalism was, consequently, solidarity of truth, wisdom is may be—above all, the Divine truth—Rev. Thomas Mullan Lecture.

Revealed Religion Must Rule.

"The Necessity of Revelation" was the subject of Bishop Gilmour's sermon at the Baltimore Cathedral on last Wednesday week, and as there may be much light thrown upon the subject by the Bishop's counsel concerning this all-important truth, we append a succinct synopsis of the sermon wherein Bishop Gilmour sets forth the necessity of Revelation in a plain, clear and practical manner, so as to be understood by all classes of people Protestants as well as Catholics—and among whom there are doubtless many who never gave the question of Revelation that calm consideration which its importance also demand from every Christian.

Non-Catholics have not the same belief in the necessity for Revelation that Catholic faith teaches, hence they are—as the sacred writer well says—"driven about by every wind of doctrine." They gibe from Episcopalianism to Ingersollism just as naturally as water will run down a hill if an impediment is placed in its course. Catholics, on the contrary, have their faith fortified by Revelation, and as God never changes, so His Church is the immovable rock upon which we can stand with security ourselves, and as beacon-lights to those who are drifting around among the surging waters of sectarianism that vainly lash the Rock of Christ.

"In discussing the problems of the age," said Bishop Gilmour, "there are two or three currents of thought tolerably well marked. Among these are a sharply-defined atheistic system, and a pretty well accepted determination to make man the beginning and end of himself. In the sixteenth century reason was made the judge of faith. What if accepted, it held to be true; what if rejected, it held to be false.

The results of thought are not the products of a day, so when reason was made its own master, and society was committed to its guidance, it required time, yes, only to accept the new, but to get rid of the old. The united and uniform teaching of the Church for twelve centuries had so moulded and formed public thought that some slips could change or destroy its work. But though once shaked and fairly [illegible] and principles once accepted are in time pushed to their legitimate conclusions."

Then at great length the Bishop discussed the drift of "modern thought," which he said has for its basal thought, "Reason is supreme, and physical science is the sole test of truth," dwelling on what he terms its legitimate results, the Communist and Nihilist, as the advance-guard of our freethinkers, agnostics, rationalists, &c. Dwelling on, he spoke of the increasing degeneration of man, arguing that it is produced by a too great belief in the things of this earth, and not enough belief in and study of divine revelation and religious teachings. In conclusion the Bishop (this summarized the sins which are prevalent) in society today, and which threaten the future of the land:

"The sky looks dark indeed. Morality is on the wane, and the standard of truth and justice steadily sinks. Our public men are no longer chosen for their honesty and ability, but for their availability. The laxity of marriage has ended in divorce and polygamy. Our public expenditure, blasphemy stalks the land, and drunkenness and lust are a stench in the nostrils. Material progress has replaced religion, the temporal is preferred to the eternal, the body to the soul, man to God."

"In such a state of things it behooves us not only to defend Revelation, but to insist upon its acceptance. It is the heresy of the day that man is not bound to accept religion. It is true man is not bound to accept religion from man, and therefore, as man against man, we can assert religious freedom; but as man against God, man is bound to accept religion; nay, more than that, he is bound to accept pure and simple the religion God gives him.

"We must cease permitting sentiment to rule, lawful religion and religious liberty to accompany. The State must take from the Church, as the Church takes from God, and both must work for a common end. It is fully to assert that the State can prosper without the Church, or society exist without religion. God must rule, man must obey. Religion must be accepted and Revelation maintained."

These words of Bishop Gilmour should form the basis of every citizen's belief in all that affects Christian society in this country. The Government that seeks to ignore God can only merit the friendship of the referees Fund, and as the Bishop well and truly says, both the Church and the State must work for a common end. Social prosperity, peace, virtue and happiness are to mark the future career of this Republic.

— The Rev. Lord Petre—the first Catholic Priest who has sat in the House of Lords since the time of James the Second—took the oath and his seat recently. "The Rev. Peer," says a London contemporary, "has a markedly ascetic and clerical appearance. Beneath his mitre he wore the black garb (sic.) and Roman collar of the Catholic priesthood."

— Baron Pitteurs, at present Belgian Minister at Stockholm, has been appointed to represent Belgium at the Vatican.

Twin Enemies of the Catholic Church.

Bigotry and ignorance are the Siamese twins that dwell in the peripheral mouth of some Americans who—fortunately for the honor of the intellectual character of the nation—are not numerous in this Republic. Some of these people are fond of showing their ears in print so that the reading public may not mistake the zoological species to which they belong. A bigot of this character lately figured in the Telephone over the signature of T. Jewell, who said among other very ignorant and malicious assertions that "no Roman priest or prelate is a citizen of the United States of America. Their allegiance is to the pope of Rome, first, last, and all the time." The best refutation of this 'offensive slander is to refer the deluded dupe of personal prejudice to the sermon preached by Bishop Ireland which we print on the first page of this issue, wherein he will find as illustrious Prelate proclaiming from the pulpit of the most celebrated Cathedral in this Union, his pride at being an American citizen and his conviction that a republican form of government was the best in the world! And thus it is that Davidson's defamation of Catholic prelates and Catholic priests did not travel far before it was turned into a vile falsehood by the patriotic utterances of an American Prelate whose position as a citizen is as far superior to the malignant manufacturer of this calumny as was that of the Catholic Charles Carroll of Carrollton in comparison exalted above the traitor Arnold.

In order to form some slight conception of the calumny uttered against the religious and priesthood of the Catholic Church by the back-woods bigot, it is only necessary to recall to mind the many patriotic priests and Bishops who have died in this land since the very foundation of the Republic, and whose memories are honored by the grateful people. Was there a single traitor among them? No! Thank God! The foul brand of "traitor" is found only on the heads of bigots! When Wesley was ordering to raise a regiment of soldiers in order to crush out the spirit of Revolution in this land, Catholic priests were praying for success for the American arms wielded by their Catholic flocks!

What Pope ever tried to control a single Priest or Prelate in America so as to turn any of them from their allegiance to this republican form of government? Seven different Pontiffs have filled the Chair of Peter since 1775, yet there is not a single line of writing extant from any of them in the remotest degree antagonistic to this Republic or suggesting to priest or Bishop a change of civil policy. More than a thousand priests and Bishops have resided over Catholic congregations in this country, and has it ever been known that a single one of them abused a duty income been upon him as an American citizen upon the plea that his "allegiance to the Pope of Rome" was superior to his American citizenship? Neither Prelate, Priest nor Catholic layman has ever made such a plea in this or any other country, because it would be treason to the Constitution of the United States, because "their allegiance is due to the Pope of Rome first, last, and all the time," is wilfully and maliciously bears false witness against his neighbor, and falsehood in contradiction to the history of this country since ever it had a place among the nations of the earth.

Like all insulated enemies of the Church, the Oregon back-woods bigot had to have up a spurious oath in order to give a balance of truth to his calumny. The "anathema" introduced by Sterne in his "Tristram Shandy," the "Jesuit oath" introduced by grammar-smashing Gray into his humbug "history" of Oregon, and the "oath" resurrected by Mr. Davidson from some foul denominational document, are all pieces of the same Protestant patchwork, made to order by bigots so as to "make Rome howl" through the prejudices raised against her by means of forged oaths, false history and fabrications of similar calumniating character.

The closing paragraph of the Davidsonian document is so remarkably original that we give it entire so as to show our readers the truth of the axiom that "all the fools are not dead yet."

"The Baltimore council is for the express purpose of settling and strengthening the temporal power of Rome in America, and the way for the papal residence here, and aiding by the destruction of the Protestant church and all republican institutions."

Well, we must candidly admit that of all the outrageous crazies we ever read of the writer of the above absurdity is the greatest cocksbury on the whole hook! What a peculiar programme he has conceived for the future! He really imagines that the Bishops in Baltimore are merely delegates to a convention for the overthrow of the American Constitution! And—for all the sense the poor man possesses—the Pope may actually be in America at present while the whole Protestant population are quietly resting upon a regular Vatican volcano! The case is really dangerous and we advise Davidson to call a convention of Dunderheads, elect himself president, pass resolutions declaring the Pope ineligible to residence in this Republic, and proclaim the principle that nobody outside of Davidson's domicile is fitted by nature or art to cope with the wiles of Catholicism! Until this is done there can be no security for sectarianism—if we are to believe the ridiculous ravings of the back-woods bigot whose blind leading will have but few followers.

— We feel deeply grateful to Rev. P. Dignan, the distinguished and patriotic divine who edits with such marked ability and financial success the Catholic Union of Buffalo, for the following kindly sentiments expressed in a recent issue of that model Catholic journal: "One of the best Catholic papers in the country—the San Francisco Monitor—has begun its twenty-eighth volume, and well earned prosperity, and the high regard of its contemporaries. The Monitor is learnedly edited and like its equals nationwide in the days of the rebellion, pours hot shot and shell into the foe on the Pacific Coast."

Death of Rev. Antoine Ravalli, S.J.

It is with feelings of deep regret that we learn through the latter of our Montana correspondent that Rev. Antoine Ravalli, S. J., died at St. Mary's Mission, Bitter Root Valley, Montana, recently. Father Ravalli was a native of Rome where he was born in 1812. He was a ripe scholar, a skilful physician, and one of the most lovable priests as ever had the honor of knowing. Father Ravalli arrived in Oregon with Father De Smet and Father Point, immediately after their arrival from Belgium, accompanied by Fathers Accolti, Nobili, Vercruisse and the lately deceased. The mission of Father Point—conveyed to Oregon the first band of the community of the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur.

Shortly after his arrival Father Ravalli was assigned to one of the Rocky Mountain missions under charge of the Jesuit Fathers, and there he had labored zealously, constantly and with great success in converting the Indians from savage pagans into model Christians. Forty years of a life of prayer, privation and good works in America! What a sublime theme for Christian contemplation! What a model for mankind! Heaven we find the divine portrait of a faith possessing such superhuman strength as to lead the most learned men in earth to live among the lowliest of God's creatures, to give up the society of learned companions, to leave the haunts of scenes and sacred shrines of their native Rome, and to go into an unknown region to live among Indians, in order to gain souls for God's glory!

"Behold him on his way, the Brother—
Which from his gentle lange—life daily
That walk known habit is his panoply.
Thus is his only weapon he will wield,
By day he learn it for his staff afield,
And at night it is his pillow of his bed.
No other lodging these will a week can yield
Of a canopy deep and tangled boughs for spread."

Such was the life led by those Pioneers of the Cross who spent their lives amidst the Rocky Mountain regions during the past half century. They were truly heaven's heroes who blessed the daily sufferings they endured because they saw through their exhaustion a nearer glimpse of the beatific vision.

There are but few readers of the Monitor to whom the saintly and scholarly Father Ravalli was known personally, but those who had that honor will mingle his name in grateful remembrance with those his companions Fathers De Smet, Nobili, Accolti and Vercruisse, all of whom have passed through the portals of death only to begin anew in that bright and better land where the faithful shepherds of God exist in everlasting happiness.

Are we a Civilized People?

A stranger in San Francisco on Wednesday evening last, when the sun of a million-aire entered the business office of the Monitor and shot down the proprietor of that paper, might well ask: "Is this a civilized community?" A more cowardly and cowardly crime, worse than murder, unbridled and uncheckable passion never yet has appeared upon the criminal pages of our exchanges.

Up this way and pin it some place where it can be seen by every Catholic in the household.

SAD ACCIDENT TO A PRIEST.

Rumored Death of Father Passanatti, D. D.

A dispatch from Mesmel, dated the 21st last, brought the sad intelligence that Rev. A. Passanatti, assistant pastor at Mesmel, by with a very sad accident which may end fatally. It appears that Father Passanatti had received a gunshot wound in the chest by the accidental discharge of a gun received while running along the road to Mesmel in a one horse cart, the charge of which, it seems, was of the kind used for the purpose of scaring the birds off the vineyards. The shot entered the cart, and Father Passanatti fell a shotgun which he held in his hand, and the charge lodged in his chest, being his breast near the heart. Every care, immediately on receipt of the news, was lavished on the unfortunate gentleman, and he was carried to Mesmel where he has been kindly nursed and cared for. A dispatch to the daily press yesterday morning announced the death of the injured priest, but we are happy to state reliable information received at this office that he was still alive last evening.

DEATH OF A CHRISTIAN BROTHER.

Brother Vitalina Acosly, of the Order of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, departed this life on Saturday morning last at St. Joseph's Academy, Fifth and Jackson streets, Oakland. The immediate cause of his death was a hemorrhage of the lungs, this being the third attack. The preceding hemorrhage occurred two weeks ago, when the patient was thought to have relived the last successes, was anointed and prepared for death, but he rallied and within just few days was able to walk around a little, and was considered by the Brothers and others, who, from his youth and sweet nature, he had won hosts of friends, to be in good health. He was at Vera Cruz, Mexico, country in Canada, Ireland, and for the last 18 years in California. He was 36 years of age, and for nearly 18 years a Christian Brother. He was a native of Spain, and his family reside at Madrid, at the age of 36. Deceased was Mr. McCloskey, Mr. Fitzsimmons, Mrs. Dunphy, Mrs. Mary Ann Dunphy, Mrs. Mary Ann Dunphy, Mrs. Mary Ann

THE ANGELUS BELL.

BY SERGEO CONNELLY, IN SANTA VIGNA.

Under the golden cross it swings,
Swings and swings in the twilight high,
The billows low as the soft breeze flings
The throes bold tale to sea and sky.
ANGELUS—DOMINI! hear it well—
Is the ringing chime of the convent bell.

The convent crouled upon the sand,
The cot of the lowly of the Sacred Heart,
Where black veils flutter along the strand,
Or in dark out of the chapel dart,
ECCE—ANCILLA—DOMINI!—
The silvery strains float over the sea.

Hidden below in its chine shrine,
The Sacred Heart of the Nazarene shrine,
Where the lilies bloom, where the tapers shine;
He rests in the care of His meek spouse;
FIAT—VERBUM—CARO—FACTUM—EST!
Pulses the bell in the lofty tower.

O sweet, sweet chime! while the sunglow fade
Of throughfare worldlings throng the walk,
The spell of thy music serene to glide
Like a sweet home through their careless talk;
And souls are lifted for each space,
By the Angelus bell of the Sacred Heart.

Long may thy music haunt the sea—
Long may thy message thrill the air—
As they toil by moon's dim light, the free
Turning the shoals 'mid the drifting weeds,
Life grave sons toiling their rosary beads.

The white-veil'd ships in the morning mist
Salute thy song thro' the hazy air;
Their sailors at noon and eve shall list
For the rolea of thy praise 'neath sea or star,
Ave Maria! Ave Maria!
STAR OF THE SEA! route our prayer!

THE TRIBBLE.

Where it was Invented.—Various Kinds of Tribbles.

A writer in London magazine gives the following account of this useful domestic article:

The tribble is a Dutch invention, that was first brought to England in 1596 by one John Lofting, who began its manufacture in Islington, near London, gaining thereby both honor and profit. Its name was derived from the words thumb and ball; being for a long time called thumbles, and only lately tribble. Old records say that thimbles were first worn on the thumb; but we can scarcely conceive how they would be of much use there. Formerly they were made of brass and iron only, but of late years, steel silver, gold, horn, ivory, and even pearl and glass have been used for making thimbles. I saw some very beautiful ones in China that were exquisitely carved of pearl and bound with gold, and the end also of gold. These pearl thimbles are quite as costly and far prettier than those made entirely of gold. Usually there is a pearl thimble for the season, and a dainty needlebook of pearl, gold, and silk, to accompany the thimble, and the whole is enclosed in an exquisite little pocket case shaped like a book and bound in satin and pearl.

A thimble owned by a queen-consort of Siam is shaped like a lotus bud, this being the royal flower of that country, and almost everything about that court bearing, in a greater or less degree, some impress of the lotus. The thimble is of gold, thickly studded with diamonds, that are so arranged as to form the lady's name and the date of her marriage. It was a bridal gift from the king, who, having seen the English and American ladies at his court using thimbles, took this method of introducing them among his own people.

In Naples, very pretty thimbles composed of lava from Mount Vesuvius are commonly sold, but rather as curiosities than for real utility, being, from the extreme brittleness of the lava, very easily broken, have heard also of thimbles made of asphaltum from the Dead Sea, and of one composed of a fragment of the old elm tree at Cambridge, Mass., under which George Washington stood when "taken command of the army." Of course, these latter thimbles were not intended to be used in sewing.

In the ordinary manufacture of gold and silver thimbles thin plates of metal are introduced into a die, and then pounded into shape. But in Paris the French have a way of their own, quite different from ours, for making gold thimbles that are said to be much more durable than those made in the usual way. A piece of very thin sheet iron are cut into discs of about two inches in diameter. These, after being heated to redness, are stuck by a punch into a concavity of hardened steel, sufficiently large to give the proper shape. The thimble is then trimmed, polished and indented around its other surface with tiny holes. It is next converted into steel by a process called cementation, then tempered, annealed and brought to a blue color. After all this is completed a thin sheet of gold is introduced into the interior and fastened to the steel by a soudered, while gold leaf is attached firmly by pressure to the outside, the edges being secured by a small groove made to receive them. This completes the operation, and turns out a very beautiful thimble that will last for years. The steel used in the construction will scarcely wear out in a lifetime, and the gold if worn away, is easily replaced.

Profits of Farming.

People who think farming is a poor business for a young man to engage in do not always figure correctly. It is true, as compared with the successful merchant or so-called or, the profits look small. Ambitious young men, in their haste to be rich, consider the slow process of making money by the growth of the soil far too dilatory. Entering the farmer to take out of his product reasonable wages, an interest on capital invested, and his per cent. of profit on his land, implements, etc., will not probably, exceed three per cent. per annum. "Tis a sad, sad poor business," says the merchant and the banker, "I expect to make fifteen or twenty per cent. on my money." Let us look a little into the fifteen or twenty per cent.

Every man can not be a banker, or a merchant, simply because if no one tills the soil, the merchant will have no one to buy his goods, or the bank to borrow its money. Every one has not capital to set up a store, or a bank, and therefore he who commences, frequently does it by borrowing and paying interest, six, eight, ten, or perhaps fifteen per cent.

We do not propose that every young man should try farming either. Farming requires special qualifications, the first of which is a good constitution; the next, good judgment. He also requires capital; but above qualifications constitute the principal part of it.

I was found by statistical data that of so many merchants who count upon sudden wealth ninety seven out of every hundred fail in the course of their life, and become bankrupt. This process is by no means an agreeable one to go through. Only seven out of every hundred die rich. With most men the principal object in acquiring money is to leave something. The farmer may not be able to die rich, but he can be content to live comfortably, and to die in comfortable circumstances. But to return to the profits.

Suppose it is only three per cent.—that is, he has a farm, say one hundred acres of wild land, that sells $5 per acre, and the clearing of one-half of it, $10; his buildings, implements, stock, etc., $1,000—in all $2,500 or $3,000. After paying himself wages and supporting his family, he makes three per cent. on his investment, or $90.

This does not look important, but this little sum be can loan at ten per cent., making it $99; and adding the next year's profit, there is $189; loaning this the third year, it swells to $297; there is quite a snug little sum added away for him.

The farm all this time is increasing in value, and more than likely by the time his first born is of age, it is worth $50 per acre, or $5,000. His merchant friend is probably by this time, twice that sum worse than nothing.—Tribune and Farmer.

Our Young Folks.

A CHILD'S HYMN TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN.

Since the Virgin Mary!
Mother of our Saviour gone!
Who walked with us a year in sorrow
To teach us how to bear and hope!
Pray that the Virgin Mary
Look from her throne above
On us, little pilgrims yet,
And keep us safe from danger.

Sing for the Virgin Mary,
Day and Dayspring of the land,
Now the high Queen of Heaven,
Rather than earth can kiss—
Pray that the Virgin Mary
Take your young hearts and love
Love for their holy station,
Since it was she her son.

Sing for the Virgin Mary,
Mother of our kind and love,
Who to the final sequence
Placed her fair children here,
Kneel to the Virgin Mary,
Still is she set and prayer,
Bless her for all her kindness,
Love her for all her care.

Boys and Girls Sit Erect.

One of the worst habits young people form is that of sitting crooked. Our children while at work or study. It is much less fatiguing to the muscles of the back to sit erect. The round shoulded, hollow chested, and sunken chested persons are seen in every day omnibus have avoided all the bad results from which they are suffer, had they always kept the body erect, the shoulders and the shoulders thrown back. A simple rule is that if the shoulders are thrown back, leaves the shoulders will drop back to their natural position, giving the lungs full play. The injury done by carelessness in this respect is by compressing the lungs, preventing their full and natural action, resulting in lung diseases, or still consumption. Sit erect, boys and girls and look the world in the face.

A Terrible Rebuke.

An old man whose age had made him less and deaf and weak was obliged to depend entirely for his subsistence on his grown-up son's family. While taking his food he had trembled so that he often spilled upon the table cloth, and his son had long to take the meals out of an earthen dish in the corner. The child felt cross the trembling hands and was ashamed of his father's weakness. One day he broke the dish and his wife said that he bought him a wooden dish for future use.

The next day the little grandson was discovered at work with chisel and hammer upon a bit of wood.

"What is the world are you doing there, my son, asked his father.

The little fellow did not want to tell, and his mother said, "What are you doing there, my son? Tell us."

"Why, sadie, I'm making a little trough like the one piggie eats out of."

"What are you going to do with the pig trough, my son?"

"Why, father," said the boy, "I'm making it for you and mamma to eat out of when I'm a man."

The boy looked in time to the father and mother, and grandfather after the had a place at table, and was never put out of the family, and that he was worth out brute.

A Crooked Day.

"Mother, what but been the matter with the day? It has been the longest day of my life and I very tired and cross."

"It is a very easy for me to see where the fault lies, my dear."

"Do? what did you mean? to do today, child, and what have you been doing, mother?"

"I have everything has gone wrong."

"My darling, did you ask your Heavenly Father to be your guide and protector?"

"Why, no, I forgot all about it."

"Ah, little girl, that is reason enough for a crooked day. Many times when I follow who loved, have to ask for helped the time, I find that I have to go back and search step as well as how to live each moment. Hence I have found out forgot how the year harvest time, I find the fruit of the little children when they call upon Jesus.

After that a good boy said, "I know what the bad that talk with her mother, and as the day grew longer and longer, I thought I no longer wonders that she has so low crooked days."

For Boys of Fourteen.

Ah, boy lad! I just wish I was about 14 years old and had the chances you are daily throwing away.

What would I do?

Why, I'd plan myself. Forming thing I'd be at the depot and when a boy's train comes in I'd be there to help take the trunks from I'd follow it and find out if it was a boy, I'd ask him if he was lame and cross and sick and wheel and roll I'd know what to do. I know exactly what I'd do. I'd simply repeat what that fellow did for me when I was a little fellow and push. When I left the Penitentiary I'd go to a farmer and overhaul a stunning suit of clothes and go where I'd be unknown. I'd get a hold of some railroad man and tell him my case and I was good sure to offer opportunity of old road to run a locomotive for me.

It may not be money in your pocket I know it may not be money in your pocket I know it may not be money in your pocket but it will be a good deal better than money. Money is a very poor thing to have in your pocket. Money is a very poor thing to have in your pocket. Money is a very poor thing to have in your pocket.

Did you ever take a common door lock apart? Then you do not know that a fence spring is the mystery which works both catch and bolt. Without this magnificent little cutting less than a penny the lock, coming from thirty cents to a dollar of it well, would be only so much old iron. You have opened but this a pocket-knife than sands of times, but it never occurred to you that a spring, acting on a different principle, holds the blade shut or open. You see a paper hanger at work, but you are ignorant of the fact that he must begin his work in one corner of the room by a plumb line or he will not make a good job of the hanging. You can't tell whether a horse shoe is worth six or ten cents, if you never counted the holes which hold carries on shoulder up the hollow. You don't know what a horse has been with both, you are only in one. You don't know that a blundering Dutch lad ten years old carried put together the pattern of ten-tongs now used all over the country, and a man stole his idea away and made a fortune out of it. If he had been an observing boy he would have seen and realized the value of action. He went about picking up odds and stones, and when offered ten cents for his crude tongs let them go with the feeling that he had made a good thing. If Good

Indulgences Attached to the Rosary.

GENEROSITY OF THE POPES FOR GOOD WORKS.

How the Faithful May Benefit by Reciting the Rosary.

INDULGENCES ATTACHED TO THE ROSARY.

That our readers may have at least some idea of the immense treasure of indulgences which the Popes have granted to the Rosary, we would most earnestly advise them to peruse and study carefully some one of the many approved Manuals of the Rosary, for it would be utterly impossible for us to specify in one or more of our several newspaper articles, anything like what the reality is. The Rosary Confraternity brings its members countless indulgences and under manifold titles. It will not, however, be out of place to mention here some of the principal indulgences granted to members of the Confraternity; in fact, it will be in accordance with the title of this article to do so. Behold then the wealth, the immensity of the riches of the Rosary described in brief.

I. On the day on which one becomes a Member of the Confraternity, he can gain five Plenary Indulgences: the first is that conceded by Sixtus IV. Ex commissa; the second that by Pius V., Consuevit; the third by Gregory XIII., Ubertim; the fourth by Clement VIII., Salvatoris; the fifth by the same Pope, De Salute (Vide Fruhl, O. P., pages 101 and 114.)

The riches bestowed on a Christian on being made a Rosarian are so great that he is regarded as having received, as to others, second baptism. A member of the Confraternity has the extraordinary privilege once a week in his life-time, at any period thereof selected by himself, to become enabled as to effect with the same blessings that he received at his baptism, provided that he is determined to live as a true Rosarian, and provided that he goes to Confession and Communion with that intention. It would be well to make even a short retreat on each of these occasions, and to labor earnestly to qualify oneself for such benefits by a general Confession, if such should be deemed advisable by a prudent director.

II. As often as the entire Rosary is recited by a member of the Confraternity, he can gain each time a Plenary Indulgence together with a $\frac{7}{40}$ number of partial indulgences. If the third part of the Rosary is recited by a member of the Confraternity in any part of a Church of the Confraternity from which the Rosary altar can be seen, or in any other Church; if he cannot conveniently go to a Church of the Confraternity, he can gain an indulgence of fifty years once a day. Prudet in his Manual of the Rosary strongly insists on maintaining that there is a connection to the recitation of the chaplet the extraordinary indulgences of one hundred and twenty thousand years, and as many quarantine, and therefore that he who recites the full Rosary may gain an indulgence of three hundred and sixty thousand years, and as many quarantine. The Bulla Salvator of Innocent VIII., who granted sixty thousand years and as many quarantine for the recitation of the third part of the Rosary or the chaplet, has been inserted, in Bullarium Romanum, Tom. I., page 1.

We are much pleased to add here for the benefit of all religious men and women, and of tertiaries who belong to any of the religious bodies, that in virtue of the communication of indulgences between the religious Orders and their third Order members, the religious—men and women, and the tertiaries of the various Orders—by reciting the ordinary chaplet of five decades, and besides for Our Fathers, for Hail Marys and for Glorias before the most adorable Sacrament, or when that is not possible, in any place whatsoever, may gain indulgences in favor of the poor souls in Purgatory, a Plenary Indulgence. (Benedict XIII., Vide Fruhl, O. P., page 117.)

A Rosarian may gain for each Our Father and also for each Hail Mary recited on properly blessed beads, an Indulgence of one hundred days. By simply carrying his beads about with him, a Rosarian can gain an Indulgence of one hundred years, and as many quarantine. (Innocent VIII., Splendor.) This latter Indulgence has been doubled by Alexander VI. (Ibid.) Yet, it is not necessary in order to gain the aforesaid Indulgence to carry the beads in a visible manner as many Religious do; it is quite sufficient to wear them, for example around the neck, on one's belt or clothes.

III. A Rosarian can gain as a rule, for each good work that he performs, an Indulgence of sixty days; we have said as a rule because there are a great many good works quickly mentioned that call for a much greater Indulgence.

IV. On the first Sunday of the month five Plenary Indulgences can be gained by members, or in the Confraternity, six, a Plenary Indulgence on going on that day to Holy Communion, (Gregory XIII., Ad augendum); a second Plenary Indulgence for visiting the altar of the Rosary, (Gregory XIII., Ad augendum); a third for assisting at the procession of the Rosary, provided that all members have confessed and since numerated, (Gregory XIII., Cum Sicut); a fourth, provided that they, besides going to Confession and Communion, offer some prayers for the Sovereign Pontiff's intention, (Pius V. Pastoris et Innocent XI., Nuper N. 3); a fifth, by those who add a visit to the Rosary chapel, and recite there the usual prayers, (Gregory XIII., Ad augendum et Innocent XI., Nuper V. 1); Vide Fruhl, O. P., pages 125 and 114 Ibid. Ann. of Chaney, O. P., Tom. I., pages 565-572.)

V. Members who visit on certain days the five altars in a Church of the Confraternity, or in any other Church, one after five times when there is but one in the Church, and who recite five Fathers and five Hail Marys before each altar, or the same prayers five times before one altar, where there is but one, gain all the Indulgences that those who visit the Stations of Rome. (Leo X., Clement VII. Pasqui III p. 17.)

VI. Members of the Confraternity can gain once a month several Plenary Indulgences, that is, all those who attend the Rosary Procession, if they assist habitually at the votive Mass of the Rosary; the same Indulgence can be gained by Dominican priests of the first Order on such and also by tertiary secular priests possessed of the requisite facilities from the Dominican General of using the Breviary and Missal of the Order, who are accustomed to celebrate the Rosary Votive Mass as often as the Rubrics permit them to do so; as a rule, they can celebrate said Mass on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Each time that a Rosarian is present at the Votive Mass of the Rosary he can gain all the indulgences that he would gain by reciting the entire Rosary, that is, a Plenary Indulgence and a great number of partial ones. The same indulgences can be gained by Dominican priests, and by secular priests of the third Order possessed of the faculties referred to, every time they celebrate said Votive Mass. (Pradel, O. P., page 124.)

VII. Members of the Confraternity can gain on Rosary Sunday, in the first place, all the Plenary Indulgence attached to the first Sunday of the month, viz., five, as we have already stated, and, in the second place, they together with all the other faithful, can gain as many Plenary Indulgences as they will make visits to the Rosary altar under the conditions designated in the Bull of Pope Pius V. This Bull contains the following remarkable passage: "Indulgence is simply astounding, and is called the Great Pardon of the Rosary."

VII. Here it is well to remark, in order to give our readers an idea of the immensity of the indulgences of the Rosary that the Church in which a Confraternity of the Rosary is canonically established, possesses by right, but only in favor of the members of the Rosary, all the local indulgences especially conceded to the churches of the Friars-Preachers. (Clement VIII. Quaerentes.)

Said Church also possesses, but only in favor of the Rosary members, all the local indulgences of all the confraternities and churches of Rome, even the Plenary Indulgences for the living and for the dead, which are daily, and in a certain sense, innumerable. (Pius V., N. Mori, of 15 Jan. 1567; Vide Fruhl, O. P., page 111.) The churches of the Friars-Preachers possess moreover in favor of the members of the Rosary Confraternity the local indulgences granted to the churches of all the religious Orders, congregations and confraternities. (Benedict XIII., Pretiosus.) This privilege is not communicated to churches that do not belong to the Dominican Order even though the Confraternity of the Rosary is actually established in them.

IX. At the hour of death a Rosarian can gain at least five Plenary Indulgences; one by receiving the Sacraments devoutly; a second, by receiving the Rosary sacchetto; a third, by holding a blessed Rosary candle in their hand; a fourth, by reciting the Salve Regina, and a fifth by pronouncing devoutly at least in the heart the adorable name of Jesus. Many authors hold that several other Plenary Indulgences besides those just enumerated, can be gained by Rosarians at the hour of death. (Pradel, O. P., pages 114 and 115.)

X. All indulgences granted to the Rosary are perpetually valid, and are not revoked or suspended unless it is expressly stated. (Bullar. O. P., Tom. III., page 1.) They are all applicable to the souls in Purgatory. (Innocent XI., Nuper C. XII. No. 1.)

THE SULLIVAN TRIBUTE.

An Appeal to the Irish Race at Home and Abroad.

While yet the soft green turf of the land he loved so passionately, and for which he so unselfishly labored, was falling gently on the breast of Michael Davitt, a few days ago, a meeting of his countrymen, held under peculiarly solemn circumstances, gave practical expression to the design which we have been applied to carry into effect. That meeting, though hurriedly convened, was attended by a large and representative body of Irishmen, and gave an emphatic expression of sentiment shared by the whole Irish race, wherever Ireland's exiled children in adoption live and breathed to his memory. Amongst the resolutions which the meeting passed, one was to the effect that the Irish people at home and abroad, Alexander M. Sullivan's public services appeal with irresistible force to all his countrymen without distinction. It is, perhaps, true, the work he did for the cause of Irish nationality, the aid he gave to every movement designed for the moral elevation and enfranchisement of his countrymen, and the good he did in public and in private for the suffering and the poor, except in those who knew him intimately, are as yet but imperfectly appreciated. But enough is known of the dead patriot to mark him out for recognition as one of the most pure-minded, chivalrous and disinterested workers who ever devoted their energies to the national cause and to the public good. Day by day, from his death to his obsequies, his magnificent services were employed in efforts to raise his nature land in the scale of nations, and to benefit its people, without distinction of class or creed.

Whilst as an orator, an author or a journalist, his advocacy and teachings were ever marked with beneficial influences that have left an ineffaceable mark upon the public mind, the many acts of kindness of his private life will never be known till the great accounting day, when the deeds of all men will be exposed to view.

One special ground there is on which an appeal for a national tribute to the memory of A. M. Sullivan may safely be made to the Irish race. It is absolutely certain that, if he had thought more of himself and less of his country, he would have died rich in the honors and goods of the world. It is no secret that the government of the day were at one time ready to offer him the means of enjoying a repose he sadly needed, if only he had, owing to a broken constitution, withdrawn from active public life, and although many Irish nationalist friends strongly urged on him the acceptance of a public office, he rejected all such overtures, determined to leave behind him a record of independence and disinterested devotion to the public interests. He died leaving to his children little more than the heritage of an unsullied name, but the claim of which those children and their mother have for that very reason on the nation's gratitude is one that will not be disputed.

Commissioned, as we have been, and remembering the remarkable manifestations of public feeling which the death of A. M. Sullivan has evoked within the past few days, we think the appeal addressed to the Irish race will prove by the fostering care of the dear one he has left behind him mindful it is of his services and how proud of his fame. By order of the committee. The Right Honorable the Lord Mayor, M. F. Ellis (Green the man Herald, Croke, D. D.; Charles S. Parnell, M. P.; Hon. John F. Vereker, Alderman Moore, J. P.; high sheriff Edmund Dwyer Gray, M. P.; James F. Lombard, J. P.; Rev. J. A. Galbraith, senior fellow Trinity College, Dublin; Rev. J. Bannon, S. J.; Michael Davitt, Alfred Webb, Thomas Sexton, Murphy, Joseph E. Kenny, Aldermen V. B. Dillon, John L. Sullivan.

Subscriptions will be received at the Mansion House Dublin, or by the Freeman's Journal, or National weekly press.

Rational Constipation

Is a prolific source of misery and many ills, giving rise to Headache, Dizziness, Pores, Nervous Restlessness, Biliousness, Indigestion, Fostering of the Blood, etc. The bitter, mauve Liver medicine pills, salts and drughts formerly used to relieve the sufferer, only aggravate the disease and derange the stomach. All who are afflicted in that way, have the impetus of a remedy placed to the palate, harmless in its nature and truly beneficial in its action. The total failure of Syrup of Figs, given away free of charge, to cure constipation, proves that it is a trifle dear at the price of a dollar. Large bottles at fifty cents or one dollar.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM— IRELAND.

Earl Spencer to be Impeached.

DUBLIN, Nov. 21.—United Ireland states that it is the intention of the Nationalists to impeach Earl Spencer, Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, for his conduct in Kerry. It says the 14th party has determined to have a public inquiry into the Kerry outrages.

Ireland to be Disfranchised.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—The Marquis of Salisbury is pressing Gladstone for a reduction in the number of Irish members in the House of Commons under the proposed Redistribution Bill. It is reported that Gladstone has consented to reduce the number by five.

Bill Against Dynamite.

The Lord Mayor of Dublin has written to the Commons threatens the Liberals with a large deficit.

The Land Restoration League.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—A large meeting of the Land Restoration League was held in St. James Hall last evening. Michael Davitt, Henry George, Miss Helena Taylor and several members of Parliament were present. Miss Taylor moved a resolution that land inalienably belonged to the people. She expressed her sympathy with the Scotch Crofters, and urged the abolition of the House of Lords. Michael Davitt seconded the motion. Henry George followed. Resolutions were also adopted, unanimously carried by the meeting, that the wealth accruing to America was not the most important in the history of the republic, because it relied on its own during which the people of America had been fighting about slavery and other matters therefore, (Cheers) he meant, said Mr. George, death to both the great parties and the threat of a new and 19-cent party, and, therefore, in Irish economic and social questions in America must come to the front.

A Hard Landlord.

The Marquis of Waterford is about to have a public funeral at Curraghmore. Widow villagers, who pay their rent promptly, but are usually two years behind, are afraid of drawn to be the sole recipients of the dead peer's bounty. Rents from 20 to 25 per cent. The case retains interest and complaint.

Remains Offered for Sale.

DUBLIN, Nov. 21.—Several estates offered for sale in the Irish Land Court, at the order of the Land Court, remain unsold. Bids are low and small.

The Manchester Martyr.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—The city Harrington, M. P., has given notice of a pledging additional evidence in regard to the Manchester murder case. The Home Secretary, Sir William Harcourt, has decided to adjourn the case for a month, with a request that an inquiry into the whole case may be conducted by English lawyers.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Armagh.—On Oct. 25, an old woman named Jane Gray, was killed by a runaway horse in Edgarstown, Portadown. It appears that the deceased was in the act of crossing the road from West-street, when a horse, which was attached to a cart, bolted, and, knocking the old woman down, dragged her out over her body.

On Oct. 25, at Ballymoyer, near Newtownhamilton, a farmer's wife named Mary Mackin, died from the effects of burns received the previous night. It appears Thursday was a wake, and tended to herself. She had a piece of lard. She was left alone for a few minutes, and on her return found the room on fire and her clothes on her.

Carlow.—An analysis of the result of the annual revision of Parliamentary voters for the county and borough of Carlow, shows that at the close of the revision, October, 1883, there were 1,124 voters on the county register, 1,027 Nationalists and 797 Conservatives; at at the recent revision there were 1,407 voters in the county, an increase of 283 made by the previous Nationalist majority of 227 has been increased to 610, while the Conservative majority has increased to the number of 1,407 voters. There was an unmanageable majority of the popular party, and the Nationalists were determined to have a candidate of their own, the result of the recent revision will be a very hard fought battle between the Nationalists and Conservatives.

Kerry.—On Oct. 25, at Killarney, a preliminary meeting, preliminary consisted of the most respectable Nationalists, and extensive farmers in the district, was held in the Town Hall, Killarney, for the purpose of establishing a branch of the Irish National League. Mr. Jeremiah Mahony, J. P., Rockfield, Chairman of the Town Commissioners, John O'Leary, Daniel Shea, P. L. G., T. Fleming, P. Foyle, Jeremiah O'Leary, and C. Wileman. On motion of Mr. C. Wileman, seconded by Mr. H. Shea, P. L. G., Mr. Sheehan took the chair. The committee of the first Home Rule party, has not awarded its brown medal to C. Fitzgerald, M. P., Ballinalee, Co. Kerry, on August 27, when he made the 8th of M. Kenny, aged 18 years, in the recommendation of the Mayor of Limerick, a memorial has also been awarded to T. Kearney, Grange, aged 17 years, of Co. Kerry, Limerick, for saving a child.

Kilkenny.—The Rev. Dr. Hayden, parish priest of St. Patrick, Kilkenny, and Vicar General of Ossory, died on Nov. 2. Father Hayden had been ailing for one week, and from the outset his friends had little hope for his ultimate recovery. Dr. Hayden was born in Pill, and entered his classical course in old Borrisle Hall, under the Rev. Dr. Ryan, P. P., Ballyragget, where he made his philosophy and theology, and was ordained in Maynooth, after being several years on the mission, he was appointed to Fanore Rosa, as pastor of St. Patrick's. While in Kilkenny he was respected and esteemed by all classes.

Limerick.—On Oct. 29, Mr. P. Roe, T. L. Drogheda, died suddenly. His death creates a vacancy in the Board of Guardians for the Harbor Board.

Mr. R. Uniwall, J. P., Dromtoll Hill, Drogheda, died on the 20th, death being the result of cancer of long standing. The deceased was managing trustee of the Nattarvilla property at Dowth, County Meath.

Longford.—On Oct. 30, the house of Andrew Boland, of Fainaccia, Ballinalee, was fired into and subsequently burned to the ground. A son with his wife and family awoke at about 1 o'clock and heard the report of the discharge of fire arms and the crash of the shot through the premises. Boland is hard on his property of Mr. More O'Ferrall.

Kilmorley.—Lord Clonmore calls the attention of the authorities to the evidence in the counties of Limerick and Clare of "No Local League Courts" published on the model of ordinary Petty Sessions courts, and asserts he deal with offences against the unwritten law of the Nation's Land.

JOHN ADAMS.

John Adams! friend of boyhood's time, full forty years are over,
Since you and I together strayed by lovely lake and meadow,
A wide expanse of open land, with intervals lay with them;
But memory over backward turns to youthful days with thee.
How by Pacific's sounding surge, I dream of summer days,
In this young town; when full of life, we tread the sparkling ways.
Of Dorset, Quincy's dreamy vale, John of Mass's verdant plain,
And wonder, shall that happy time, when armed with spear and bow,
We wandered the' early plains and glades of green Cocoa Grove,
And pine-clad lone embowered hill, like "Friday and Crusoe!"
How will a lone man's cheek and eye, of that delightful time
And hoped some day to lead our youth to self-imposed exile
Amongst the Indians, down the southern main.
Yes, we lived through that tender tale, by river, hill and lake,
By Delilah's cave and verdant hill, where palm trees sweet and fair
And he once reigned the' monarch king of all his realm enraptured.
Dear John, we lived that tender tale, we lived it, at that time
But ah! 'twas not the dreamland isle, where sweet hours and dream
When ideal fancy hath conducted you, as through the forest scene
When under elms filled with fragrance, and in sense of Lincoln green
"Bold Robin Hood" and merry-men, all in suits of Lincoln green
Shot the fat buck, or gallant prey, whose eyes like diamonds shone.
In search of Knight, to take to fight, the Prince of Aragon.
Our martial eyes know hill and dell and every leafy glade
From Fontainbleau Dale to greenwood tree, in Sherwood's leafy shade.
Bold Robin, Scarlett, Little John, those bold companions three
Were old companions, dearest John, for years with you and me.
With many a hearty "benison," we cheered them on their way,
As rang their merry bugle horns, through Sherwood's leafy array.
Through long, revolving years, old friend, 'mid many a care and pain,
Those happy days I'll treasure still, while there is life and reign.
When all the long, long summer days, I'd wander, I remember,
Through lane and meadow and pasture land, and through a meadow,
That pigeny off who knew such sport, when crowds of gold were laid
Could we but find an hour like that, no our fortunes would be made,
By many a cent, we'd lay our hand hands, and many a lonely pain
Would be lost all in vain our search, he never crossed our path.
On the top this that crowns the hill, where the sun shines so high
With gardens long, reflecting light like manor in the sky,
Or by Mahomet's tomb, by Nile, what blessed thoughts are thine
Of deep in earth, pilgrimage to Mecca's land that southern sea
Or wear our chaplet, lily-white, and ever ready to serve
By outward sign in outward depths, but sober bound the place,
In oftentimes dreams I see that undergraduate school
Where Mathew's hand despoile away, perched on his lofty stool,
I hear his tone of many a voice, long gone from earth away,
And wake to know that in that school my name's forgot to be
The books we read 'mock Latin' and 'Greek' or clearly rowan-tree
"Sanford and Merton," "Lucy Allaline," are ever dear to me.
Dear John, I know you've many load is still before my eyes,
"Get ahead" and "Lessons" "Greek" "Latin" "Roman" "Greek" "Latin" "Roman" "Greek" "Latin" "All Baba's" land,
"John Gilpin's Ride," and Wallace wight, the hero of Scotland.
Old friends that give me even now a life's declining age,
From cares and sorrows of years, thro' such delightful pass
But ah! I must confess, dear friend, the glamour they once shed.
That undeniable idiot dream of life's young morn is fled.
And some may call me wheer now, but give back the joy
Of youthful years, and of youthful hopes, I believed in, as a boy.
When earn, and rail, and ancient lines, by Jupiter, or Apollo,
Were fraught with hopes weird and wild, as Mary, Druid and Lhas
Dulce lie ghostly love so sweet, Mecca, Medina, Jerusalem
Or was hands clasped in hallowed ties, or wrinkle and regret lost;
To hear wild tales by Indian fire, of wonders and of pain lost;
Or wander in Sherwood's glade, to wander tangent-footed,
Or know the Russian's pistolets well, when death was hovering near,
Tell, like a solemn funeral cry upon the listening ear;
Then fairies peopled every glen, and glen, and ancient mound,
And circling fort on lonely hill, was "gentle" fairy ground,
Those times with mortifications bland, would their years banks invade,
Or gentle fairy sweet, with ploughshare, or with spade.
But ah! I like many of our land, they, have left that shore,
And dust, and rank, and hill-side fort, will never solve more
Who knows, but that in the night, when summer winds are wild
As they once school in that dear, from glen, and glade, and hill.
Could I, like one of old, have lived and died in Ireland
And have behind me years I've seen, by tropic isles and shore,
Yet all I could wish to tread those hills, a boy with you once more.
Yet life's a dual life, though this has removed away
From my home, and my friends, and that dear land, and all the friends I've known.
Dear old Ireland, green, where the hills and vales of green Tyrone.

Evelyn Barnard's Life and Love.

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY IN TWO CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER II.

He seldom—very, very seldom—had a jovial moment, but when he was alone he spoke aloud to himself.

"Never a word to stop put to this Evelyn, I cannot see you coming out your life in this fashion. Let us be married at once, so that I may have you away."

"Take me away?" Evelyn looked utterly amazed. "How could I ever go away?" she said.

"We must talk to you away," he answered. "How does any daughter ever go from home?"

"All daughters are not like me," she said, sadly, "nor are all homes like mine. Oh, Frederick, that can never be."

"And how long must I wait," he cried. "You said it must be long," she repeated him, but with no shade of reproach in her voice. "And if I must?"

She shocked herself. But had been short to ask? "Ah! seemed a very short time since then to her, but the feet forced itself upon her that in some harrassing eyes it might be very long. The children were a trouble. Yet once she did not think them so.

"Listen dear," he said. "Do you remember that I told you of my friend Rowan, who was once a clerk in the court house. He has lately died leaving his widow quite poor. I have no doubt that she would be not only willing, but glad to come her and take charge for little time for a time. Then you and I could be one, where you and I could come to one, and be happy as yet have some peace and rest."

How bright, how fair, that peace and rest seemed to weary Evelyn. Just then a cloud seemed to darken her sky, as opening to silence II, and as she opened one door, James Purcell opened another, and saw her flushed and distressed face. Hinfred had stilled the tumult except in Evelyn's heart. He only said good evening to her, and devoted himself so he had often done of late to bring happiness to the persons as well as to the children. But this night his amiably contented heart did not find its usual contentment in playing the simple games, and reading to Mr. Barnard, and listening with soft and true sympathy to Mrs. Barnard's complaints.

"She is not happy," sighed James "I saw it in her face."

"Who is not happy?"

Meanwhile in the next room, Hinfred argued long over the question. "How shall we be happy? never seeing that it resolved itself into, "How shall I be happy?"

Her Evelyn remained with horror any suggestion that she should leave her home in the present state of distress.

"I could not do such a thing," she pleaded. "I love them too much, and they love me and they need me. Cannot you be satisfied to come here as you have been doing?"

"I can never have you to myself," he said. "You are always thinking of some one else."

It was strange news for Evelyn to hear whose daily and nightly reproach was, "I neglect the others and think of him too much. She could not argue with him, she felt and was confused. What was it that she vaguely felt was wanting in him who was to seem to her perfect? What was wanting—a still crept over her—could anything be wanting in her love for him?

"Do not let me trouble you more about it to-night," she cried. "Read to me. Please."

She was kept awake much that night. The father needed her, the mother needed her, Alick, the youngest child, was threatened with the croup and needed her. Bella, who with the precociousness of understanding was painfully sensitive to any disturbing element, woke crying for her, and refused any comfort but that she could see and feel her, because she had dreamed that her darling sister was going away, never to return.

"Whatever put such a thought into your dear little head?" asked Evelyn.

"Nobody, nobody," Bella answered her, clinging the more tightly to her. "I felt it. I feel it. Oh, you will not go away."

"I am not going," said Evelyn tenderly.

"Not yet, dear, not yet.

"Never," persisted Bella, hysterically.

"Oh, I wish it might be never," exclaimed Evelyn, her tears flowing fast. "I do love you all so dearly. Why cannot we stay together always."

That night James Purcell was also awake for a long time, and he spoke to himself aloud, "She is not happy. Oh, what wouldn't I give to make her happy."

And suddenly he found himself saying "I wish she were mine. I wish she belonged to me! I wish I could take her to them all for her.

He stopped short in the street. What was he saying! Evelyn Barnard was another man's promised wife. James stood very still for a little while, then turned off his left and made his way to church.

It was late of a Friday night, but the priests were in the confessionals, and twenty people were waiting, late as it was to make confession, for the next day was a great feast. James sank down on his knees and hid his face, and looked into his beautiful heart. Yes, he was thinking his happiness to a Protestant, though God alone that was betrothed to another. What was to do?"

Yes, what should he do! for as he told himself, the Bernards needed him. The latter would never be to them what he was. Might he not at least, go there as a friend to help and comfort them?

He was the last of all who waited in the church, he came away, he knew what his duty was, and he crushed down broadly and resolutely the voice of his leader lest before that one stern call of duty.

"God's way is best," said James Purcell humbly. "He will take care of them, and I will not go wrong."

He fancied that perhaps Evelyn would speak to him, would ask him why he had deserted them, but for three days she scarcely looked at any one, and never spoke unless addressed directly. She was pale and as the night of her own face that at last she would not be spoken to, I suppose I don't feel as awkward and good for nothing as I should if I did to you, so perhaps I didn't watch it all. No, I might never do that, mind you. Let's pretend I never did, Miss Evelyn.

"Oh," she cried, "I don't don't want to pretend anything, I don't understand, I meant have you considered how disagreeable it is for the persons as will do anything in here, and what a burden you are taking on your shoulders."

"Why, no," he answered, thoughtfully, "I never did. I think this is—this is—I don't know how to say it. But I think this is a beautiful house because you are in it, and I love your people because you love them. I thought it was I who was dragging, and the burden and the responsibility, because I never knew how to manage money, and you will have to look after me a good deal. Could you?"

"Oh!" gasped Evelyn again.

And then she was silent, and the two characters stood out plainly before her mind, that of the man who loved her for his own sake, and that of the man who, loving her, forgot himself in her needs and cares.

"Mr. Purcell," she said, "I will you promise me faithfully one thing?"

"I will, indeed, Miss Evelyn," he answered, with his broadest look.

"Will you promise me that, whatever happens, you will never draw back from what you have said to-night; that you will stand to your word, and help me always?"

"Yes," he said, simply, his whole heart in his eyes.

"Whatever happens!" she repeated with emphasis, the memory of the past disappointment still weighing hard upon her young soul, that, amid within a few months, had seen three times a betrayed trust such as

"Whatever happens," he replied. It seems to me only to great a joy to be allowed to share anything with you and your."

She stood there in her youth and beauty, and she knew that she loved him, and loved him as she had never loved any one before. She knew that nobody, however wise or handsome, or courtly, could match for her this unselfish loyalty, this good heart laid humbly at her feet; and she laughed out gaily and triumphantly.

He had not dreamed that she could mistake why her engagement was broken. Then, looking at his kind dull face, she thought her secret all her own. Every one laughed at James, and every one came to him in trouble. Evelyn came as many as the rest.

"Mr. Purcell, you have not been to see us some time—not for a long time. Mamma has been very kind considerate for us. But Bella is ill, and she calls and asks for you. Would you be willing to come and see her Willing! James turned abruptly round to his window again. "Yes, Miss Evelyn, after office, he said, gruffly, and Evelyn departed, wondering. She could not see the dim in James' eyes, nor the trembling of his lips.

A MOTHER'S MAGNETIC ATTRUCTION.

Mary's Forty-Niner Answered a Mother's Tears

In the crowd at the Lake Shore depot the other day was a big fellow wearing a tar overcoat and a broad-brimmed hat. He had a little old woman clung the platform with his hands in his pockets, smoking and singing, apparently in the best of humor. Only at those inquisitive moments always to be found near a crowd of people did the big fellow sing him for sometime, finally ventured to address him.

"From the West?"

The individual in tar removed his cigar and drawled:

"Going East?"

"You bet.

The inquisitive man became interested. He was going east, too. He had been west since he had been east of Lake Michigan, and he was going down to see the old folks in Pennsylvania.

"That sun's a marker to me," said the squatter, with great emotion. I came west in 49 and this is my first appearance this side of the Rocky Mountains. I live when I'm to home on Maine and that's where I'm going now. When I left there I was boy of 22 or thereabouts. Do you think they will know me now? I'm a stranger to the street. But there's no helping it your mother's gone, and I'm alone. I'm nobody will care whether your Bobby (calling his wife by the name of his mother) or Lord Palmerston, suggested her visitor to me, but I'm sure I'm not the kind of boy Lord Palmerston takes to, or I'd have put himself that has dinner with the Queen, and has shook hands with the Czar and don't he tell the Houses of Lords and the Parliaments what for, and don't he make the Queen and the Czar do what he wants they ought to do? Sure it's not yourself that'll get efficiency of a proper, Pshaw-to-everything! over and he sits biggest room in it; he's equal to the Queen of Wales, and perhaps he put him," Well," replied his lady friend, "I'm going to London, and I'll try to see him, but I don't think that the person who had shaken hands with Lord Palmerston himself, her gratitude, it was scarcely more than that in the acquaintance of the land and the row.

The Best Education.

It is in youth as in after life that vicious propensities are best counteracted, not by stern precept and rigid law, but by turning the feelings and energies of the youthful mind, by giving a higher object to generous ambition, by concentrating the active energies on some worthy pursuits; by teaching, in fine, not what we shall, from gratification in mental and moral culture. Let a man's pride be to be a gentleman, furnish him with elegant and refined pleasures, and make him with the love of intellectual pursuits and taste, rather than poverty for the turning on a good citizen, and a good Christian. Let a man's pride confined him by the strictest moral and religious discipline, kept him in innocent and unsuspecting ignorance of all the vices of youth, and in the mechanical and velvety routine of his servanet system of education.

A Cure for Heart Disease.

Some distressing cases have been effected by the use of Dr. Miles' celebrated Nervine. Nervous Debility, Nervous Headache and Nervous Prostration are all frequent symptoms of heart disease.

Mr. Wiseman's Confession.

I always thought my wife a very careless little woman, and I used to tell her so. She was very cool-headed, and did not mind, and on that day when we went to Hotherstone to receive the little legacy her uncle left her, and had it paid over in crisp bank-notes, which she put in her pocket-book, I said to her as we went

"Now Anna Maria, my dear, you'll put them in your pocket-book, I know, but you'll carry it in your hand and have it snatched away. So let me take charge of it. These thousand dollars is too big a sum to be lost, because it can not be replaced.

"Well, yes, that's true, Solomon," said she. "So it is, I've got the pocket-book in my bag and my bag on her arm, and I think it is safe."

I said that some eyes may cut the strap," said I.

Anna Maria stopped and undid the bag and took out the pocket book, which I put in the inside, and the inside pocket of my overcoat, and we walked together arm-in-arm, and talked about the little legacy and what we would do with it, until we got hungry, and I proposed lunch at Stoffen's before we took the cars for home. Anna Maria liked the idea, and we proceeded to carry it out.

We had a very pleasant lunch and well spread. Anna Maria took off her cloak, and her overcoat, and it was just justice to it, paid, of course, out of my own purse for it, and put on her overcoat and her cloak and we left the restaurant; but just outside Anna Maria stopped, "Oh!" and dropped my arm and ran back.

"Has some one spoken in a moment smiling.

"What was the matter?" I asked. Did you leave anything?

She held up her handkerchief which she had in her hand, and answered

"You said—"

And I laughed.

"Oh, you what a careless little soul you are," I said. "Not to be trusted at all."

"Of course—of course," I said. "A man has so many things to think of he's obliged to be more commonsense. I don't blame you, little woman. Don't think that.

And she giggled, as she generally did when she was pleased.

"Well, I'm glad you don't blame me," she said, "and I'm glad I don't lose on the way up.

Our own house seemed warm and cheerful after the long journey. A bit of supper awaited us, and all looked cheerful and snug in bed, and seemed anxious to go. So we went her away and sat down. I put the pocket-book on my overcoat.

"Before we do anything else I'll put the money in safe," said I, and I took it from the pocket-book and put it in my pocket-book. Now don't take care because you are careless.

With this just I dived into my right-hand inner pocket. I never shall forget the cold sensation that ran through me as I found it empty.

"Have I said to myself. "What time I began to rummage every pocket in my coat, and my waistcoat, and my hat, I did not my other pockets. I seized the lamp and looked over the carpet on the floor, then, with a groan, sank into a chair.

"Why, what is the matter?" she cried. "Tell me, Solomon."

I gasped, I groaned. "You never will forgive me. It is not possible. You'll never forgive me," I said to Maria. I've robbed. The money is gone."

"What money?" she cried.

"The money your uncle left you."

"Have you lost it?"

The third must have put the cloth," said I. "I spread the cost again. But no; there was no cloth, no cloth for me—not a sight of one.

"I don't think it could have been stolen, my dear," said my wife, calmly—very calmly considering. "Have you looked well?

"Looked, indeed! I ripped. "I'm positive I left it in the inside pocket of my overcoat. I must offer a reward.

"What would you give?" asked my wife, sadly.

"Anna Maria" I cried. "You love your money.

I had no more words.

"Let you dear old goose," said Anna Maria, "I'll find your money. I think I remembered that your coat hung upside down and not it to speak to you, I suppose I don't feel as awkward and good for nothing when I am with you as I do you, so perhaps I didn't watch it all. No, I might never do that, mind you. Let's pretend I never did, Miss Evelyn.

"Oh," she cried, "I don't don't want to pretend anything, I don't understand, I meant have you considered how disagreeable it is for the persons as will do anything in here, and what a burden you are taking on your shoulders."

A UNCHECKERED CAREER.

Gassed by a Tiger, Bitten by a Moccasin, Struck by Lightning, Tried for Murder.

MILTON-SMITH, Ga., November 11th. The death of Hiram Roberts, or Horton Romney, removes a singular character from the scene of life. He first appeared there in 1844. He had a remarkable story, and he acted her scrutiny, being of small stature, lean, and of a clay-lack color, the nostrils, perhaps, of private meals of of the chimney top. He said he was from Texas, came a bronco that then wild country, at that he was born in swamp.

The family with whom he lived treated him well, but he was a wanderer, and he and another Alpaca swamp. Romney was to find a row. When within a short distance of the swamp, he was attacked by a spring out of the bushes and brought him down to the ground. He fell on hinkies, and the jaguar seemed to be in no hurry to kill him. Indeed, he seemed to amuse himself by playing with the prey, and he was then in the direction of the house. Being satisfied as to the direction the other larger lay in wait and concealed in it, but in back slipped over instead of penetrating the skull. It hit the shoulder and stunned him, with the same result, and the boy, with a presence of mind wonderful in one so young, dodged and ran finish while the animal was tearing huge strips from his quivering flesh. The tiger, after holding on to one long enough to have a meal, or at least, as if listening if he was breathing, seized another. That was enough for the boy. He ran home, and he fainted.

Romney said that he was sick and lame for a year after this. He was equally surprised when his companion gave him a bite. He said that he was a bit of a tiger, and that he was a bit of a tiger, and that he was a bit of a tiger, and

Farm and Home.

TWO LITTLE EMPTY STOCKINGS.

Two little empty stockings hang
Behind the kitchen door,
Two little pairs of shoes are thrown
Upon the farmhouse floor.
The little feet that all day long
Have pattered up and down the stairs,
Have pattered up the stairs at dawn
And now are sound in bed.

Dear little feet, how soon they stray
From the old farmhouse far away!
How soon they leave the family fold
To wait the shining streets of gold.
To walk the shining streets of gold.

Two little pairs of shoes are thrown
Upon the farmhouse floor;
Two feet that now are sound in bed
Will no more enter their doors.
One pair of little feet have taken
To walk a foreign way;
The other pair of little feet
Are quiet in the grave.

Dear little feet, how soon they stray
From the old farmhouse far away!
How soon they leave the family fold
To walk the shining streets of gold.

Fresh Air.

To be healthy and enjoy life, nothing is more important than fresh air. The more fresh air we breathe, the less will be our doctors' bill. We must try to get fresh air without draughts, and without feeling cold. The air should be made to move. This is cheapest done by having a hole cut, say ten inches square over the door, and covered with perforated zinc, to the top of the sash frame the whole length of the window and about four inches deep; the top sash may then be lowered, and in this way the air is being constantly changed above our heads, and we do not feel draughts. Any working man can do this for a few pence. In bedrooms this is even more important than in sitting-rooms. A cheap and simple plan is to open the top window and draw down the blind.

A Problem for the Curious.

The following problem is on the blackboard in the baggage-room at the passenger station, and has evoked considerable discussion: A man owns a horse, the actual value of which is $100. He asks two strangers separately to estimate the value of the animal, and one answers $1000, and the other $10. The question to be solved is which of the two men were the nearer right in their estimate. Two hundred years ago this same question was asked two celebrated philosophers and each returned a different answer.

Farms in France.

There are millions of farms in France containing from a quarter of an acre to four acres, writes a correspondent from Dijon. I find that about one acre and a half is about all the most ambitious man wants. The rent for land is always one-half the crop. The land is worth about four hundred dollars an acre; or if in grapevines, six hundred dollars. This is why France is like a garden. In England there are two hundred and twenty-seven thousand land owners; in France there are seven million land owners. The Frenchmen own his two acres, with his barefooted wife cutting grain with a sickle by his side, is happy and contented, because he knows no better. Such a life would drive an American farmer mad. The Frenchman thrives because he spends nothing. He has no waste beyond the constant food and the washings of the grape skins after the wine is made. Yes, he is thrifty. He saves money, too. The aggregated wealth of thirty million, poor, degraded, barefooted, peasants makes France rich. The ignorance of the French farmer is appalling. I never saw a newsmaper in a French farm village. They know: The Frenchman sows the country food; about the same as his horse. He will eat coarse bread and wine for breakfast; soup, bread and wine for dinner; and, perhaps bread and milk for supper. He does not know what coffee or tea is.

Camphor.

Camphor is made in Japan in this way: After a tree is felled to the earth it is cut up into chips, which are laid in a mass, on a large iron pot partially filled with water, and placed over a slow fire. Through holes in the bottom of the pot steam slowly rises, and, heating the chips generates oil and camphor, becomes gaseous, the lids with the chips has a closely fitting cover. From this cover a bamboo pipe leads to a succession of other tubs with bamboo connections, and the last of these tubs is divided into two compartments, one above the other, the dividing floor being perforated with small holes to allow the vapor and oil to pass to the lower compartment. The upper compartment is supplied with a straw layer, which catches and holds the camphor in crystal in deposit as it passes to the cooling process. The camphor is then separated from the straw, packed in wooden tubs and is ready for market. The oil is used by the natives for illuminating and other purposes.

Fruit at Breakfast.

Custom sanctions the use of fruit at breakfast, but some persons consuming green apple mean, as being cooling and laxative. However this may be any one who has followed the custom of having fresh fruit at breakfast, will speak heartily of its excellent effects. A nice way to serve strawberries, if large and perfectly fresh, is put them on individual dishes, having the hulls on, that they may be held by these and dipped into powdered sugar, which should also be put in tiny bowls, one at each plate. If oranges are served in the morning, cut them into very small pieces and scatter sugar over them. This way will be appreciated by every one, for the most graceful woman may appear awkward when eating an orange, or when attempting to cut it with a teaspoon.

How Rover Saved the Cows.

A gentleman who lives among the Catskills owns a bright and powerful Newfoundland dog called Rover. Of large and commanding stature, Rover has a kindly eye, and is one of the most intelligent beasts in the country. One Sunday, last winter, when the family returned from Dorkertown, where they had been attending church, Rover did not greet them as was his invariable custom. The members of the family were quite in consternation at his absence. After they had been but a short time in the house, they were startled by the lowing of Brown's cows, as opposite the door the dog rushed in as though, and going over to where Mr. Tinsworth stood, he looked up appealingly in his face, and gave utterance to low mournful distress cry, and tugged at his master's coat. At Mrs. Tinsworth's suggestion, a lantern was procured and Rover was followed to the stables, where five cows had been yoked together in their stalls. A heavy beam had fallen out of its socket; and the cows, when found, were all prostrated with their heads over their necks. A few hours more, and the whole number would have perished. They were speedily liberated from their perilous condition.

—Five sixths of an acre of the molten lead between the ribs of a cow, when a single rib might have been saved by the premature use of Allen's Lung Balsam! Be wise in time, and keep Allen's Lung Balsam by you!

—Buy shirts when they are down! $15 shirts for $10 cash; $10 buys $20 shirts; $7 buys $15 shirts. Dunnell & Co., 211 Post street.

HOW HIGGINBOTTOM WAS REFORMED.

A Hint for Making Home Attractive.

Mr. Higginbottom deeply bewailed his fondness for rum and concert saloons, but he appealed to all unprejudiced men to concede that he was really blameless "If my home was only made attractive to me, gentlemen," he wails the judge and jury of the members of the leading temperance society, who periodically called on him to urge him to reform, "I would gladly spend all my evenings at home, but as it is I am literally driven to seek comfort elsewhere, though I am a man eminently fitted to enjoy the pleasures of home life." So struck were several temperance men with the form of Mr. Higginbottom's remarks, that not long ago they called on his wife and suggested to her the advisability of her unhappy husband by making his home attractive.

Mrs. Higginbottom consented to make the desired effort, and as a first step, visited her husband's favorite concert saloon under the protection of a disguise and a detective officer. When she had learned what was the attractions which most powerfully appealed to Mr. Higginbottom's mind, she proceeded to reproduce them as far as practicable in her own house. She had the parlor carpet taken up and the bare floor nicely sprinkled with beer and stumps of cigars. She removed the pictures from the walls and hung in their places cheap and gaudy chromos representing impossibly young women in undesirable costumes. Two dirty wooden tables and a supply of wooden chairs from the kitchen completed the furniture of the room, and it began to assume a really attractive appearance.

Before the hour of her husband's return from his business Mrs. Higginbottom hired a man to play on the accordeon and another to torture a violin, besides three profusely ornamented drunkards of great indecency of speech and manner, and a nondescript burglar, kindly furnished for the occasion by the police captain of the precinct. They were in the kitchen two fresh girls, who were clean, decent and modest girls. These two she instructed in the art of serving beer and spirits, and dressed them in costumes that were extremely vulgar, though the law could not be said to be improper. Having thus arranged all things she met her husband at the door and escorted him into the dining-room, where he sat his dinner, unconscious of the transformation that had been wrought in the first parlor.

After dinner Mr. Higginbottom lit his cigar and remarked that he must go out for an hour or two to see a friend. His wife, with a sweet smile, told him that he need not go out, for she had finally discovered how to make home attractive to him. So saying, she ushered him into the parlor and left him to a seat at one of the dirty tables. The fiddler and the accordeon player immediately struck up, the drunkards, at a sign from Mrs. Higginbottom, began to swear and wrangle, and the burglar sidled up to Mr. Higginbottom and invited him to drink. The two Irish girls brought beer and spilled it on Mr. Higginbottom's table, they called him "dear," and asked him to "open a bottle of wine," and Mrs. Higginbottom, apologizing for the latter act, said they were undeniably decent girls, assured her husband that, nevertheless, she was ready to admit that she had finally learned to make home attractive; that she hoped to spend many jolly evenings with him, and would like a hot whisky without any further delay.

Mr. Higginbottom was at first completely dazed, but in a few moments he recovered his senses. He ordered the girls to go into the kitchen and stay there, and he pitched the drunkards out of the front door and ordered the musicians and the burglar to follow them. Then he informed his wife that he had been an idiot all his life, and largest ass, and that if she would restore the furniture he would never complaint of it was of attractiveness.

New Jersey as Foreign.

The origin of the allusion to New Jersey as a foreign country is as follows:—After the downfall of the first Napoleon, his brother Joseph, who had been king of Spain, and his nephew, Prince Murat, sought refuge in this country, bringing with them great wealth. Joseph Bonaparte started to build a palatial residence, but he did not wish to become a citizen, having hopes of returning to Europe. To soothe him as an alien to hold real estate required a special act of the Legislature. He tried to get one passed in several States, but failed. He was disgusted, especially because Pennsylvania refused. After this he applied to the New Jersey Legislature, which granted both his and Prince Murat the privilege of purchasing land. They bought an extensive track of land near Bordentown, and built magnificent dwellings, and fitted them up in the most costly manner. Rare paintings, costly sculptures, &c., were profuse, and selected with the greatest care, and the grounds laid out with exquisite taste. Joseph Bonaparte's residence was perhaps the finest in America. Thousands of people from all parts of the country visited him and were treated courteously. He was extremely liberal with his money, and gave great impetus to the business of the little town. The Philadelphians, finding that he had apparently no end of money, and that he was in his lowest business generally, regretted, when too late, that they retarded his hasty home among themselves, and, to keep up their mortification, would continue to taunt Jersey men with having a king—with hoisting the King of Spain to rule over them. They were called Spaniards and foreigners on that account. But these taunts harmed no one, as the Jersey men had nothing by allowing him to settle among them, and thus "foreigner," jokingly applied to Jersymen, has come down to us as a term the origin has been forgotten, except by a few of the past generation.

New Catalogue of Organs.

The MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN AND PIANO COMPANY have issued a very elegant catalogue of their organs. It forms a 112 page pamphlet of large size, and is more illustrations accordingly giving the latest advance of the art of organ construction to those who are thinking of purchasing, or desirous of such, information. The company claim that the improvements in their organs are the great forward step which their organs have been received all over the world, with so many of their testimonials, and awarded medals in such instances as Paris's Industrial Exhibition for 1878, and Melbourne, Australia, for medals, diplomas and certificates of honor distinct.

In looking over such a catalogue one is forcibly reminded of the great advance which the business of musical instruments has attained. Twenty-five years since only a few pianos were made in Boston, and these had not and did not compare favorably with instruments costing very much more at prices varying from $1 to $1,000. Now Boston makes as much yearly in the United States, which are sold in all civilized countries at prices varying from $1 to $1,000.

The organ has gone through with this change, and even more marked, in the result of a great deal of hard, intelligent work, and the results have never yet equal. This was always to make the organ more and more a musical instrument, and to make it more and more a musical instrument, devil of hell—the demon of strong drink. Fourteen years ago a body of men met in Baltimore and organized the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America. He thanked God he was one of those men, and he has never been either then proud of her record and of the work she has accomplished. Bishop Ireland's name will go down to posterity as the Father Mathew of the West. (Applause.) May he live to see the day when it will be a shame not to be a Catholic total-abstinence man. No Catholic people should be engaged in any way in throwing temptation in the way of their fellow-men. He was ashamed that so much of the liquor traffic is in the hands of the Catholics, and to see so many Catholic and Irish names over the doors of saloons. There is work in this temperance cause for all of us. Let us be up and go at it.

CATHOLIC TOTAL ABSTINENCE UNION.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

BISHOP SPALDING'S ADDRESS.

Bishop Spalding, of Peoria, paid an eloquent tribute to the total abstinence workers. He said the duty of man is to love the church, country and the family. These are the three great forces which lift man above himself. Their great enemy is drink. It is not the only moral evil, but in our over-century drunkenness is a greater obstacle to the Catholic Church than all other vices. Loss of membership and a false Protestant tradition are furthered by this vice more than by all others. The bonhom of Catholic science—lawyers were its most opponents on the Church. What tends to lower the Catholic Church degrades the cause of Christianity and civilization. Virtue and civil liberty are twin sisters. It is not because of poor wages that there is suffering and poverty. It is reckless waste. Then grows up the antagonism of labor for capital. Sobriety is the great remedy for labor troubles. It is no hardship to labor, but it is hard to suffer poverty in the midst of degradation. In advocating temperance we plaided the cause of woman and of the poor man. The Spaniard was not drunk and sat poisoned will put him in a carriage and send him home. Laughter! Laughter! Man is looked up and he name is published to the world.

When Bishop Spalding finished his address it was nearly 11 o'clock. President McGlynn came to the desk and called for a vote of thanks to the distinguished prelates who had spoken. These were given with heartiness, and the meeting was adjourned.

ELECTION EXPENSES.

What it is Said to Have Cost Candidates in New York—An Army of Workers.

The day after the election the New York World had the following:

In the gray dawn of the election day about three hundred express wagons rattled over the streets of New York, carrying little French-and-Judy boxes to the election precincts. As the ballot-peddlers are not allowed close to the polling-places, these stalls had to be furnished by the candidates for office, that their workers might be on the spot. To accommodate the several varieties and fashions required about five hundred in each election district, which made a total of 3,000 for the city and at 25 apiece, the sum was $17,000. Around these were gathered the party workers who numbered twenty-five for each box, making a total of 17,850 men. These got 50 apiece, which cost $892,500 for their services alone. When they found an undecided man they did not hand him under a hand full of balls to stuff, but took him directly to the nearest saloon and saw that he was fitted to detail. The good man was grateful and did as he was directed, but the healer door on the candidates for the money expended. Fifty dollars was not a very big roll yesterday, and suppose that each of the 17,850 workers had had a handful of ballots, and it was estimated that the cost of printing them was $2,000. Add the cost of arrival at voting that forty-six candidates of each of the political parties expended about $1,000 apiece, and the total fund was $900,000. Each worker had a handful of ballots, and it was estimated that the cost of printing them was $220,000. This was arrived at by computing that forty-six candidates of each of the political parties expended about $1,000 for personal ballots in the different districts. The combined candidates had to meet the following personal expenses:

Rent for ticket-peddlers	$17,850
Services of workers	892,500
Paid for ballots (cost)	220,000
Cost of polling tickets	20,000
Total	$1,350,000

This was the cost of the go-as-you-please race of Republicans, Democrats, Sollitarians, Prohibitionists and independents anxious to be Congressmen, Mayor, Comptroller, Alderman, Judge, Coroner, District Attorney, Civil Justice, or Assemblyman. Each candidate was in the hands of his friends, who spent his money for him, and his only trouble was drawing checks when the server of a connection lent made their demand. The expense varied greatly for the several candidates, being greatest for Mayor, Congressman, Comptroller and Judge. It is said that Green and Grant were called upon for about $500,000 each and Gibbs for $15,000. The Judges of the Court of Common Pleas were assessed $10,000. Congressmen had to pay according to the closeness of their election. Some were assessed $50 for each election district, and there are seventy-seven in some Congressional districts, making an item of $3,850, which some had to pay for some portion of their party. In County Democracy had the most power in a particular district, and it was said that a candidate for Congress very heavily. Tammany being contented with less and giving Hall with odd less. The reason was that of the problem factions, and this money was placed by committees of them scattered organizations in the hands of trusted workers who paid it to the leaders as the claims came in. The principal bills were paid by the candidates in person, but they paid only a small sum, the bulk of the current for them. The bills were never paid for by the party or faction interested, but with money collected from the candidates. Assembly aspirants paid about $400 into the General Expense fund, and Aldermen paid the same, except the world-be presidents of the Aldermanic Board, who were assessed $1,000. The private expenses incurred by these candidates in their districts and other favors were also great, so that they cleared with less than $2,000 apiece. The Republicans had a fund of $100,000 put to the additional expense of lithographs of thousands.

The city, county and State bear the expense of running the election in the state. At each polling-place are four inspectors, at a salary of $7.50 each for five days, or $150 for each booth. Two supervisors of election at each polling-place are paid $5 a day for five days, or $50 for each booth. Two clerks, at $7.50 for one day, makes $15, and the rent, which is $5 for one day, crosses the total amount of a polling-place to $265. For New York's 712 booths the cost was $188,560. The total amount of money necessary to worry through the day was as follows:

Expense of candidates	$1,350,000
Expense of the State and county	188,560
Total	$1,538,560

Previous to the election, the national, State and local tickets and candidates probably expended $100,000 for printed documents and postage stamps, which were sent to New York voters, making a grand total of $1,638,560, or nearly a million and a half dollars.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

Two Nationalist Victories.

DUBLIN, Dec. 1.—John O'Connor (Parnellite) has been elected Mayor of Dublin, and Madden (Nationalist) Mayor of Cork.

Gladstone Presents the Redistribution Bill.

LONDON, December 1. In the Commons, today, Gladstone presented the Redistribution Bill, provides that all towns of more than 15,000 inhabitants and small boroughs shall be joined into counties, that 165 towns shall be entitled to one member. England will possess 60 additional members. The redistribution of Wales and Ireland are unchanged. Scotland will have twenty additional members. The city of London will have thirty-seven, Liverpool and Manchester twenty-nine and Birmingham twenty-four. Lancashire gains Lancashire fifteen additional members.

Parnell, in an interview, stated that he claim that the Redistribution bill gives a gain of five seats in Parliament to the Irish Nationalists.

Mr. Wright has been recommended for a Certificate of Honor at the Honor Examination held on 24th and 25th ult., and takes rank accordingly.

Dublin.—The committee of the whole house of the Dublin Corporation appointed to consider the question of renaming the streets of the metropolis have based their report. The committee are of opinion that such change is desirable, but thinks, they say, should be undertaken in such a manner as to cause the least possible inconvenience to the postal service. For this reason the council is recommended to adopt only one change at present—viz., to substitute "O'Connell street" for "Sackville street," and to use the actual changing of the name until the merged into another.

A patriotic Irishman, who gives name to his identity but the signature "Mere Irishman," has sent in to the Treasurer of the Dublin Aldermen $500 towards the Sullivan National Tribute. The Cheer Times is an eulogistic obituary notice of the late Alexander M. Sullivan, refers to the fact that when some of the Socialist members would take any interest in the preservation of Dublin as the Highlands, Mr. Sullivan, then a member of Parliament, acceded to the request of a number of patriotic Highlanders, and carried bills in Parliament for the preservation of the old Highlands.

The new Chief Secretary for Ireland is paying a visit to the Lord Mayor of Dublin and the Dublin Guards. It is announced that an experienced detective has been laid off to guard Mr. Campbell Bannerman, while the Irish Secretary (Mr. Trevelyan) has dispensed with the services of the police officer who was for the present attendant when he was at the Irish Office.

Kerry.—The Nationalists of Duffy held a meeting in their district on Sunday, the 2nd Nov. 2, Mr. James Coll McLoughlin occupying the chair. The land war resolutions adopted was one sending greetings to the Mayor and Corporation of Limerick for the gallant stand they have made in sending the bar for action and proposed on that city.

Limerick.—The heathen evictions on Inscotstand Island, where were shocked a short time ago by the burning of the Wee, so far as the country is concerned, with vigor. Several criminal proceedings have followed, and the local authorities and the parent have sent the local agent to the Wee, extra police expenses for the half year ending September, 1884, to show cause to the contrary by the 17th inst.

A boy named James Keogh, fifteen years of age, whose father lives near Doon, county Limerick, was shot on Nov. 1 on an evicted farm by taken by a farmer named Cullen, near Tim Quinlan's Castle. The bullet entered his head, and death was instantaneous. It is impossible to say whether the act occurred in the result of accident or design. The unfortunate boy was the eldest of a family.

Monaghan.—Michael Meaney, Esq., second son of Chas. Meaney, late of Castleblayney, Monaghan, has been called to the Bar. Mr. Meaney has been connected for a period of 21 years with Queen's Bar Examinations held on 24th and 25th ult., and takes rank accordingly.

THE VISIT OF THE CHRIST-CHILD.

A CHRISTMAS LEGEND, WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY HARRIET W. SKIDMORE. (Marie.)

It was the holy Christmas Eve,
In happier time of yore,
When Faith with a docile world
Her heavenly message bore—
When "man of good will" were not few,
(As in the days of old)
To spread the tidings of peace,
And offer worship unto
Where mysteries of Love Divine
In sacred silence bright,
And the holy shepherd still revealed
To guileless human sight.

It was the blessed Christmas Eve—
And o'er the snowy hours
The strong and sturdy traveler
Went on, in joyful haste
Went on, towards the star of home,
The heavenly-sight's cheering ray,
That showed, to Love's sweet Paradise
Its pilgrim way.

The dear home-mother's happy smile
Shed softest sunshine there—
And children throned, the blossoms bright,
Within its garden fair.
And ah! upon the mother's face
Well pitied his skill would be,
For coming of the Christ-Child blest!
To dress the Christmas was time,
For coming of the Christ-Child blest!
What holy joy then, thought
With purest peace, and sweetest joy
Were crowned by the blessed!
Again he saw the wondrous sons,
The Son Divine, with Joyful Tears,
Lay, throned in glory! a human Child!
Yet, Lord of Heaven!
He saw the Infinite Mystery—
"Upon her Infant God—
He saw Infant's upward eyes,
And lily-blooming red—
Again the maiden-mother was filled
With glad, celestial glow,
While angels hymns thronged on high,
And shepherds bowed below—
"Thou Lord of Heaven, to us, for our sakes,
Did in Jesus Thy Heaven above,
For them, and for Thy Paradise come,
Fill all my heart with love,
And crown Thy Christ-Child this night,
Of Light that shone in manger lone,
"On that holy Christmas Eve."

A crowd of unbelievers meets his ear—
And then, a children mass
So sad, it had his very heart
To hear that piteous tone!
And as, with faltered glance he paused
Through twilight's pallid grey,
"Let us the cold Christ-Child" every breast
A shivering intent lay!
Quickly he raised, with accent tender care,
That little trembling form—
And sheltered it in his kindly heart,
Beneath his mantle warm.
"Thou art not cold," he said, "how hath it chanced
Thou art all white in the snow?
Then on the black and barren moor

The Cousins.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

BY ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

It was rehearsal night at St. Godula's. The choir hold its weekly reunions and practisings in the basement of the old church; and Benedict Bornemann was the organist. He was seated now at the instrument; a tall, slender young man, with a fair, delicate moustache. His mood seemed one, all-in-all, together, of a gentle, scholarly appearance. The hands in his hand upon the keys were white and shapely as a lady's, but there was a nervous tremor in the fingers to-night, as they played softly the opening notes of the Ave Verum of Von Weber's Mass; and a flush rose in his usually colorless cheek, as he lifted his eyes to the face of a girl who stood directly at his side.

She was not more than eighteen; a small girl, but exquisitely formed. Her face bore a striking resemblance to that of Bernardine in blue ribbon-tied, for below her rounded cheek and the brow and eyes, left than only exposed, the expression of a child like purity as well as a woman's grace, good sense (the transparency of the dove combined with the prudence of the serpent). This was Benedict's cousin, Schola Bornemann.

"Now, Schola," said he, encouraging; and she began to sing. A splendid contralto voice it was: mellow, and of unusual range and power. She sang the second words of that pathetic Agnus Dei (one of Von Weber's chefs d'œuvre) with remarkable expression and the nicest articulation. It was really more declaiming than singing.

Throwing her whole soul into the pleading words, the young girl with strange life, did not appear to notice that Benedict's eyes were fixed with a strange expression upon her rapt upturned face. He if Schola was blind to all save her music, those eyes two other persons present who were not.

One was a large, robust maiden on the night of the organist—the leading soprano of the choir. She was nearer twenty than twenty, a strong-featured brunette, and extremely plain, her only facial beauties being her pretty teeth and a pair of fine dark eyes. She was more richly dressed than any of the choristers, which, indeed, she might well be, seeing that she was Agatha Stein, the daughter and only child of a substantial mill-owner, the wealthiest parishioner of St. Godula's. She had been betrothed to Benedict Bornemann for two years past; but the marriage had been postponed from time to time, owing to Benedict's delicate health and somewhat desultory prospects. Agatha's German sire was prudent and farsighted; and the young people, if they wished to gain his consent, must be in a position to support the daughter of his house in comfort. Of late years, the young man had begun to feel that he was doing a wrong in keeping his betrothed waiting so long; and he had resolved to speak to his father about it, on the morrow. Meanwhile, he was thinking of this, as he sat there, with his eyes fixed on the face of a girl who was singing his music, and his heart was correct critics; then went on to speak of some new magazines and some valuable books he was about adding to the catalogue of the library. At last, a propos of nothing, he asked abruptly, "And how did you find the Mullers-to-day, my child?"

"Oh, those poor, dear creatures!" ejaculated Schola, her clear eyes lifted in reply, her lovely face flushing bright with her emotions. "I cannot tell you how glad I am, Father, that you put them on my sick list. They are so much more comfortable than they were at first; and Gretchen was so grateful to you to-day for that generous alms to be a bridesmaid!"

"Tut, tut," said the priest, smiling. "It was but a trifle. If poor Muller were only able to get on his feet again, and to go to his bench, he would need no one's help; for he is an excellent workman."

"So he said this morning," assented Schola; "but he added" and the bright face looked puzzled—"that his misfortune was the result of his own sin, and that God had punished him justly for the mindless of the Sabbath. What could he mean, Father? He says he has ever been sober and moral

Seventeen years before Schola's father and Ben their (twin brothers) had been assistant Mr. Stein's mill, and had taken, with joint prospects of prosperous success, as members of a well established firm. But a terrible explosion had taken from our ranks, in the engine-room of the principal mill; and the Bornemann brothers, without a moment's warning, were hurled into eternity long before the allotted time of days.

The night after the accident, on Benedict's tenth birthday, and under his mother's roof, (where the two afflicted widows had met and mourned in common sympathy of their awful bereavement), little Schola opened her eyes, for the first time, upon a world of woe, just as her anguished mother, for the last time, closed hers upon it and its griefs for evermore. From that sad hour the little orphan maid had found a guide, if not always tender, parent in her Aunt Katrina, who had adopted her orphan niece for and baptized on the Feast of St. Benedict, it seemed a fitting thing to Father Rudolph that the baby girl should bear the name of Schola. And, if it so fell out, as the years went on, that Frau Bornemann's cheering care and tenderness for her son so drained the fount of her maternal affections that it left but scanty means for the orphaned cousin, Schola's buoyant and unselfish heart never seemed to notice the difference; and the good priest of St. Godula's rejoiced secretly in the growing security of his boy, young virgin and which he was guiding to exalted perfection through paths of unexceptional holiness.

Just to night Schola's thoughts were full of the history of the Mullers and their misfortunes, and so it came to pass that as they walked home from the church together she poured forth to her silent companion the romance of the false Hans and the treachery cross Gretchen, and of the poor forsaken Maria.

"And they have had no end of sorrow and trouble, poor dears," she concluded, not heeding the sudden tremor of Benedict's arm under her clasping hand. "Child dear child has been taken from them by death; and they are now left quite alone in the world; poor Hans, a helpless cripple, ever mourning his sin and the weary years Gretchen's needless. Is not the dead Maria been terribly avenged?"

She looked up, as she spoke, into her companions' face. Was it only the moonlight which made Benedict's face so ghastly pale, and which gave Agatha's eyes that strange unnatural lustre?

They reached the door of Mr. Stein's handsome house (it was only a few blocks from St. Godula's), and the elder girl was making her adieus rather hurriedly. She was glad to have escaped a warm kiss, however, with unusual fervor on Schola's brow; and, with a brief "Good night," to her bewildered, had vanished into the house, leaving the two cousins to pursue their homward way in silence.

"How grave Agatha seemed to-night!" said Schola, at last, with musing air. "I never saw her so pale before, and she looked at me so oddly, too, I could almost fancy she were grieved or displeased about something. Could it be that I consulted her by repeating that history of the poor Mullers and their short comings? Tell me, Benedict, have I done wrong?"

"Heaven help us—No!" cried the young man, with such unmeasured and unveiled fervor, that the young girl started in astonishment, and her hand upon his arm. "You are always right, heaven's darling; and I—I—Benedict Bornemann, who have done the wrong; Schola! Schola! I am the most miserable man on the face of God's earth to-night!"

"Beanie! dear Beanie!" said Schola, shocked and astonished, but knowing her cousin's peculiar temperament, and speaking nothing to him as was her custom, "what is the matter, what has happened to distress you?"

"O Schola! if I only dared to tell you! there is not a single thought in my whole heart that I would be afraid or ashamed to lay open to you. No, Bennie; not one—I dare not!"

"My precious pet, you do not understand. Of course I shall be glad to hear you. You will despise me, I know, for saying it; I so long to know your secret."

"And Agatha's has discovered it!" cried the young girl in her exhausting simplicity. "Poor Agatha! no wonder she looked pale and troubled to night.

"Schola, I have committed a terrible mistake. Agatha is so good, so sensible, so devoted, and you have known her so long. Perhaps you only fancy you do dislike her."

"Fancy—fiddle-stick! I know I do, cousin, with a sharp ring in his voice, as if in bodily pain; adding, under his breath, "I hope to Heaven she may be gone to her home!"

Schola proceeded him into the little parlor, turned up the light, and pushed him down into an easy chair by the glowing fire. His dressing gown and slippers lay ready to hand, where his tender mother had placed them by the kindly, snugly awaiting the arrival of their idolized owner.

"Now, we are all alone, Benedict," said the little maiden, dropping off her shawl and hood, and stabbing a lovely picture of unconscious blonde beauty below his troubled face. "Aunt Katrina is abed. You are your cap and gloves, and tell me all about it. You look quite worn and ill. When did this trouble with Agatha begin? Surely you will not refuse to confide in your Schola, your own little loving sister?"

"Sister!" he shrieked; almost with violence. "Sister! Schola, Schola! ever a sister!"

Then, seeing that startled, unconprehending look in her clear eyes, he recovered himself with a strong effort, and spoke more calmly and in a gentler key.

"To be plain with you, Schola—but, first, do not stare at me in that strange way; please turn your eyes away, dear, and look into the fire. There—that is better. Now I have more courage to tell you that I never knew I did not truly love Agatha Stein until this time, six months ago, when—"

He stopped again and peered searchingly into her fair, downcast face.

"Until—when? she repeated, with not lifting her eyes, but really beginning to anxiously ponder if there was not some insanity in her cousin's family.

"Until you went away on that trip to the ocean last spring.

"And what happened then?" she questioned, calmly; young as she was, speaking as a mother might speak to a nervous, suffering child.

"O Schola, Schola! you will drive me mad! Some fiend has bewitched me, and his agonized face in his hands.

"Dear Benedict, do tell me what is the matter," said Schola, with a tender sigh, and, had vanished into the house, leaving the two cousins to pursue their homward way in silence.

"How grave Agatha seemed to-night! said Schola, at last, with musing air. "I never saw her so pale before, and she looked at me so oddly, too. MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

May God bless and direct through the influentsies of the Holy Ghost the Catholic Publication Society of St. Paul, the editors of Catholic journals who defend the cause of religion, its rights and those of the Holy Apostolic See, and adhere in the meantime and practice with devotion and fidelity—Pio IX.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the chief agent in popularizing ideas; and since it is the most universal and most rapid means of getting the world. In our time, religious journalism is not only a useful and serious occupation, but such a work, indeed, as ranks with the ministry of preaching and the pulpit. What is and what ought to be the Catholic press? It is the pulpit of the priest and defend the truth, refutes error, and shows up the Devil in truth.—BISHOP, THOMAS MORAN CROSBY.

A Merry Christmas to all our Readers.

We take great pleasure in presenting our readers with a souvenir of the approaching holy season of Christmas which will help them to commemorate it with that true Catholic joy which is infused into the great festival by the only Church which is saval with the birth of the Blessed Babe of Bethlehem, and co-eternal with the existence of God.

Christmas is the major feast of the social festival year, and though its observance was at one period of the world's history reserved for the Catholic Church alone, it has come to be a personal festival season not only on the part of the Protestant community in different countries, but also by Jews, atheists, infidels and soofers who have no conception of the spiritual importance that is attached to Christmas Day.

The great influence of the imperishable Church of Christ has made Christmas what it is despite the opposition of Cesar or Crown-well, of pagan or Puritan. Just as Sunday has become the "Sabbath" of the sectarians—even without scriptural warrant—and as the Gregorian calendar has supplanted the prefects system in the computation of time, so has Christmas become a love-feast and a day of religious reverence in the eyes of millions of the descendants of the very men who made laws making the observance of Christmas a penal offence against the commonwealth.

But whilst those outside the pale of God's only Church observe the day as one for feasting and pleasure, we Catholics are alone in our true conception of the holy joy which the season imparts to those who have the happiness to approach in spirit the Crib of Bethlehem, and there—with the Shepherds—adore the new-born King and Saviour!

During this holy season every Catholic should transform his soul into a Crib for the worthy reception of the Body and Blood of Christ. In the fate way alone can we become infused with that supernatural happiness which inspired the angelic hosts to proclaim the unbounded joy of Heaven at the birth of Our Blessed Redeemer, by the exultant psalmody: "Glory to God in the Highest; and on earth peace to men of good will." Who are the men of good-will to whom this heaven-proclaimed peace is promised! Not the proud nor the avaricious—not the "brilliant" sinner—not the pagan of God was not proclaimed. No! The heaven-promised peace takes possession of the humble man, the chaste, the meek, the temperate, the charitable, the alms giver and the persevering one who bows before the Majesty of God even though it is represented in the form of a helpless Infant reclining in a rude manger! These are the men to whom Christmas brings that heavenly joy and peace which surpasseth human understanding.

Christmas has for Christians who thoroughly appreciate its importance, its duties as well as its pleasures. Man's chief duty is to adore God and to love his neighbor as himself, and there is no finer season in the whole Christian calendar when we can adore God and serve our neighbor better than during the holy Christmas festival. The birth of Bethlehem exists in every Catholic Church, and when we have adored God therein let us not forget our duty to man. There are hungry to feed; there are naked to clothe; there are homeless to shelter, there are sick to visit, there are orphans to shoe and poor to help in this nineteenth century—in far greater numbers than they existed at the time when Our Blessed Redeemer preached the sermon on the Mount. Have you, good Catholic reader, the means to help your sorrowing, suffering, hungry or naked fellow-man? If so, give generously for God's sake at Christmas. Charity converts a multitude of sins, and the tears of joy which flow from the eyes of widows and orphans have washed away many a sin from the record of men's lives!

The miser, the man given to avarice, the man who envies his neighbor's prosperous lot, the man who has no kind word for the poor, the man who has no charity of the holy happiness of Christmas, because they are dead to the cry of charity and blind to the beggar's tatters, do shareed into they with the possession of their treasure that they become oblivious to the existence of that good God who gave them all they possess, and whose only Son was born in a manger, lived in poverty, and died on a Cross without a garment to cover Him! They forget too that there is no pocket in a shroud. The wealth they worship will be the possession of others when they are mouldering into that dust to which even the proudest man must return!

Let CHARITY, then, cheer your own Christmas by bringing joy to the hearts and homes of orphans, widows, the sick, the stranger, and the distressed. God gave to the Christian world His own beloved Son as a Christmas gift, and where He has done so much for us, we at least can emulate His example by sharing our store for great charity's sake. Let us, then, well our Christmas be a happy and a merry one! Then, indeed, will we thank God with grateful hearts for all the heavenly blessings He has sent us, and we will cheerfully, gladly and exultingly join with the unnumbered hosts of the Cherubim and Seraphim in singing the Canticle heard by the Shepherds on the first Christmas morning: "GLORY TO GOD IN THE HIGHEST; AND ON EARTH PEACE TO MEN OF GOOD-WILL."

Growth of the Catholic Church as Compared with Non-Catholic Denominations.

The dignified appearance of the Prelates and the imposing ceremonies pertaining to the recent Plenary Council in Baltimore, seem to have attracted a great deal of attention toward the Catholic Church even from the secular press which historians have manifested but little interest in Catholic affairs. Speculation has been rife as to the causes which have led to the enormous growth of the Catholic element in America, and the enemies of the Bride of Christ stand amazed at the glory that surrounds the Mystical Body at which they have been hacking and hewing for a century without leaving a single scar to mark the vain and useless vindictiveness of their malice. The most malignant falsehoods that bloodstained bigotry could invent have been projected against the Rock of Truth. The dames of prejudice and political proscription have been evoked in order to stay the onward progress of the Bark of Peter. But now, after usually hath expended its malice, after prejudiced persons and paid emissaries of the Evil One have buried their hate-laden shafts of bitterest calumny against her—the grand old Church of Christ looms up before their vision in all the resistful vigor and beauty peculiar to the eternal Bride of an eternal God!

What a consoling thought for Catholics! To be the children of a Church which both inspired calumny cannot crush! To be accounted among the glorious army of those valiant soldiers of Christ—the gallant legion against which even "the gates of hell" cannot prevail! And what a lesson may not the unvanquished enemies of the Catholic Church learn from the supremacy which the Church has achieved in this country even in the face of persecution as powerful as it was perpetual! Where now are the results of all the calumnious charges brought against the Catholic Church! What harvest has been reaped from the hell born bigotry which has so blemished sectarian annals on the field of Christ! In vain has fiddledity tried to undermine her. Fruitless has been the efforts of fanatism to cause her downfall. And now, after passing through a century's wanton of unchristian calumny and undeserved continuously—the world cannot but admire the adamantine firmness with which the Catholic Church has clung to the American soil, growing with the growth of the Republic, expanding with the extension of American territory, and conquering into prairie and forest, into mountain and valley, the Voice of God for the Christianizing and civilizing of peoples of all colors and races!

Is not such a mission supernatural! Is not such a Church more than human! Does not the successful completion of so grand a mission—in the face of so many malicious assaults against her—prove the Catholic Church to be the promised of Providence! The evangelical eminence of religious error have had many portions of this country under their sole jurisdiction, yet where now is their power! In previous of this land laws were passed proscribing the presence of Catholic priests, yet these very localities have now become the strong, the powerful, yielding calls the juicy weapons man's malice, and leading His Church to triumph through every crusade organized against her!

Such is the condition of the Catholic Church in America to-day that it is worse than useless for her enemies to refurbish the rusty tools with which they have hitherto assailed her, for any fresh conflicts in the future. The seeds should busy themselves in building up Christianity rather than engaging in the useless labor of leveling a structure which has supernatural support. Hence we hope this lesson which the history of the Catholic Church in America plainly teaches those who are in the habit of calling uncharitable abuse her, will be conscientiously conned over by pulpit and public writers alike, so that they may learn wisdom in the future from the experience of the past—and time let the Church of Christ pursue her divine mission in peace.

As we have already intimated, the secular press has indulged in speculative conjectures between the Catholic Church and the non-Catholic sects concerning their numerical strength in this country, and this eagerness to ascertain the actual standing of the Church in America has led to the compilation of not rather tables of statistics from which we glean the following suggestive facts concerning the numerical strength—and the percentage of increase—of the principal Protestant and other religious denominations at present existing in this land.

By the census of 1860 the population of the United States was 31,443,090. The present population is now estimated at 55,000,000. The gain in twenty-five years has been, therefore, twenty-three and a half millions, or at the rate of 75 per cent.

In 1860, according to estimates the accuracy of which was then universally acknowledged, there were 4,000,000 Methodists in this country. They were then, as they are now, the strongest religious body, numerically. Since 1860 the total has grown to 15,000,000, which is an increase of 75 per cent, keeping pace, exactly with the increase in population.

In this association, however, it is well to remember that there are many subdivisions of Methodists who are not in unison of doctrine with other divisions of Protestant Christian denominations. Thus we have the African Methodist and the Zion African Methodist; the Methodist Episcopal North and the Methodist Episcopal South; The Free Methodists, Western Primitive Methodists, Independent Methodists, Free Wesleyan Methodists, the Protestant Methodists and the new Methodists, as well as divers other of shoots of segregated Protestantism, all differing in some particular concerning doctrine, discipline or church government, hence though classed under one head for convenience sake, the Methodist body is not the compact community the figures would naturally lead the reader to suppose.

The number of affiliants of the various Baptist churches was, in 1860, 8,000,000. Today it is 17,000,000. The increase in twenty-five years is, therefore, 56 per cent, a gain in absolute ratio, but a falling off when considered relatively.

The Presbyterians numbered in, 1860 3,000,000. Now they number 5,500,000, and increase in twenty-five years of 83 per cent.

The Lutherans, who have been materially benefitted by constant and increasing emigration from Germany, Sweden, Holland and Norway, have grown from 1,250,000 in round to 2,000,000 in 1884, or at the rate of 60 per cent.

The Congregationalists have declined relatively very much. The old spirit of the New England pilgrims seems to be dying out among them. In twenty-five years they have advanced but 27 per cent. that is, 1,413,000 in 1860 to 1,800,000 at present. In the other hand, the various Reformed Dutch churches—Dutch, German and Evangelical show an increase of nearly 50 per cent., from 810,000 in 1860 to 1,200,000 to-day.

The Episcopalians show a fair increase in numbers, yet one relatively below the average. Their percentage of gain is 33, per cent. in twenty-five years, bringing up the total from 980,000 to 1,200,000.

The Hebrews—counting together those who are orthodox and those who are merely nominal—have increased from 450,000 in 1860 to 700,000 in 1884, a full 100 per cent. of gain.

The Friends, or Quakers, show an absolute as well as relative decline. They have fallen of 60 per cent. from 720,000 in 1860 to 150,000 in 1884.

The denomination of Christians, who are numerous in Kentucky, southern Indiana, southern Illinois, and Missouri, number 800,000, against 500,000 in 1860, an absolute gain of 60 per cent., yet a falling off relatively of 15.

Such are the relative positions acquired in the numerical order of religious statistics by the denominations enumerated, and now let us see—from a non-Catholic source—what has been the ratio of increase of the Catholic body during the last twenty-five years.

The census of 1860 gave the Catholic population at 3,175,000. It is within the range of truth to say that at present there is fully ten millions of Catholics in the United States, which would show an increase of more than two hundred per cent. in twenty-four years. And if, in the Providence of God, the Church is to continue for the next fifteen years in the same ratio that she has progressed in the past, we can then claim for the Catholic Church in America a membership of 20,000,000 souls!

Republican Features of the Franchise Bill.

One of the most important measures passed by the British Parliament in modern days is the Franchise Bill, which, as we announced last week, has received Queen Victoria's signature, and is now a law in the British Isles.

By this law fully two million voters—who have hitherto been disfranchised—have been enfranchised, and the right to vote, hitherto debarred the right of suffrage, is largely due to Gladstone and the Irish members of Parliament. As our readers may remember, the Franchise Bill passed the House of Commons last summer, but was defeated by the Lords. The Radical element declared that "the Lords must bend—or end," and, with a wisdom that is illustrative of his far-seeing sagacity, Mr. Gladstone saw in the "signs of the times" that the masses were only waiting for just such an opportunity in order to abolish the House of Lords of their stubborn opposition to the extension of the franchise was allowed to prevail.

Seeing the peril to which his Ministry was exposed, Mr. Gladstone mounted the hustings in England and Scotland, and implored the people not to abate one jot of their claim for extended suffrage, but to convene monster meetings and then to express the determination of the people to make the popular will supreme over a body of fossils who were entirely unacquainted with the wants or the wishes of the masses.

The idea was at once acted on and the Lords learned a lesson from a source whence they had never before accepted a suggestion, and the Bill which was treated with contempt and ridicule at a previous session of Parliament, was passed by a large majority a few weeks ago. Such is the change that popular agitation for human rights has worked among the aristocratic Lords of England.

By the operation of the Franchise Bill every person who has a regular income of more than £10 ($50) per annum, is entitled to vote. This places the ballot in the hands of the agricultural classes, mechanics, householders and renters, in fact every person who earns a livelihood, the exceptions being paupers, tramps and that large class of impecunious vagabonds who prey upon the public for a living.

It is estimated that the voting element hitherto represented among the landlord and tenant classes in England and Scotland amounted to 200,000. The Franchise Bill increases that element to several millions in numerical strength, because it gives the ballot to 800,000 cottagers, comprising the agricultural laborers and about a million villagers and residents beyond the limits of the numerous cities and densely populated towns of England and Scotland.

Bill it is in Ireland that the effect of the Franchise Bill will be felt with the greatest force, as it places the ballot in the hands of about 600,000 small farmers, laborers and mechanics who hitherto had to look on while their landlords exercised that liberty. But now—thank Heaven—every tiller of the soil of Ireland who has a roof over his head will be a voter!

This is, indeed, a subject for self-congratulation on the part of every Celt, and we know this news will add additional joy to the Christmas festivities among many thousand readers of the Monitor.

The effect of this extension of the Franchise in Ireland cannot fail to have a marked influence upon the fortunes of that country whose prospects for Home Rule will be greatly enhanced. Nothing serves better to elevate a people who have been reduced to serfdom through landlord oppression and government tyranny, than to place in their hands the ballot. That same power, in their own hands that had been used by their task masters to keep them in subjection, and make very hard feel that he is the peer of his fellow man regardless of wealth, title or other fictitious superiority.

The Franchise Bill will also have the effect of placing Parnell and his compatriots at the pinnacle of power. If the Irish people are only true to their native principles Ireland will return at least eighty members of Parliament who will act in conjunction with Mr. Parnell in showing the balance of power on the side of that party which promises the largest amount of good for Ireland. In this way the independence of Ireland can be accomplished by constitutional means, and the tyranny now so universally execrated will be but a historical memento, and the crasp of the Irish nation will be so firmly established that no outside interposition will be required.

Revolutions never go backward, hence we may reasonably hope that the revolution quietly achieved by the people of Great Britain by the Franchise Bill, will lead to still larger republican liberty. Democratic principles have taken deep root in the minds of the English and Scotch masses who have not limited in vain to the pleadings for popular justice for the Ireland advocated by Ireland's envoys. And hearing the story of its wrongs perpetrated by Irish landlords reminded John Bull and Sandy Crofter that they too had held the oppressed them. Hence popular attention is now directed to the attainment of peasant property of land by the very element in England and Scotland that for years have wondered why the Irish people were constantly emptying the British jails with their ceaseless cries for tenant right.

The last question is the vital topic of the day and the people all who have been granted the right to vote may be naturally expected that why it is that a few hundred men are so much land, while millions of people have not a rood or a rood to cover them! This question will have to be answered, and the solution of this difficulty may eventually cause even greater concessions to be granted to the people of Great Britain and Ireland than were the change of the Franchise Bill has accomplished.

Pastoral Letter by the Prelates of the Plenary Council.

We notice in the daily papers what purports to be extracts from the Pastoral letter promulgated by the Prelates who attended the recent Plenary Council in Baltimore. But the insignificant portion given in the secular press scarcely amounts to one-fifteenth part of the entire Pastoral which will make at least seven or eight columns of the Monitor.

It has been agreed among the Prelates that the Pastoral shall be read in all churches on Sunday next, and we trust that our clergymen will be in the pulpit by the instructions given them by the Prelates set over their spiritual state by the providence of God.

Editorial Notes.

Several active temperance lectures met to New York on November 21th and organized the Father Matthew Memorial Society, the object of which is to promote temperance, to erect a monument to Father Matthew and to celebrate his birthday. Another society was held recently at the same place. It was decided that the monument should cost $50,000, and that the proceeds of all lectures or dramatic entertainments, should be applied to the monument fund.

—The honor of organizing the first Sodality of the United States, in honor of the Blessed Virgin, belongs to the students of Georgetown College, they having established a Sodality in 1812. About twenty years later the celebration of St. Joseph's Church, Philadelphia, organized a Sodality of the same character, that being the first attempt of young people in that direction. New (Issue Day) Sunday in November the Sodalities scattered over the region of the earth so prophetically designated by the poet Lonfellow as "The Blessed Virgin's Band."

—Rt. Rev. Jeremiah Junger, D. D., Bishop of Nesqualy, Washington Territory, accompanied by Rev. Joseph Cataldo, S. J., Superior of the Jesuit Indian Missions in the Northwest, sailed last week from New York for Rome. Bishop Junger goes to visit the Pope in compliance with a rule which requires every Bishop to visit the Sovereign Pontiff once in every ten years. Father Cataldo goes to visit the Superior General of his Order, and also to secure the services of an additional number of missionaries to aiding and his successor in their labors among the Indians.

—Reuben Runyon Springer, a noted Catholic capitalist of Cincinnati, died in that city recently of left several very large bequests to Catholic institutions. Mr. Springer was a just friend of Archbishop Purcell, and he ever been a great benefactor to his religious charities and schools in Ohio. Among the large legacies left for the maintenance of Catholic institutions we notice St. Mary's Seminary of the West, for the education of Catholic priests, $100,000; to the little Sisters of the Poor, $35,000; to the Good Samaritan Hospital, $30,000; to the Sisters of Charity, $25,000; to the Sisters of Charity of Cedar Grove for a foundling asylum, $20,000, for the support of Cedar of Lebanon, $20,000. There was also large number of small bequests. All this blood relatives are also remembered. His estate is valued at $3,000,000.—R. T.

The Irish descriptions we print on the first page this week, is also a piece of poetical composition as ever graced.

Aid for a Catholic University.

As already known to our readers, the project of establishing a Catholic university in that country receive the unanimous consent of the Prelates assembled at the recent Plenary Council in Baltimore. And now we are glad to learn through a Baltimore correspondent that a young lady of New York City—Miss Mary E. Caldwell—has donated three hundred thousand dollars as the first donation towards the commencement of the noble new Catholic institution. With this fund for a basis the work is to be commenced forthwith. A board of inner governors will be named in the course of a week, and during the coming year the plan of a university for the higher educational purposes of the Catholic sects will take form and substance. It will draw its students and patronage from all parts of the country, and will be on same a total institution although under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of the diocese in which it may be situated. A committee of twelve bishops and laymen from different parts of the country, with Archbishop Gibbons at its head as chairman, was appointed by the Council to take the matter into consideration. The new university will be located in New York city or its vicinity.

Miss Caldwell, though a native of New York, is of Virginia parentage. Her father —as many years ago a slaveholder in Virginia—and her mother belonged to the distinguished Breckinridge family, of which Vice President John C. Breckinridge, and the late Rev. Robert Breckinridge were members. Miss Caldwell and her sister, who is with her in Baltimore, are the inheritors of a very large estate, estimated at three or four millions of dollars. The Misses Caldwell erected the convent of the Sacred Heart in Baltimore, and have been accumulating during their minority.

A Beautiful Holiday Present.

A CHRISTMAS PRESENTMENT. By one of the Pilgrims (Amelia Woodward Truesdell). Second Edition. San Francisco: Cubery & Co., Publishers, 1881.

We have already called the attention of our readers to this beautiful book of Christmas origin and manufacture, and we now feel we are only discharging our duty to a few weeks ago of getting our readers a few extracts from its pages so they may have a slight conception of the Catholic tone and literary excellence of the work. The poems are all written upon the Old Mission shrines of California, and in her descriptive verse the gifted author

"Tells like a bell of Spain, the Mission bell
Sounds through the valleys, and the echoes swell
Pulsations of every verse. Almost one can hear
Gregorian
Chants and angels and angelic in Holy Worship
Every grain, from royal sceptre to the shepherd's staff, wearied thee
In the end of a day, stars the Church has placed upon thy brow.
Pure jewels, of earth's sufficient joy and pain
Pain that also in God's own shadow
Joy that also in God's own shadow
Thou art the Mother of the shade."

In her allusion to the college of Guadalupe, this gifted author pours out her soul thus at Mary's shrine

"O the pain of a lone thrall, death mystic roses
Wave the Pains of Guadalupe, picture in a sorrow dewy,
Stands today as ever where her blessed feet made holy ground
And the bosom of Guadalupe throng the Moth of Sorrows."

Thus as above, our Lady's legends crown the tree of faith with grace,
And issue, as their sweet aroma, life the hearts of men.

When our fair Pilgrim reached the Mission of "Nuestra Senora de la Soledad," or "Our Lady of the Solitude," her muse seems to have been again inspired with love for the Mother of Sorrow, and she thus breathes forth her sympathy in poetic strains:

"Thou mournful Mother! standing, to the cross
Thine spear-pierced,
Where thy children Son was hanging when Death's sword thy own heart rift."

Vain man's cry of Stabat Mater, wailing down the mournful years,
To rehearse thy living anguish and the meaning of thy tears.
If on earth one know thy woe, some mother like thyself is sorrowing,
Where with image for which lovers vain to seek world life pageantry.

Such with pale transfixed statue as then footle the struggling clay
Death and lifting hollow hands to heritage of Christ's day.

And to those they showest near the midst of thy stupendous pain,
Your agonized as the cry which rent the Temple's veil in twain.

Such alone hold thy baptism which may give thy blessed name,
Then who art the ideal Mother sacred to earth's boiled woe.

Lonely type of purest sorrow! Solitude thy fit ting shrine,
For thy grief and has neither for an equals such as thine.

And the face with woe transfigured tells from Mother's pale may, be a soul's sublime divine.

The selections will give our readers an idea of this beautiful Catholic tone which pervades the whole, and we hope that many hundred copies of the volume may be sent to friends afar as souvenirs of the holiday season of 1881.

We intended to lay before our readers in this issue Bishop McQuaid's instructive discourse during the Plenary Council upon the growth of the Church in the United States, but the great length has compelled us to lay it over until next week.

SOBRIETIES OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY.

How they were First Organized. Their Power for Spiritual Good. Their Honors in Imparting Individual Notable Men who Became Members.—Their Prosperity Blessed by the Pontiffs and Assured by the Queen at at Angels.

On last Thursday night the members of the Sodality of the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary, attached to St. Ignatius College, celebrated the 43rd anniversary of the establishment of the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin Mary, at which James H. Kelly Esq. for many years the Prefect of the Sodality, delivered a very interesting and instructive address upon the origin and spiritual benefits of Sodalities from which we make the following extracts for the benefit of those who are already members of these desirable Catholic organizations, as well as for those who are not members of any Catholic institution although under the jurisdiction of Sodality, by reading the passages of men who have kept that sacred society in existence.

It is by organizations within the control of the Church, and under her guidance, that we can be enrolled the evil influences of those condemned secret societies, and to bear other, as we have seen, upon the Church of success, due to the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin, and the Sodalities of the Sodalities, the Sodalities, the Sodalities,

REDEMPTION THROUGH CHRIST.

For there is one God and one Mediator of God and Man, the man Christ Jesus. Who gave himself a Redemption for all.—1 Tim., ch. 2, v. 5.

Let us flee from the world's lavish glitter,
From its hollow of contentment and joy!
On the wings of a bright, blessed Fancy,
To a land that is distant away!
While the joys and the blessings of Christmas,
By chance are happily retolled!
Yet, for one let us stand to the Present—
Bring the Sun Christmas of old.

And, from on the other of morning,
Let the spirit come over for me,
To a land that is blessed of the Godman—
That sheltered his sweet infancy.
Bell! deep in the Bethlehem manger,
Let the spirit over passes in flight,
Let it bow in a meek adoration,
For God is a present to-night!

Aye! that rude and smooth little manger,
Present one to the dawning earth;
With the presence of God the sublime,
It is glorious! in its worth.
Lo, a mighty work is progressing,
The chain, oh spirit! and think—
The chains of the Past and the Future,
Are joined with a heavenly link.

The Past with its sins and its errors,
The Future made dread by the Past!
Are joined by a compact sublime,
For Redemption the Present offers at last!
And the souls that are lifted but for darkness,
And the souls that are near live for the same,
Are heard in the chanting of Heaven,
For Christ the Redeemer is born.

Redemption! must think of its meaning!
To the fore-ground of Earth
Its the money link Heaven—
On the day of our blest Saviour's birth.
Every moral is treasured, and Faith,
Wa lifted from Sin's governing,
And was born to regenerate and glory,
Was born to forgiveness and grace.

And, freed from the world's bitter slavery,
Has hopes for eternal reward!
For he knows that when God to the Exile,
He would live in the sight of the Lord!
Oh! God! what a boon thy Redemption,
Tis the golden star leading to on;
To a blissful existence in Heaven
Our duties all faithfully done.

To be ready at the Dawn to the Morning,
A Jesus Christ and the Stars to the Eve;
Tis the land of the Saints, divine saints,
Of the dew to each flower and bed.
For it wields a supernal influence,
Or anguish and waywardly strife;
Tis the shrine of our Faith and our hopes,
'Tis the spring of true Purpose in Life!

Alas! that the money of Heaven,
Should for ever be made black with sin!
And remain all unused and unheeded,
Ah, when we should be thinking of the Morning,
Dedicating the Sun's golden light;
Of the Sweet spirit, the Christmas-tide bright from
The crystalline dew of the night!

And what of the storm-driven seasons,
Who'd rather the heritance lately,
That to guide his wrecked vessel to safety,
By steering its course to the shoals;
Tis what shall we say of the dinner,
Who wrote the Sacred Scrolls,
And turns from the side and the Virtue,
To the false tempting scene of Vice!

Hold! Reason cries out "Its unnatural!
The Morning call long for the sun;
The dew that drops gently from Heaven,
Is unknown by Nature to one;
The Mariner lives at the Dawn of Life;
Then leaves the Sun for the Night;
And he knows when he takes the Heaven,
The many beauties of her delight!

Ah! Reason! how weak thy protection,
The scenes of earth must remain,
That the blood of a living Redeemer,
Has flowed for the Sin-stricken one,
The days of this fair Christmas morning,
Should be holy of joy or the feasting;
And a prayer of thanksgiving and gladness
Fro their souls to the Saviour arise.

But hope gently assures my sadness
"Let me think that Christ will unlock
The floodgates of His endless compassion
And a prayer of thanksgiving and gladness
From their sin-tainted soul never starts.

But hope gently assures my sadness
"Let me think that Christ will unlock
The floodgates of His endless compassion
And a prayer of thanksgiving and gladness
From their sin-tainted soul never starts.

For many has flowed back in vain,
The sweet of this fair Christmas morning,
Shall no balm of joy on their hearts;
And a prayer of thanksgiving and gladness
From their sin-tainted soul never starts.

But hope gently assures my sadness
"Let us trust on that Christ will unlock
The floodgates of His endless compassion
And a prayer of thanksgiving and gladness
And redemption shall guide us in safety,
To the realms of the sainted above!

The Newsboy's Story.

A STORY FOUNDED ON FACT. WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR.

It was Christmas eve, that time of hustle and confusion, especially in a large city like New York; the weather was extremely cold, and thousands on the streets drew their wraps more closely about them and hurried on, never heeding the cry of a dark-eyed newsboy; despite the extreme cold the boy kept cheerily crying out his papers, but it seemed that fortune was against him.

After a while he left his place and sulked down the street to where a crowd had assembled around a hotel; here he had better luck and soon sold the greater part of his papers, then he walked away apparently satisfied that he had sold enough.

But he was soon again calling out his papers "Here's your Christmas number of the Herald, Tribune and Times," his cheery voice soon gained him more customers and in a short space of time he disposed of the rest of his stock, then he dodged into a baker's shop and soon came out with a bundle and started homeward.

He lived in one of the poor of New York do, in a tenement house. Ascending the rickety stairs he heard a weak voice calling "Is that you Jimmy?" "Yes Katie and I've brought you some breakfast," answered the boy entering the room, in one corner of which was a little girl of about seven years playing with a rag doll; she was very pale and looked as if recovering from sickness. "How are you this morning?" asked her brother kissing her pale cheek. "O, I am so much better and Mrs. Green took me up to-day." "See what I brought," said Jimmy, opening the bundle and displaying what needs Katie open her eyes, for hot rolls were a luxury she had not enjoyed very often in her short life. "But where did you get the money Jimmy?" she asked. "I sold every twenty-five papers this morning," and Jimmy proudly. "But let's have some breakfast," he added, with a hungry boy's appetite. While they are eating will tell you something about them.

First they were orphans, their parents having died a few years before, leaving the two children at the early age of eight and five; the neighbors wanted to put them in the orphan asylum or poor house, but Jimmy was a plucky little fellow and declared he made wheat Jimmy I'll be a man he could not support himself and Katie, and he had done so ever since, although it was very hard and he often want hungry himself that Katie, who was very delicate, might have the food she needed. At first he sold papers for other boys and received half of what he sold, but he soon found he would make more by selling for himself; besides this he often put little jobs of delivering parcels for a large store whose proprietor often bought a paper and took an interest in Jimmy. The neighbors also were very kind to the children and helped them all they could, for they were poor themselves. Mrs. Green, especially, who had no children and who had known the children's mother, helped them a great deal and took care of Katie when Jimmy was away, and in this way the children had managed up to the present time.

After breakfast Jimmy said in the home chopping kindling and doing other little chores for Mrs. Green said mom, then having had such a late breakfast he was not hungry and seeing Katie asleep he went out after telling Mrs. Green that he had gone to get something, to do to earn some extra money to buy a doll for Katie which she long wished for and which cost but half a dollar.

He walked rapidly along to the store of the merchant before mentioned, and found that as there was a large number of parcels to be delivered he had to earn a dollar before night, for though the merchant hired boys for the purpose of delivery, the flow of business was so great that there was plenty for Jimmy to do.

He worked hard all the afternoon and at 5 o'clock was paid his dollar, and ten more over if he would deliver one more parcel to the house of a gentleman who wished it delivered immediately. Jimmy, although he was in a hurry to get home was glad of the chance to get the money, for he knew how things there before and the gentleman always said a kind word, or gave him an extra dime, and as a dime was a thing not to be despised, Jimmy went now in the hopes of getting one, for he knew now was the time when people thought of the poor and liked to help them.

It was a long walk and he was so thinly clad that by the time he got there he was shivering with the cold; it was the lady of the house herself who opened the door and noticing how cold he looked made him come in to warm himself, for he seemed wanted him to stop and have some supper, but Jimmy said he could not for Katie would be fretting about him; then they wanted to know who Katie was, and before he knew it Jimmy was telling the whole story, which excited admiration and pity in the hearts of the listeners, and when Jimmy went home it was with a nice supper for himself and Katie and an invitation for both to eat their Christmas dinner at his new found friend's house. Jimmy told the lady how he wanted to get a doll for Katie and she generously gave him a dollar to get a nice one for Katie, saying that Jimmy was a happy boy when he went home, he found little Katie very anxious about him, but she was delighted when he told her of his good fortune.

When Katie was asleep, Jimmy stole out and soon returned with a large package, he slipped into Katie's stocking, for she was a firm believer in fairies, and in anyone hung by her stocking, then, after saying his prayers and adding an extra "Hail Mary" for the kind friends, he was soon in the land of dreams.

Meanwhile, at the house of the rich merchant, something was happening which made the servants old wish curiously, for such a thing as a Christmas tree had not been known in the house for twelve years but now there was a large one in the parlor and Mr. and Mrs. Clark, for that was their name, were hurrying to and fro, and when a servant who had been sent out came home loaded and went directly to the parlor, they were speechless with wonder. But not a thing could they learn although they asked every one enough to fill a book. Mr. Clark questioned enough to fill a book. Mr. Clark only laughed and wanked at his wife, who was looking better than she had for a long time. It was long after midnight before they went to repose now made so happy sweet.

Christmas morning dawned amid the ringing of church bells. The merry chimes awoke the children who at first could not answer that this was Christmas. Hardly was Katie awake before she ran to her stocking, and in a moment the little room was filled with joyful cries as she discovered some thing hidden in her doll, but a thought came which dampened her joy, she had a present and Jimmy had none. Mrs. Green had not forgotten him, but had taken a warm pair of boots for him, when their first joy was over Jimmy went to Mass with Katie warmly wrapped in Mrs. Green's shawl, and then they did justice to the nice breakfast which Jimmy had provided and Mrs. Green had cooked. At last the time came to go their friends' house. Katie was quite well, the exercise, etc., and have never heard if not overcome it. I bank on it.

"Speaking of paragraphs, how do English papers compare with American, in this respect? Why, sir, the Cincinnati Gazette, St. James Gazette, and Truth, abound in sharp, incisive paragraphs without wit. In general, American papers make the most of news, the London papers make the most of opinion."

WHAT STRUCK HIM.

The Mystery of a Deadly Attack Solved by a Newspaper Paragraph.

[Boston Herald.]

"How are Americans liked in England?" And Mr. H. F. Larrabee, of 42 Chester Square, as-director of the New York & Boston Dispatch Express Company, who has recently returned from a sojourn in London, answered, "If they have good recommendations and behave themselves they are well treated, but they will like the English people, any way, when acquainted with them, as I do myself."

"How do the English comp re with Americans?"

"Some of the finest looking men in the world can be seen on the pleasant days of the London Hyde Park, promenading Piccadilly. The English ladies, however, are neither so neat in appearance nor so graceful of form and movements as the Americans, but they seem to enjoy more robust health."

"Are English people longer lived than our people?"

"I don't know. I have not fully investigated. But I remember once hearing read a newspaper paragraph entitled 'Why do Englishmen live Longer than Americans?' That paragraph, by the way, once solved a great mystery for me.

"Ah, indeed, another tribute to the power of the press!" suggested the reporter.

"Yes if so you please to call it. In 1870 when I was residing at the Commonwealth Hotel, in the city, I had occasion to do some business in Washington street, Boston opposite the corner of Franklin, I seemed to feel a blow in the breast and fall to the pavement like a dead man. When I recovered consciousness I was taken to my room. I first thought I was shot by some enemy had struck me, but my physicians assured me that such could not be the case and advised strictest quiet. For six long weeks I was unable to be down. I was delirious ill, and my physicians said I would probably never walk the streets of Boston again. I did not want to die, but who can expect to live when all doctors say they can do for you? And Mr. Larrabee smiled, sarcastically, and expressed himself very freely concerning the number of nostrums and medicine which are consulted by remedies which physicians will not employ.

"But how about that paragraph?"

"Yes, yes. When I was obliged to sit up in bed day and night for fear of suffocation, and heartly expected death, my nurse begged the privilege of reading that paragraph to me. I refused him at first but he persisted. It described my condition so exactly, that for the first time I began to realize what had generated me. It was filled with a strange hope. I at once dismissed my physicians and immediately began Warner's safe cure. In a few months, I was restored to perfect health, notwithstanding my case was one of the worst possible cases of Bright's disease of the kidneys, which all my physicians—and I had the best specialists in Boston—said was incurable. I tell you, when a man gets into the desperate condition I was in, he doesn't forget what rescues him.

"But were the effects permanent?"

"That was five years ago," said Mr. Larrabee, "and for thirty years I have enjoyed as well as during the past five years. If I ever thought of what I do not, I would have checked the metter long ago, for it was in my system for years, revealing itself in my kidneys, by frequent attacks of chills, fever, vertigo, typhoid fever, nervousness, and all the ills that follow. After taking bottles before I got up and over one hundred and fifty before I was well. I have commenced that treatment in thousands of cases of general debility, kidney and liver disorder, etc., and have never heard ill consequences. I bank on it.

"Speaking of paragraphs, how do English papers compare with American, in this respect? Why, sir, the Cincinnati Gazette, St. James Gazette, and Truth, abound in sharp, incisive paragraphs without wit. In general, American papers make the most of news, the London papers make the most of opinion."

ON THE JORDAN.

CROSSING THE STREAM.

Two pilgrims at the closing of the day
Had halted by a wild and swollen stream;
Upon whose farther bank a rude and
A light from shepherd's home did brightly gleam.

They could not pass the stream, it was swollen so,
And neither could they safely make retreat
To where they shelter found some hours ago.
Now cold, and hungry, as with weary feet

And ill were madness nearly thus to cary,
Rather than cross stream, he resolved to call
For poorly shod, and thinly clad was he;
And the sighs sore were hoarse, and chill.

Then on the ground knelt down the weary pair,
And the Heaven still would be their refuge
And God will always listen to the prayer
Of those who trustingly in Him confide.

On the far bank a something seemed to move
As I now as aged shepherd came in sight,
Then cried: "Lean on a do cross with me, poor
Oh, stranger, pilde our wandering steps aright.

The aged shepherd showed the pilgrims where
They should the swollen stream they safely
And thus he hoisted to the weary rale
The trail which they since early morn had set.

And then he spoke: "The sight spare doth
Oh, pilgrim, turn and by my side
Where I shall hasten they followed to his home
Where they remained until the dawn of day.

At morn spoke Padre Serra: "I would know
Why was it at that late hour of the night
Thou on swollen river you did go
And save in to our very world plight?"

"I cannot say," the shepherd quietly,
"I cannot as if it were a spirit voice
That made me to arise and go, as Arose and went, nor had I any choice."

The grateful pilgrims thanked their host and took
Their leave of him, and as they left the door
Spoke Padre Serra this: "When I did look
Dear Palou, on that shepherd's kindly face

"I seemed to think that I was gazing on
The angel fair, who, when the hour was late,
Came in the cell to Peter and to John.
And led them safely past the prison gate."

THE WEEK'S NEWS

IRELAND.

A New Move Against Limerick.

The Government shrinks from making martyrs of the Limerick cotteriers by imprisoning them for the city indebtedness, which they refuse to pay. It will introduce instead, during next February, a bill to collect the entire price taxes which are in question by a direct tax, thus solving the difficulty.

It is a good sign when the English Government "shrinks from making martyrs" in Ireland. We hope the day for Irish political martyrs has passed. Ed. Monitor.]

Parnell's Efforts to Please Chester.

The London correspondent of an Eastern paper says that the public clamor over the status of the new home rule party has been so strongly in favor of a thorough and vigorous policy that Parnell feels the necessity of giving to the country a considerable number of public building industry, which is now suffering terribly. Mr. Parnell is trying to keep up the work given to the Belfast yards, and with good results of success. The world strengthen his hands in Ulster. The best Irish politicians estimate that even the governmentor of Ireland in making new districts cannot reduce the National strength in the next House of Commons below seventy, and the ordinary distributing bill give from five to ten more. It is also advised that there is no truth in the statement that Mr. Parnell has decided to stand for Dublin. He will probably remain with Cork.

Lord Bipon to Succeed Earl Spencer.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—Pensky Post is authority for the report that Lord Bipon, ex-Governor General of India, and who is a Catholic, has consented, at St. Thomas' suggestion, to accept the office of Viceroy of Ireland, succeeding Earl Spencer, this Parliament, to secure the necessary legislation, which will probable the right of a Roman Catholic to hold the office.

Prosecution in the Study of the Irish Language.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—Much progress is reported to have been made of late in the study of the Irish language in the national school-book firm in Ulster this just issued more than 1,000 copies for use in side-schools in the national schools. Hitherto the use has been on a subsidy of 100.

Dramatic Incident at a Lecture in Dublin.

LONDON, Dec. 10.—A dramatic incident occurred this evening at a public lecture in Dublin. The lecturer recited "Shamus O'Brien," and graphically described the scaffold scene. Just at the most thrilling part of the recital a placard strick rang out from the body of the hall, and a woman was seen struggling in hysterics. Confusion ensued for a few minutes, but it was found impossible to restrain her frantic cries, and she was carried from the auditorium, the lecture concluding the hall to a drug-shop, where restorative were applied. It was found she received consciousness by saying that she was a sister of "Jim Shamus," who was hanged for complicity in the murder of Lord Cavendish and Mr. Burke in Phoenix Park.

Bad Health at a Returning Emigrant.

Amongst the passengers who landed the Cunard steamer Boston, recently, were Mr. and Mrs. Fisher and her sister, who were returning to Ireland with the intention of settling at Waterford, near York. Mr. Fisher left the sisters went to America about two years since, and worked for a time in the State of Massachusetts, close to Boston. Both visited the climate very probably, but Anne suffered terribly from sea-sickness and during the passage was unable to keep her bath. On Nov. 27, the Samaria arrived at Queenstown, and the sick woman was removed to the tender. It was noticed that she was in a very weakly state, and she was landed at Queenstown, when the tender left for the shore, fainted, and died in the tender, having died on the voyage. Her friends had the remains taken on to Cork.

Shinkin.—The jubilee of the Catholic Cathedral of Dublin (which was consecrated in Nov., 1865,) has just been celebrated. In 1834, the site of the Lord Lieutenant (Lord Mulgrave), was a Catholic, and was present. It was the first time since the Reformation that the Catholic Church had ventured to celebrate Dublin with a procession. Then called chapels were low and mostly in back streets.

James Carey, late of Kilmainham Jail, in Dublin, on November 20, a public entertainment appeared in Dublin daily on Nov. 17, with the intimation that a public meeting would be held before the Chief Clerk, at the Four Courts, Dublin, on Tuesday, the 19th day of December, 1884, for the proof and alimonies of debts. Galway.—On November 15, a deputation, consisting of Colonel Nolan, M.P., Mr. Mitchell-Henry, M.P., Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Dublin, M.P., accompanied by Mr. Gray, M.P., waited upon the Chancellor of the Exchequer and Mr. Gorman, to urge the desirability of an advance of a sum of £50,000, at a specially reduced rate of interest, for the purpose of constructing the long-talked of Longford and Athenry Railway. Colonel Nolan fully explained the special circumstances of the case, and urged the great advantage that the line would be, not only to the immediate district, but to the whole western Ireland. It would be the first line of railway to be built in Ireland, and would be the special outlet for the Midland Railway, instead of one giving the Midland Railway access to Galway, and the Great Western Railway, which the Lord Lieutenant could only permit a guarantee for the line. Mr. Gray, and Mr. Mr. Childers promised to give the matter his best consideration, remarking that there would be difficulties in the way of establishing a precedent such as that proposed.

Kildare.—The long-delayed ceremony of Reception took place in the Convent of Mercy, Carrickmacross, on November 19th, the young lady received being Miss Julia Keeley, daughter of Kildare in religion, Sister Mary Pecius.

Kilmy County.—The ceremony of reception took place on Wednesday, November 19, at Mount Rose, Dr. Ryan, in the Rev. Mother Mary Ignatius, Superior, presiding. The young lady received was Miss Mary, daughter of the late Mr. Michael Cahill, Ballycross House, Kilkenny, and sister of Lady Lanesborough.

An old man, 80 years of age, named Ryan, was accidentally burned to death at Clonbiffin near Roscagher, on November 18.

Kilkenny.—On November 16th, a fire broke out in a building attached to the Union workhouse, Kilkenny, and timber was burned. The police were the first to discover the flames and the alarm being quickly sounded, several willing hands were ready to assist in extinguishing the fire, which was done in about two hours. The damage, which is estimated at £100, is covered by insurance.

Kerry.—Stephen Franklin Downing, Esq., of Castle Gregory, has been appointed by the Commission of the Peace for Kerry.

Four men, named Michael Sullivan, Noonan, Richard Rice and Thos. Sullivan, were arrested at Knocknagree, on Saturday, by Sergeant Gallagher, a farmer, residing in the district. The prisoners were taken to the Mill Street Bridge. The deceased, with the prisoners, had been at Knocknagree Fair, and on the way home they drank pretty freely. They quarrelled in a public house at the corner of the road, and were ejected. In moving the fight on the road, Gallagher was struck with a stone and received fatal injuries. The prisoners were remanded, bail bonds refused.

Leitrim.—At a recent sessions of the Mohill Board of Guardians, presided over by Major Jones, J. P., a letter was read from Mr. Mitchell, solicitor of James Gormally Lawder, D. L., were received.

On November 11, at Drumshanbo, county Leitrim, the Most Rev. Dr. Woodlock gave the habit of the Sacred Heart to Miss Kate Sheridan, Adoration to Miss Kate Shanacher in religious Sacred Mary Frances of St. John the Evangelist, fourth daughter (second in religion) of the late Mr. Patrick Shanacher, Tullyvin.

The following interesting letter was received by the Rev. Mother Superior, Convent of the Sacred Heart, Longford, on Sunday, November 9, on the subject of the Jubilee celebration:—"Dear Mother, we must follow the precedent of a holy Jubilee, which, in the Jubilee of 1825, was marked by the use of intoxicating drinks at wakes. The Bishop wish to prohibit the presence of any people of either sex, in the house of death, after a short or before eleven. He also wishes to prohibit CHRISTMAS BELL.

"A star shall rise and a king shall reach, and a sceptre shall spring up from Israel."

Christmas bells are sweetly chiming
O'er the gay expanse of sea,
Freighted with the glad tidings of message,
'Peace on earth' and peace to thee.

Over hills and snow wreathed valleys,
Over mountain's rugged fold,
Where the star of Jacob trembled—
O'er the manger, so of old.

Where the palm is green uplifting,
Where the olive branches wave,
Seek we in that silent stable
Him, who came to save.

As the Gloria in Excelsis
Floats on high, for souls to day,
With the shepherds eager wend we
Where the Infant Saviour lay.

Bringing gifts, e'en as the magi,
Shall our souls outpour them hence,
Love offering, Christian greeting,
Gold, myrrh, and frankincense.

Christmas bells to-day are chiming
Sweetly o'er life's troubled sea,
Freighted with the white-wing'd message,
'Peace on earth,' and peace to thee.

THE CARDINAL'S CHRISTMAS

As Seen by a Cabman and a Constable.

How a Prince of the Church Missed His Christmas Dinner—A True Story.

I.—THE CAB'MAN'S REPORT.

"Michael Edward, by the grace of God, and the favor of the Apostle See, Archbishop of Holdenses, and Cardinal of the Holy Roman Church, by the title of St. Rose on the Tiberine Hill.

This, as I have learned, is the full title, mutatis mutandis, of the gentleman concerning whose actions on the 25th of December, 187-, I have been requested to give an account so far as I saw them. I am only a cabman, and am not an educated person—not to avoid misunderstanding, I must explain that in using the phrase mutatis mutandis, I say what was laid down for me by one who for a long time has honored me by his friendship, and who, although now living in obscurity—that is the term he used to describe his lodgings in Midland Mews—was a graduate, with high honors, at Camford University, and knows all the dead languages better than I know my mother-tongue. Having been shown why, in this story I have to tell, it would be wise to conceal the real names of the parties, I consulted my learned friend aforesaid how to do it, and he drew out the above formula, as he called it, which he said held the sense of mutatis mutandis. I suppose you all know what this means—and so I can go on.

Well—that "Michael Edward, by the grace of God," and so on, is, in fact, a very great personage. My learned friend has explained to me something about this, and although my learned friend, unhappily for himself, is not a religious man, and occasionally indulges in expressions concerning monkeys as our ancestors, which I do not approve of, he made it clear to me that this "Michael Edward, by the grace of God," was not merely a priest and a Bishop, but a "great prince" in the Church, which has always existed in the world, and of which the Pope is the head." My grandmother was an Irish woman, and I can remember hearing her pray for the Pope, and saying, "God bless our Holy Father, the Pope. When I told this to my learned friend he laughed,—he was talking my to found the gin hot, at my expense, in the private bar of the 'Cabman's Content,' at that moment—and he said that as my grandmother died fifty years ago, the Pope she was praying for was not the present Pope. Seeing my look grieved at this, he added that it was all the same, and although there had been 259 Popes, one after the other, they all were the same, and, if I did not misunderstand him, he said they all were Peter. This is a point that I intend to look into as soon as I have time—that is, I suppose, as soon as I have my arm or leg broken and am laid up in the hospital for a few weeks. But I learned enough from my learned friend to know that "Michael Edward is a prince of God" was in reality a greater potentate than any of the dukes and lords of the land, and that I was in what my learned friend called "the line of succession," by which he meant, as he explained, that "Michael Edward by the grace of God" might be made Pope himself, on the death of the present Pope, and to be Pope was to be the grandest and highest ruler on earth—"the ruler," he said, "of more than two hundred millions of willing and loving souls." I remember his words well, and I am sure that I repeat them correctly.

All this, however, I learned after I had seen "Michael Edward by the grace of God," and how I came to see him is what you wish me to tell you. I think I have never seen a more miserable day than the Christmas of 187-. There was first a rain storm, then a fall of wet snow; and another rain that turned the snow into slush; and then a thick fog—so thick that when I left my cab on the stand for a moment and went into the nearest public-house to have a drop of something hot to keep the cold from freezing up my heart, I lost my way in coming back and had some difficulty in finding my cab again. I was the only one on the stand; all my mates had gone off swearing that no fares were to be had on such a night, and that they were not willing to sit on their boxes and starve to death with cold and wet. I should have gone too, but the day's work had been bad, and I had not earned enough to pay my master for the hire of the horse and cab, and it had been dark, along of the fog and the shortness of the day, for more than an hour. My cab-rank was close to the Alexandra Station, and at the corner of the Hollbatterige road. Very near this street, as I afterwards came to know, was the "Archbishop's House." I did not know it then, for I had recently taken my place at this stand and was not well acquainted with the houses of the gentry in that neighborhood. Well, just as I had got back to my cab, and had climbed up to my seat, and was wrapping my blanket around my legs, to my delight I heard a gentleman hail me. "Cabby!" he cried. It was only one word—but it pierced through the fog like the sound of a silver bell. I seized the rains and drew up to the side of the pavement, close to the gas lamp, under which I dimly saw the figure of a gentleman. As I came up he moved a little, so that the light fell full on his face. Such a face! I took off my hat involuntarily, as soon as I saw it—it was so noble, so sweet, so grand and so sad. I did not know all this, to put it in words, at the moment, but I felt it, and I have thought so often since then that I now know how to put it in words. I jumped down to open the door for him. He was a tall, slim, very slim gentleman, and he was wrapped up in a long cloak that nearly reached his feet. "Cabby," said he, in the voice that sounded like a silver bell, "please drive to Mounthollland House, and go quickly. I am rather behind my time." His foot was on the step when a person who was hurrying past at a great rate suddenly stopped, took his hat off, and rushing in between us, was about, as I thought, to knock down at the feet of my fare—but a quick motion of the latter prevented him. Some hurried words passed between them; I stood aside, that I might lay my fair—whom the other one addressed as "your Eminence"—say that he had given his servants leave of absence for the day, and was going to Mounthollland House "in his equipage," whereby he meant my cab. "And I am late now; so pardon me and I'll be off." The other spoke something in French, or some other outlandish lingo; my fare jumped into the cab, and mounting to my seat I drove off.

Now, there is a long out and a short cut from Alexandra Station to Mounthollland House. The long cut is by the main road, by past the Museum through the park, and along the High Street. The short cut is through Satter's lane, behind the museum and across St. Swithan's fields—the said "fields" being, as you know, a neighborhood of narrow streets, crammed with old houses, and having the reputation of being inhabited by thieves, loose women and bad characters generally. I was anxious to please my fare and get him to Mounthollland House quickly; and if I was anxious on my own account to do the job speedily, for the fog had thickened and the cold of it went to the very marrow of my bones. So I took the short cut, and drove on at a sharp trot, although the fog was so thick that I could not see from one lamp-post to another. I forgot to say that I was driving a blind horse; they are the only ones you can safely use on a foggy day; a horse that can see at all won't go faster than walk through a thick fog, and sometimes he won't go at all.

We had got safely through Satter's lane, and I was just turning the corner into St. Swithan's fields—the fog then seemed to have doubled itself together, and to be twice as thick as before—when I ran over a man! He was rushing across the road in front of us, the horse struck him with his off shoulder; he fell like a log, and horse and cab went over him. I stopped my cab, and jumped down off my box. But I scarcely stopped when there, at the side of the cab, stood the man. He was an enormous fellow, and I could see that he was a navvy—one of the navvies, I knew, who came from the North, where they have been working on railways and such like, and go to Spain for digging sewers and other fancy and delicate work of that kind. He was very quick in his movements. With one blow of his great fist he smashed the glass in the window of the cab, and put three shillings and eight pence for it, out of the sovereign that my fare gave me when it was all over;—then he tore open the door with his hand all bleeding from the blow, and he broke glass, and before I could jump down he had seized my fare and dragged him out of the cab. The two men stood face to face on the muddy and slippery pavement.

"Curse you!" cried the navvy, in a hoarse voice: "curse your proud soul! Driving in your fine carriages to your junketings and merry-makings, and running over poor men as if they were pigs or mud! Curse you! I'll teach you better!"

And he raised his right arm—he had been holding some blow in the air—and struck a blow at him that would have killed an ox.

I never saw anything like it! My fare turned the stroke aside from him as easily as I would blow away a fly! Leaning back, he did it was a mystery to me until an old weasened broken-down boxing-master showed me his trick one day, and said that forty years ago they knew that trick at Oxbridge University—and the moment the navvy was lying on his back in the mud. My fare helped him up, and said, very quietly:

"Now you are not hurt at all. We are sorry to have stopped you. You were running in haste. What is the matter?"

"Master," said the man—making a motion to pull off his hat, but finding he had none on his head, it having been picked up by myself out of the mud, and I then being engaged in cleaning it by knocking it against the wheel—"Master, I humbly ask your pardon, but I was running to find a priest for a dying woman. Though what use a priest can be to her can't see. I suppose it is the same as a parson, and that my mates and their wives and sweethearts have to be had on such a night, and that they were not willing to sit on their boxes and starve to death with cold and wet. I should have gone too, but the day's work had been bad, and I had not earned enough to pay my master for the hire of the horse and cab, and it had been dark, along of the fog and the shortness of the day, for more than an hour. My cab-rank was close to the Alexandra Station, and at the corner of the Hollbatterige road. Very near this street, as I afterwards came to know, was the "Archbishop's House." I did not know it then, for I had recently taken my place at this stand and was not well acquainted with the houses of the gentry in that neighborhood. Well, just as I had got back to my cab, and had more, after winding through a narrow lane and passing a mews, our strange guide stopped at the door of a tumble-down house, or rather of a house, kept from falling only by being propped up on each side by shortings. The fog had cleared off a little; the faint light of the moon showed us the house. In the upper story of it, out of a broken window, we saw the haggard face of a man, peering into the gloom. At the same moment a police officer, who was walking on the opposite side of the street, crossed over and hurried to the door of the cab.

"What is this?" he said, roughly, then lifting his bull's-eye lantern he glanced into the cab.

"It is all right, officer," said my fare, "I have come to a dying woman here; I am a priest."

"It is a den of thieves, sir," said the officer. "Perhaps they have put up a job for you. Why, sir," he added in a whisper, which I heard plainly enough, "they would think nothing of knocking you on the head to get the ring."

The hand of my fare was on the door of the cab, and the light of the officer's lantern fell upon it. On one of his fingers was a ring with a green stone set round with white cross—they sparkled like the stars in the sky.

"I am quite safe," said my fare; "I am a priest, and have come to see a dying woman."

By this time he had got out of the cab and had taken the navvy by the arm. "Show me where she is," said he; and they disappeared together.

II.—THE POLICEMAN'S REPORT.

Knowing the character of Moody's Gang, I was strictly ordered from Inspector Fox special instructions to watch most carefully that neighborhood, and "to do my duty to look after the safety of the gentleman who, as described by the cabman, was stationed at the door, and, want into the worst building in the row, in the charge, as it appeared to me, of a man who will not hesitate to kill him for twopence. The man led the gentleman up to the third floor of the house, and I followed softly. A door was opened—they entered; I softly pushed the door so that I could see what was going on and be ready to act when occasion called. The room was crached. On a low bed in the corner a woman was dying; I have seen many deaths, and I know she was at her last gasp. Her face was terrible; she seemed to be in her last agony. A man stood by her bedside; as the door opened he moved a little, but he still held her hand in his. The gentleman threw his cloak and hat on the floor, and advanced to the woman. "I am a priest," he said. The man dropped on his knees; the woman attempted to rise, but fell back again upon the wretched bed. The priest whispered a few words to the man, he rose and moved to the door. I left my place of observation and he joined me in the dark hall, closing the door behind him. We waited in silence for some minutes; then the door opened and the priest beckoned us to enter. The woman's face was changed; she was dying and she knew it; but there was no more agony nor fear to be seen in her countenance. The priest knelt at the foot of the bed; the man fell on his knees at the bedside; and the dying woman placed her hand in his. The priest began to recite what I took to be the prayers for the dying. I remembered some of the words, although they are Latin, of which I know nothing; and when I reported the case to Inspector Fox he took cleaning it by knocking it against the wheel—Master, I humbly ask your pardon, but I was running to find a priest for a dying woman. Though what use a priest can be to her can't see. I suppose it is the same as a parson, and that my mates and their wives and sweethearts have to be had on such a night, and that they were not willing to sit on their boxes and starve to death with cold and wet. I should have gone too, but the day's work had been bad, and I had not earned enough to pay my master for the hire of the horse and cab, and it had been dark, along of the fog and the shortness of the day, for more than an hour. My cab-rank was close to the Alexandra Station, and at the corner of the Hollbatterige road. Very near this street, as I afterwards came to know, was the "Archbishop's House." I did not know it then, for I had recently taken my place at this stand and was not well acquainted with the houses of the gentry in that neighborhood. THE MEET IN THE SNOW.

"I Have Come Home to Die, Frank"

Having been asked to tell a story, and wishing, if possible, to oblige on this night, of all the good nights in the year, I will—having no story worth telling at hand just now—relate to you and our good friends assembled around this roaring Christmas fire, a little something, which I call one of my own experiences, and which I believe it does me no harm to remember.

Ten now many years since, in the waning light of a bleak evening in December, I sat at the bedside of my young wife, whose cheeks and eyes betray, alas! the sad and despairing gaze the spoiling throes of the little sufferer that lay within. My pretty one had but two days before been stricken down, in all the joy of her young life, by the fell plague scarlatina, and yet, so direful were its effects, that on the evening I speak of she lay but awaiting the dread messenger. Wise and learned physicians had come and gone, after having presented and had tried every remedy known to science without avail; and nothing now remained to do but watch in hopeless woe the hour of our darling's departure. Her poor mother, my ever gentle wife, had yielded to the weariness consequent upon the sleepless attention said by her during the preceding days and nights to her suffering babe, and, unperceived by friends had retired for a brief period to rest. So, thus it came about that I sat alone by my darling's bed on that dreary winter evening.

The shadows had deepened into darkness, but through the as yet uncurtained windows I could see the snow falling silently and fast into the almost deserted streets. I held a little hand within my own, a throbbing little hand—and imagining at the moment that I felt a slight pressure, I bent down over the suffering face.

"Darling pipa."

"My love, my Lilly."

"Before the lights—come in—papa I want—to speak to—you."

I put my ear to her tiny, quivering mouth, and waited for what was coming; there was a moment's silence then, in an anxious whisper, she asked:

"Papa, am I going to die?"

"My precious darling," I answered, "what put such a thought into my Lily's head?"

"I don't know, papa, but I think I am." Then, as if a new idea had crossed her mind, she quickly added: "You know, papa, I have heard—for we as that good little children become angels in heaven, and that the angels at one time, long, long ago, went to meet and welcome a child that was born in a stable."

I felt my throat becoming dry and harsh as I listened to the whisper of my baby, and it was with some effort that I found voice to reply.

"Well, my Lilly."

"When is it Christmas Day, papa?"

"Day after to-morrow, love."

"And I was—born—to-day," she continued, as if the thread of her discourse had not been broken by her thinking of I were to die now—to-night, you know, and that I—go to meet—the angels—with the—other children, I would be upon Christmas Day, and that before—we were put—into the ground—the angels that—spoke of, and—said the child that was lad in the manger."

"God help me—God help me—I shall all my reason in the contemplation of my little child.

"Oh, papa dear, don't cry—don't—think of—my own darling papa"—and she made an effort to stroke my face with her little hand.

"My own, own Lilly," said, though with broken utterance, "you—you will be a bright, lovely angel in heaven, and when you are, sure you will never forget your poor papa?"

"Never" she answered, solemnly, "never—never—never—I will pray for Uncle Willy, too, papa dear," she continued, "that he may be a good man, and not—not—be a soldier any more, and then you'd forgive him, and when he comes the next time—you'd not make him go—for him, wn? she anxiously inquired.

"No, love, never, never, ask what you wish, I will promise you anything, anything."

"Ah, thanks for me," said the child, wearily, "only for yourself and mamma and Uncle Willy."

I felt the sufferer's reproach to my selfishness, but little heed I now to lived over it, for feeling a trembling pressure on my hand, I again bent over the little face.

"My Lilly, what is it?"

"Let in the light."

I rang, and the lights were immediately brought, then I turned to draw the curtains of the window together, when my infant's gaze drew back again to her bedside, and then I saw it—all, all, the change that was to come.

"Papa, my own papa, kiss Lilly—and—bid her good-bye; she is going—into the snow."

Silently, yet hastily, I rose and did my child's last request; then, entering on the spot to the room where lay her mother, I whispered, "Catherine, get up." In an instant she was over on her feet, all dazed and startled.

"If ever," I said laying my hand on the arm of the frightened woman, "you have looked forward to the time when an humble obedience to my decree of means would be most strictly required of you, dearest, by the who gave and taketh away—that time is at hand."

"Ah, God, my little child."

"Hush, Catherine, hush! I know—I know—all my sorrow."

We entered. Ah, mothers—ah fathers, ye who have known what it is to have little ones given unto you—ye only can understand the unfathomable woe which filled our hearts, and ye only can pity and excuse our sad questioning of the Most High.

Pale—pale, and cold enough now, she lay, rapidly chilling in a death-damp, the half-opened mouth she closing the quivering agony of our darling, her upturned eyes beaming with the tears of her supreme sorrow her hair—her golden curls, once in glory, my pride, my boast.

"Ah, my heart—

Five minutes after and we had humbly and reverently bent down and kissed the little white face, never more to be lighted up in bright joy at the sight of us. Then, brave as a soldier on the battlefield, my gentle Catherine stood up to face her sorrow.

How many times that woeful night I kissed my dead darling, and how while they wrapped her in her snowy grave-clothes—fit type for her angelic innocence—I would not be kept from her little room, and how the many flowers, with which they decked her, purely pure, seemed to my heart heavy over my head, I would utterly forget them, and how I stretched her tiny hand, and smoothed those glorious golden curls of hers, it is not for me to say. Suffice it, that that weary night was passed by me in wandering from the room of the bereaved mother, to that which held all that remained to me of what was once my hope, my pride, and joy, and when at last the blank, miserable day stared in upon me there alone, I laid my white face on the tidy white bed, and the memory of my great woe bade me for a time farewell.

I must have slept long, for when I awoke the shadows had begun to darken around me. I peered into the twilight revelings inquisitively, and found I was not alone—no, for there, sitting by the side of my patient wife, was he, my brother, once the light, now the disgrace of our house—that brother who had broken the gentle heart of a doting mother—he, the wanderer, the forger, the—dare he—for love of whom a sweet, alas! too confiding girl, slept deep under the waving grass of the lonely chapel yard—he, to whom in my great wrath, I had sworn eternal enmity, and had forbidden my house forever—there he sat, pale and sorrowful, bending on me a look so penitent, so humble, so woebegone, that even now I feel my heart relenting to him. But was it reading my wife was, or how came the sound to my ear that "two men went up to the temple to pray, one the Pharisee and the other a Publican—and that one prayed with a loud voice, and the other, kneeling lowly and far off, striking his breast murmuring lowly, "O, Lord, be merciful unto me a sinner!" I know not, but I sprang up with a loud cry, and in the memory of my child, who died upon the cross, took the erring yet contrite brother to my heart.

"Arise dear."

I was the voice of my wife that had whispered—I know not my ear, and I felt to know that the return of my brother had been but the phantom of my over-strained imagination.

Then I arose, and taking the hand of my wife, I leaned with her upon the cold face of our dead love, and solemnly and calmly I spoke:

"Sweet mother, our angel child, the lost is a sacred trust to the hapless father. Yes, the child—the child—be sought out, and the last of my days shall be rendered as happy as the circumstances will admit of."

We buried our little beauty, as she bore the name of her aunt, on the night of the holy Christmas morning, the snow had ceased to fall during the night, and the moon, the last night we spent in our house, shone out upon the cold face of our dead love, and solemnly and calmly I spoke:

"Sweet mother, our angel child, the lost is a sacred trust to the hapless father. Yes, the child—the child—be sought out, and the last of my days shall be rendered as happy as the circumstances will admit of."

We buried our little beauty, as she bore the name of her aunt, on the night of the holy Christmas morning, the snow had ceased to fall during the night, and the moon, the last night we spent in our house, shone out upon the cold face of our dead love, it began to fall silently and softly on the tiny coffin lid. We had laid our little one down to her last earthly home, and here is little Nelly dying of hunger, and to-morrow Christmas Day."

John turned on his wretched couch, and groaned. The wife turned her face in the counterpane, and wept, whilst little Nelly cried:—

"Oh, mamma, I am dying; I can't see, my eyes are weak; I'm hungry, mamma, I'm hungry; Oh, give me bread."

A child of about twelve months old lay beside its father; it had sucked some nourishment from its mother's breast, yet that mother was fast dying of hunger.

"We cannot hold till out morning, John," sobbed the mother.

The father groaned, and wept like a child. Little Nelly was still; she had fallen asleep. The exhausted child lay in her arms; the poor little thing's head fell back.

The door was not fastened, and Bill and Charley stood on the floor unperceived, watching this scene. A single rushlight glimmered in the corner.

There was no rule-by-the-clock in this mess tree. Bill hastily uncorked a bottle of wine, and took the child and poured some of it down its throat; it revived. The father and mother looked upon them; their hearts were so full they could not speak.

Charley took some bread and meat and some wine to the sick man, and bade him eat. Mrs. Beaty joined her husband, and Nelly, too, was soon able to eat.

"God bless you, Mr. Charley; we were dying, and could not live until morning," said the poor woman, "but for you."

"And to-morrow Christmas Day," said Charley; "but fear not, papa has sent you word that he will support you until you get well, and then find you in work."

"I will not repeat their expressions of gratitude, but Charley left Bill and Bill rubbed his sleeve across his eyes, and said, "I reckon I'd be would give a shilling a week out of my own earnings to them. Could Dives, from his happy home and warm fireside take a peep at the sadness and priests of the poor, he might remember that these are Christmas times, and give abundantly, for the sake of the Babe, Mary's child, born in the little ones.

As Charley and Bill returned home, they did not feel the rain and the storm that swept around them. Their way lay near the sea, for Mr. Lindly's land extended to the shore.

"Stop, Bill, Stop!" said Charley, "I think I hear shouts from the sea."

Bill listened; he did hear shouts and shrieks rising above the warring elements. Then the sound of a gun came booming toward the shore.

"It is a wreck, Master Charley. Oh! God help them! they have little chance of escaping."

They ran to the house and called all the servants. They procured all lights and blankets they could, and then, headed by Squire Lindly, they ran to the shore. Ah! that vessel was a wreck, and, as the gun fired, Belle Lorraine, bound for Sydney, was lost! Not a soul aboard had the faintest hope of meeting those they loved, of sharing in the Christmas festivities. There were joyful anticipations. Wives, brothers, and sisters kept the yule-log burning, and the Christmas-tree was prepared for the happy meeting. Ah! the ocean surge was their shroud, and the howling and roaring raging elements was their funeral dirge.

As Mr. Lindly and his party gained the beach, the storm seemed to lull, the lightning flashed, the thunder roared around the shore. On, on, that vessel was drawn by resistless force. Dark forms are seen clinging about the vessel; still they hope, but hope vanishes as the vessel parted in two, engulphed with the sea, and dashes in the fragments on the beach, as she is shivered into a thousand pieces, and the shrieks of her crew are lost amid the roar of the elements.

"Great God!" said Mr. Lindly, who was all the time running here and there, "they are lost; we can do nothing for them."

"Yes, we can seek within one hundred yards of land. She struck on a hidden rock.

"Some of those on the shore were and, yet they could do nothing to save them.

"Who ventured on, to see if any one of the crew might swim for the shore. A fearful storm began to lull, the sea began to get calm, as if it had worked itself beyond its strength; the spirited crew, who had gone out, coaxed his father to purchase a commission in the army. Though the old man did not like to part with him, still, with an Englishman's love of country, he could not think of thwarting his noble ambition. Victor spent a good deal of his time with Charles, and sighed for the day when he himself could wield a sword. After a few years more he was broke out with Russia. Victor was then about eighteen years. Charles's regiment was one of the first ordered to the Crimea, that battleground of contending nations. Charles came home to his parents, and Victor was left with sisters wept, and pressed him to remain at home. The father took his hand in his:—

"God bless you, and watch over you, my child! (to though you are my only son, I would rather hear of your death than of your dishonor."

Victor stood a mute witness of this parting scene.

"And you, my brother Victor," said Charles, pressing his hand, "what do you say?"

"Yes! I'll go with you."

"Go with me?"

"Yes; something tells me that I will be inspired at me." "Ah! I see Anyway, I could not let my dear brother go by himself. What do you say, father?"

"He is so," said Mr. Lindly; though this is a double affliction."

In vain did Charles urge him to remain at home to comfort his parents; then finding him obstinate, he told his father there was an officer selling out in his regiment, and that he would sell sheep. Mr. Lindly placed money in his hand, and Victor left the home of his childhood.

After his master left he pined and refused food; he was one day found dead near the scene of the wreck. Victor took the collar with him.

CHAPTER III.

Ora heroes passed safely through the engagements of the Alma and several subsequent battles. The English troops were encamped in fancied security, when the Russians attacked them on the heights of Inkerman. Victor and Charles were attached to the fourth division, which was one of the first in the engagement. Nobly did they contend in the hand-to-hand melee. Through the molten sheets of lead swept round them, mowing down their men in scores, still on they rushed, cheering the fearful fire. The bravest quailed before the appalling sight of carnage and slaughter. Victor's cheeks blanched, it was with the hope of glory. They had now reached the Russian rifle pits, pouring forth death; still on they marched, among the dead and wounded. Charles was separated from his brother, and was surrounded by five Russians. He shot two of them with his rifle, and fell from a bayonet wound from another. He was about finishing him, when Victor rushed to his aid, shot him, ran his sabre through another, but a ball from the rifle passed through his breast and laid him beside his friend. For days they lay unconscious in the French hospital, to which they were removed by the French ambulance party who chanced to meet them. Their sand was ebbing fast, they had been in a trance. She was French, very young and beautiful. Under her tender care they were fast recovered, Charles was not one of the same.

"We may thank the good Madeline for our recovery, I am thinking, Charles," said Victor. Somehow my heart yearns towards her. Isn't she very like the likeness in the miniature?"

"Very," said Charles.

"I must believe I am hopelessly in love with her."

"Nonsense, Charles, in love with good Madeline! Why man you might as well be in love with the moon."

"Well, I believe so; but then I suppose that it is all gratitude, for we may thank her gentle care to be alive."

"I was, Charles, and you may thank my good shot, too; for faith, that Russian was going to do for you."

"True; well I hope I may return you the compliment some-day, my dear fellow. I wish our friends at home knew that we were living. I suppose we are set down among the dead."

"Likely enough, but Charles, I dreamt last night of the wreck, and I thought that my mother rose up before me, pale and beautiful; and she took my hand, and then beckoned to a young lady, and placed her hand in mine, and said, 'This is your sister.' I looked into her face—it was Sister Madeline."

"Pooh! all a dream," said Charles, as Madeline came into the room.

"I dreamt of my brother there, sister Madeline about a dream I had; I may inquire it me."

Sister Madeline smiled; that smile throbbed Victor's heart. He had been to Charles.

"Well, let us hear your dream," said Sister Madeline.

Victor recounted his dream.

"Yes, a collier around his neck marked 'D. M.' Here is since a minister of my mother; it is so like you, and the name of the ship also was the La belle Lorraine. But what ails you? you look ill, Sister Madeline?"

As Sister Madeline gazed upon the miniature, she turned deadly pale, and exclaimed, "Oh, my mother! oh! my brother!" and then fell in a swoon upon the floor. A bell was rung, and more of the sisters came in. Sister Madeline soon recovered. She then told them that fifteen years ago her father, Victor de Moran was look on his return from England. He had been some years there, and got married to an English lady, a few years before that her grandfather took her to himself. He died, and her father was returning home to inherit his vast property, when he was lost in the ship La Belle Lorraine. Her father was tired life, and had serious thoughts of becoming a religious. To try my strength, I determined to take the order, and came out here for my novitiate," she said.

"Oh, my sister," exclaimed Victor de Moran, as we must now call him, "I am your sister," and they mingled their tears.

CHAPTER IV.

It was Christmas Eve. The yule-log burned cheerily on Squire Lindly's hearth, it crackled and blazed brightly, and threw out sparks, and did its best to look pleasant, as if it were conscious that it was Christmas Eve, and that it were placed there to celebrate the anniversary of our Saviour's birth.

"Hur, hurrah, on such a night as this He who came to save the world was born in a stable, despised and neglected by that world which He came to redeem."

The rain pattered on the window, and the sleet swept by with fearful gusts of wind, the storm moaned heavily round the house, as it was a fearful Christmas Eve. Yet, cheerything looked warm and bright in that old parlor, for pleasant scenes and cheerful faces and laughing voices made some forget the storm without. The squire sat in his old easy chair by the fire, and his good wife sat by his side. Their children played around the Christmas tree, and compared how little gifts and offerings. They were a happy family.

"Well, wife, and so to-morrow will be Christmas Day. We have passed many a Christmas, and happy ones, too together. We have been blessed with children and riches, how many more deserving have suffered sickness and poverty."

"True, John, true, and I fear we are not grateful enough to the good God who has showered so bounteously upon us."

"I fear not, wife. Here we are, loaded with a superabundance of good things," and he glanced at the table laden with the good gifts, "sons, perhaps, this blessed night wanting the common necessaries of life."

"But there is so much poverty in the world, John, what can we do?"

"True, wife, there is want, no doubt in every place; but then, if every rich man relieved his immediate poor, how many a heavy heart would be turned into a happy one before night. Though it is late and the night is hard indeed, I should like to make a beginning."

"Time enough to morrow, John. Who could go out on such a night?"

"Why Charley is strong enough to go with our man Bill, and there is that poor man, Beaty, who fell from the house and broke his leg; he is able for a messenger, and he has recovered his father to purchase a commission in the army. Though the old man did not like to part with him, still, with an Englishman's love of country, he could not think of thwarting his noble ambition. Victor spent a good deal of his time with Charles, and sighed for the day when he himself could wield a sword. After a few years more he was broke out with Russia. Midnight Mass in the Penal Days.

The earthless sky-lit in the lofty glen.
The hills are wrapt in sleep, dark in the shade
A silence for an alien, and women and men
Are gathering stealthily in the twilight
Hastening up from the spreading vale
Hastening with the speed of the avenged one,
This Christmas-eve, to hear mass full
To hell then hearth at the Midnight Mass

Silently falls the drifting snow
Falls as the feet of a spirit
Still through the hushing night-time the sky gets
Its like spectres across the moon
Stillness, wakening, and the night
Wary of ears and deep needs
Till they should be by the wayside, sentry
In the form of the Guard at Midnight Mass

Maiden, matron, sire and son
Grouped together the brave and the bold
Dazzled to the sallow their fathers sons
Knelt they there in the muffled and
Stalthful and fearful, and silent
Bending low in their prayer to God
The author and Sphyx of the Midnight Mass

Slowly, scarcely raising the bell
Raises the priest the Host on high
Bows upward with singing swell
A sorrowful people's prayerful cry,
Save us, O God, from the bloodhound's tooth
The Sphyx's wrath and the scaffold's doom
Keepers, O God, in the paths of truth
To our woeful journey toward the tomb.

"Hur, hurrah, on such a night as this He who came to save the world was born in a stable, despised and neglected by that world which He came to redeem."

The rain pattered on the window, and the sleet swept by with fearful gusts of wind, the storm moaned heavily round the house, as it was a fearful Christmas Eve. Yet, cheerything looked warm and bright in that old parlor, for pleasant scenes and cheerful faces and laughing voices made some forget the storm without. The squire sat in his old easy chair by the fire, and his good wife sat by his side. Their children played around the Christmas tree, and compared how little gifts and offerings. They were a happy family.

"Well, wife, and so to-morrow will be Christmas Day. We have passed many a Christmas, and happy ones, too together. We have been blessed with children and riches, how many more deserving have suffered sickness and poverty."

"True, John, true, and I fear we are not grateful enough to the good God who has showered so bounteously upon us."

"I fear not, wife. Here we are, loaded with a superabundance of good things," and he glanced at the table laden with the good gifts, "sons, perhaps, this blessed night wanting the common necessaries of life."

"But there is so much poverty in the world, John, what can we do?"

"True, wife, there is want, no doubt in every place; but then, if every rich man relieved his immediate poor, how many a heavy heart would be turned into a happy one before night. Though it is late and the night is hard indeed, I should like to make a beginning."

"Time enough to morrow, John. Who could go out on such a night?"

"Why Charley is strong enough to go with our man Bill, and there is that poor man, Beaty, who fell from the house and broke his leg; he is able for a messenger, and he has recovered his father to purchase a commission in the army. Though the old man did not like to part with him, still, with an Englishman's love of country, he could not think of thwarting his noble ambition. Victor spent a good deal of his time with Charles, and sighed for the day when he himself could wield a sword. After a few years more he was broke out with Russia. Victor was then about eighteen years. Charles's regiment was one of the first ordered to the Crimea, that battleground of contending nations. Charles came home to his parents, and Victor was left with sisters wept, and pressed him to remain at home. The father took his hand in his:—

"God bless you, and watch over you, my child! (to though you are my only son, I would rather hear of your death than of your dishonor."

Victor stood a mute witness of this parting scene.

"And you, my brother Victor," said Charles, pressing his hand, "what do you say?"

"Yes! I'll go with you."

"Go with me?"

"Yes; something tells me that I will be inspired at me." "Ah! I see Anyway, I could not let my dear brother go by himself. What do you say, father?"

"He is so," said Mr. Lindly; though this is a double affliction."

In vain did Charles urge him to remain at home to comfort his parents; then finding him obstinate, he told his father there was an officer selling out in his regiment, and that he would sell sheep

VOICES OF THE ANGELS.

'Twas Christmas morn, the Christ-child born
In humble, dreary manger,
Who shivering there in misery sat,
A poor, rejected stranger.

His Mother strove, with tender love,
A mother's care to yield Him,
Sir, though kept sweet and warm, sighed,
That he from home had sought shield Him.

But hark! What sound is floating round
This grotto, weak and lowly?
Look up and see! In jubilee
Are crowds of angels holy.

Filling the air with music rare
Whose hypnotic, mystic art makes,
Makes hearts vibrate, earth undulate
As with an impulse given.

From heavenly zones, by angel tones
All rapturously singing,
In ecstasy their jubilee,
While joyously they're bringing

To Christ new-born on Christmas morn
Their homage grand, celestial,
And as they sing, true peace they bring
To humble hearts terrestrial.

By faith's clear light, each Christmas night
We see this host before us,
They seem at least, we plainly hear
Their grand, angelic chorus.

"Glory," they cry, "to God on high,
To God's peace eternal,"
From sphere to sphere, for ever more
We'll keep this Festival sacred.

Where'er in state priests consecrate
By their God-given power,
And like Divine, the Bread and Wine,
In that soul-thrilling hour.

With ecstasy and jubilee,
Our white-angelic choir
Shall chant again, our Christmas strain,
And human hearts inspire.

With rapturous love, caught from above,
For Jesus meek and lowly,
Our hearts will be, like Mary's Son
Thrice, holy, holy, holy!

ANNIE O'CONNOR.

A Christmas Story of County Sligo.

BY J. T. O'DALLAGHER.

'Twas Christmas Eve. Hill and valley were clothed in a heavy, stainless mantle of snow, save where the rushy river wound its serpentine way through Oughaun's spreading moor, till lost amid Kilterras sloping hills. The full, pale-faced moon trod, calm and beautiful, the cloudless, stargemmed heaven. Not a sound was abroad save the low moaning of the wind through the stinted shubbery that fringed the little gravel line that led from the cottage to the main boreen of the village. It was indeed a beautiful night, and so thought gentle Annie O'Connor, as she stood at the door of her little cottage and gazed out upon the glistening scene. Yet, she seemed unhappy. There was something in the changing expression of her sweet, innocent face—in the wistful look of her large, blue, dreamy eyes, which told her heart was not as peaceful as the scene on which she gazed.

"Come here, Annie, acushla; you'll get your death of cold standing there so long. What's wrong with you, mavourneen, at all to-night? I've been watching you for the last half hour, and you look like one that would see a ghost. Come up to the fire here and warm yourself, and tell me what you're so lonely about that has changed you so much."

The speaker O'Connor inquiry was seated on a low chair before a cheerful peat fire, that shed a golden glow around the neat, clean and comfortable cottage. She was a slight, tall woman of about forty-five years of age, with fair, well-cut features, showing the footprints of care, and brown eyes, clearly mirroring her warm, generous and motherly heart. Annie, a well shaped maiden of about eighteen summers, with a small face set in a frame of luxuriant, golden hair that floated unconfined down her graceful shoulders, complied, kissed her mother, and, seating herself on a three-legged stool, buried her face in her mother's lap and burst into tears.

"Why are you crying, Annie, mavourneen? This is Christmas Eve, and we ought to be happy. You heard to-day from your father, and he is quite well, and he was well, and that he would be relieved in a few days. Tell me, asthore, why are you so sadly and sighed up her head, wiped away the tears and kissed her affectionately.

"Forgive me, mother for causing this pain. I have battled bravely all the day and night to banish the memories of the last twelve months. I here tried to look happy for your sake, but I have failed. Ah, mother! how can I be gaid and poor father in prison there eleven months for no crime but sheltering our poor neighbors, flying from their homes without bread. What a merciless tyrant! How can I be happy seeing you toiling on from dawn to dark, living here alone on the milk from the nearest house, hardly ever seeing a friendly face, and not knowing what moment we may have to quit this for forever, mother! I never felt lonesome before you left Dublin O'Callaghan was driven from home. Then Johnnie and little Marie came to see me, or I went to see them every night. You know they were here this night twelve months; but God only knows where they are to-night. It must have been drowned going to America, or he would surely have written. Johnnie promised me a hundred times he'd write to me, and Mary said she'd send me a ring. I think, mother, they have written; I was dreaming of them last night. Ah! they must be all dead or they would surely write to me for Christmas."

Here she wept bitterly as the memory of the happy past dowed like a delightful stream through the dreary waste of the future. They were alone.

There is a mother thing, dear mother, which I wish to tell you of, and which I've kept a secret for a long time. That contemptible sneak and coward, Allert Castleback, the agent's son, has me persecuted—wanting me to become his wife. He was here yesterday when you were at Mass, and he said if I did not consent he'd keep my father in jail till he'd rot, and fling you and I out of this house for another week. He said he was coming round to-night to have a talk with you, and to ask your consent. Oh, mother, what will we do? Will bar the door? I knew it was wrong to keep it a secret from you so long. I thought it would be was not serious, and did not wish to make you more unhappy. Oh, mother, I never thought before yesterday he was such a villain. He said he was the means of evicting the poor O'Callahans, because he knew Johnnie loved me. And, mother, he told me another terrible talk which I hardly believe, though he almost convinced me. He said Johnny O'Callahan was hanged in America for murder and robbery, and produced his picture, and, oh, it was a sweet, beautiful one, and looked just like him, as proof of his story. He also hinted as much as that your husband had any father imprisoned, and that if I did not consent to be his wife he'd force me to it. Oh, mother, mother, what will we do?"

Before her mother could answer, for the story she had just heard completely paralyzed her, the quick ear of Annie heard some noise, and turning round, there in the doorway she beheld the form of her tormentor. He was a man of medium height, stout, and very awkwardly shaped. He wore a large cutaway which reached down to his boots, and was buttoned tightly round him. A fur cap was drawn tightly over his low, narrow forehead, and under shaggy eyebrows looked out two, small, cat-like eyes, giving his face the expression more of a fiend than a human being. For a moment both mother and daughter were struck with fear; but only for a moment. The mother was first to recover self-possession. Laddback strode up the center of the floor to where she stood, like the gentle sheep protecting her innocent lamb from the onslaught of the wolf, and in the blandest manner said, "Ah, good night, Mrs. O'Connor, wish you a merry Christmas. How is Miss O'Connor? Hope you are well to-night."

In a calm and dignified tone she answered: "To what are we indebted, Mr. Castleback, for the honor of this visit?"

"Ah! was just passing and thought I'd call in and wish you the compliments of the season, as I mayn't do so to-morrow; also to sympathize with you in your grief for the absence of your husband."

This said, he took a chair and seating himself near where Annie stood stretched forth his hand to grasp, but Annie started back in horror. Mrs. O'Connor watched him closely for a few moments, not knowing what to say or do. She did not wish to anger him; but Annie's story still rang in her ear, his hateful hypocrisy, and the sarcastic, condescending tone in which he spoke, almost stung her to madness. Her first impulse was to order him from the house, but second thought showed the folly of this. She knew she was in his power, and that he could tell her lonely home made to Annie.

"I appreciate very much, Mr. Castleback, your kindness in calling this evening, also the sympathy you have expressed for your husband and myself; but we are two lonely women, with nothing to protect us from the biting tongue of scandal but a cabin. Therefore we desire to be left with the grief of which you were speaking of in peace and quiet."

Stung to desperation by the coolness with which Mrs. O'Connor had spoken for his visit, and requested his departure, he jumped to his feet, his cat-like eyes blazing in his pale face, and his whole frame quivering with rage.

"Haughty ma'am," he said, "I came here to-night to ask your daughter's hand in marriage. Your impudence has spared me much trouble and expense. I will not ask you now, but will take her, and before two months are gone she will be in a frame of luxuriant, golden hair that floated unconfined down her graceful shoulders, complied, kissed her mother, and, seating herself on a three-legged stool, buried her face in her mother's lap and burst into tears.

"Why are you crying, Annie, mavourneen? This is Christmas Eve, and we ought to be happy. DECORATING THE CHRISTMAS TREE.

Our Young Folks.

THE CHRISTMAS ANGEL.

A Beautiful Story For Catholic Children.

My little children, Christmas is your special feast. You learn now how Jesus was once a little babe and a child like you. You are no longer frightened, nor think that God is too great to notice you. Your hearts are full of love, you kneel before the crib and look at Him, and feel sure He knows and loves you. Look at Him well, note His sweet face, His hands and His feet. Then think those eyes never looked cross or angry; those lips never uttered an unbecoming word; those outstretched hands were never raised in anger. Now look at yourselves, and see the difference; sometimes you are both cross and angry; you speak unkindly to your playfellows, and disrespectfully to your parents.

This is your feast; for when the kind Jesus lived on earth, He said, "Suffer little children to come unto Me," and He loves you as much now as then.

How kind Ha is! He has sent a beautiful bright angel from heaven to take care of you, who is always close by your side; he knows and sees everything you do, and tells Jesus all. When you are naughty, he hides in his wings, and sorrows for your sins; but when you are good, he smiles upon you and throws his wings around you. The next time you are tempted to do wrong, think about this good angel.

Christmas is a happy time for little children, every one is so kind, and they get so many nice presents. The church looks so beautiful, you would like to be always there. The snow lies upon the ground, and you have some fine sport with the snow-balls. There is no school, a long holiday, and nearly all play. But I am going to tell you about a little boy, who had no mother to make him nice things, no home, no bright fire, no loving little brothers and sisters; who scarcely knew what the meaning of Christmas, and had never been inside a church.

This little boy lived in London; his mother was dead, his father had gone far away, no one knew where; and he was left with an old woman, who gave him just enough to keep him alive, but very little else. Poor little boy! he had never seen a Christmas tree, nor hung a stocking, and he had been baptized; his name was Charlie. He was a pretty, fair-haired boy, with deep blue eyes and rosy lips. He was thin, for he had not half enough to eat. You could see the blue veins plainly through the small white hands. Charlie was not seven years old; he was a good boy though he one had taught him his catechism. His guardian-angel took care of him, and whispered in his ear what was right and what was wrong, and Charlie always did the right.

The old woman who had the care of Charlie was called Nanny, and she was one of the crossest old women you could meet with. She was always scolding or beating the little fellow, and he had but a miserable life. Charlie sometimes, went out into the yard to play with the children. One morning when he got up, he felt very cold, and his hand ached; so he went out into the yard to run about, and get warm. There, sitting up and down, he saw his companion.

"Oh, come along, Charlie, here's such fun," said one of them, "the day after to-morrow is Christmas day!"

"Christmas day!" said Charlie, "what is that?"

"What's that—why, it's Christmas-day, I tell you; every one has a plum-pudding; my mother says we shall, too."

"And," said Billy Hopkins, "my father says I may slide all day. Christmas is such fun!"

"I thought people went to church on Christmas-day," said a curly-headed little girl.

"Some do," said a big boy; "but that's not my way."

Little Charlie crept up to the curly-headed child and said, "Tommy, what is 'church?'"

"Church!—why, it's a beautiful place, with a large altar lit with lots of pictures and flowers and candles; and Oh, Charlie, there is one picture, so beautiful, of the Blessed Lady and the holy Jesus."

"Who are they?" said Charlie.

"You are a lunny boy; don't you know about our Lord and the Blessed Virgin? I do; and my mother often talks to me about them."

"Ah! but I haven't got a mother." "I doesn't old Nanny tell you about God?"

"No," said Charlie with a reverent face, "I'll ask her."

"Well, God lives up in heaven, you know, and He loves us all, and He made a beautiful angel to take care of us. You've got one and so have I."

"Have I? Where is he?"

"By your side. My mother says the angel never goes away; he must be there you for one moment; he is by your side now."

"I wish he would nurse me, my head aches so bad."

"Nurse you! why, you can not see him."

"I wonder," said Charlie, after musing some moments, "why God didn't give me a mother, if he loves me so much."

That question puzzled Tommy, and he answered, "I don't know. I don't know much about anything, but my mother will tell you. Good-bye, Charlie, I must go in."

"Good-bye," said Charlie, going slowly back to the house. All day he sat by the fire, thinking about what Tommy had told him, and wondering if the angel really stood there.

"What on earth are you turning round in that way for?" said old Nanny.

"I am looking for my angel."

"For what?" said Nanny, frightened.

"My angel; but I can't see him," and his little head dropped wearily.

"I'll cure you of that nonsense," she said, and she gave him a blow which made Charlie fall.

"Oh, don't beat me, my head aches so bad."

But Nanny was a wicked woman; she hated all things good and holy. She was the worst of all bad people, an apostate Catholic.

"Angels, indeed! Drop to bed, and don't let me hear that again."

Little Charlie went sobbing up to his wretched room.

"Oh angel," he said, throwing himself on the dirty straw, "take me to my mother, I want to go."

He cried himself to sleep. The next morning, when the cold light came in, and he felt burning hot, his legs and arms hurt him, too, and he was thirsty. He tried to rise, but could be got into the kitchen, old Nanny was in one of her dreadfully cross humors, and had been beating her poor little white boy.

"Nanny, please may I go to church?" he said, trying to look as grave quite savage.

"Church!" she almost shrieked. "What does the boy mean? I'll send you to church, never fear! and she stretched trembling for the arm. Dragging him to the door, she opened it, and, pushing him into the yard, exclaimed, "There! Now go to church! Mind you had better not come here again. I'm not going to have you preaching about angels and churches. A pretty life I should have! Off! I'll beat you if you have done with all that."

Poor little Charlie! Out he went, down the dirty yard, and into the long, endless streets. The snow was thick upon the pavements, and the cold, bitter, he could not keep himself warm. He put his hands under his little ragged pinafore, and then lies upon them as little children do. But he could not warm them. He wandered on through the long streets. Grand ladies passed him, dressed in velvet and furs; troops of happy children, with beaming faces; big, stalwart men, wrapped in greatcoats; carriages, and horses, loaded days, carts, porters; men with baskets full of game and poultry; till Charlie's aching head grew dizzy, and he sat down upon the door-step of a fashionable-looking house. He rested his head on his hands, and was just going to sleep, when a policeman came up and shook him roughly by the shoulder.

"Now, then, walk on, if you please. We can't have dirty boys like you sitting on respectable people's door-steps."

Poorly poor Charlie walked on.

"Oh, angel, are you with me now? I feel lonely. I'm the good Heathen child and hungry I am."

Something within the child's breast told him the angel was there. The day was far gone, and the dusk of evening was coming on.

"I wish I could find a church," thought Charlie. "They must be kind people that live there. I wonder what it's like."

The evening came, and the lamps were lighted. Still the poor ragged boy wandered on. . Sense few looked at him. A happy mother, with her child clasped tightly in her bosom, passed him with a sigh. A poor girl, with a sweet face, but a country dress, stood and watched him; but, alas! she was homeless and homeless. Many a head she turned after him, but on her went. At last he came to a shop round which stood a crowd of boys and girls. Hot pies, smoking and steaming, filled the whole street with their savory fragrance. What a potter were those hungry eyes and pale faces round the window! What a mixture of envy and delight, as more favored mortal entered and bought one! What stunning eyes and longing looks!

"Now, then, move on," pushed him away, and took his place at the window.

"No one cares for me; they all push me," and the hot tears come into his eyes. Still he went on through the cold. At last he stops because less frequent, and grand white houses come instead. It was colder still there, and the snow-fringed trees bent their tall heads, and the winds whispered through them, giving sympathetic moans to him. He came to a large house with a porch before it; and, numbed with the cold, and sick and faint, he entered and lay down.

"I am glad! I am sure my angel brought me here;" and he put his cold hand on his burning forehead.

Little Charlie was very ill, though he did not know it. His head felt so fiery and so light, and his little limbs were so weak. He could not stir. Then his senses began to wander. He thought he was with his mother, and he talked to her, and fancied that he saw his angel standing by him.

"Oh, take me to God," was his morning, painful cry. "I am so cold and hungry."

He went on talking, as though the angel were speaking to him. Then he thought the angel held up his side, and placed his cool hand kindly on his head. There came a low sound of sweet music in the room, and through it he seemed to hear the angels voice, which said

"My dear Charlie, I am going to take you to our good God in heaven, and you will be an angel there."

"Will I see my mother?" said Charlie, "my head is so bad, I want it to rest in heaven. Will old Nanny come too? Will she beat me there?"

"There is no beating in heaven, my dear little boy. You will find it all happiness and joy."

"Shall you be there, dear angel?"

"Yes, my child. I will take you, and show you to our Lord, and in our Blessed Lady, and all the saints."

"Will they love me? No one loves me here."

"Yes, they will love you very much. The music grew louder and sweeter, and a great light shone in the room. Charlie, in his delirium, cried, "angel, speak after me." And the angel said, "Our Father, and Charlie repeated it after him.

"Tell me what it means; Oh, do tell me! Shall I see my mother there? Shall I see my mother there?

"Yes, your mother is waiting for you."

Then the angel bent down his head and leaned over him, and the most marvelous dazzled over him. The music grew louder and the light clearer and clearer, and Charlie cried, "I know I can go with you, Charlie!" said the angel.

"Yes," he whispered.

The eyelids quivered, the little frame shook, and then all was quiet and still. The angel had taken the child home to heaven.

Suddenly the house door opened and the street footman came out.

"Hallo!" he cried; "what is here? Poor little boy! Dead, I declare! Dead! Dead! Starved to death, I declare!"

"I wonder," said the nurse, "what he could have been smiling about when he died."

"I don't know," said another standing near. "People do say that children often see angels when they die."

Three days after saids they carried little Charlie to the cemetery, and there buried him. He was left in his snow-covered grave; the leafless trees waved over him, the silent stars shone down upon him; the birds sang cheerily in the cold, clear frost; but the little boy was unconscious of this, he had joined the band of angels in heaven.

There was a paragraph next morning in the newspaper, telling how a fair-haired boy had been found dead. Pity and sorrow were for a moment; comfortable breakfast-table, signed, and said it was a great pity children should be. Bright-eyed children paused for a moment and looked sad. And then the sun shone, and the birds sang, and the scaring head and the weary limbs, or guessed how hard blows or heavier words had driven the helpless child from the wretched place called his home.

The night Charlie died, old Nanny had gone out to look for him; but he was near miles away. After a long search she returned, and the next day she heard how he had died. His pale face haunted her, his meek replies, his earnest "don't beat me, Nanny," were ever in her ears. She never forgot the sorrow of his eyes, and his pitiful little voice; and the result was that, after a long life of dark sin, she returned to the faith she had so long forsaken. The prayers of the angel-child were answered, and old Nanny endeavored to repair the scandal she had caused.

Dear reader, my story is ended now. Let it teach you one thing—that is, to be kind to the poor. You have a happy home, kind parents, and plenty to eat and drink. Think sometimes of the little starving ones who have gone of these things. Proud words, too, are so hurtful to the poor as cold stones are to them. Do not, when you pass along the streets, look haughty and proud, and think how much better your clothes are than that poor girl's or boy's, and do not draw away your dress as though their touch soiled it. Be gentle and kind. Remember a kind word and a bright smile will be valued as much as all your presents.

So Jesus, who loves the poor, will bless you.

My Christmas Visit to Bethlehem.

CHRISTMAS was drawing near. The Holy Father (Gregory XVI.) and Sacred Consistory had already proceeded to Bethlehem with the greater part of his community to celebrate a great a day on the very spot where the Son of God first to be born.

I was at their in their happiness, I started on the 23rd, at three o'clock in the afternoon, accompanied by a dragoman and a janissary. I was mounted on a superb Arabian mare, full of life, and yet I traveled full in a walk, in order not to lose, by rapid transit, the pleasure of observing what the places offered of interest to my mind and to my heart. (I now distinguished more sensations than I had experienced at my approach to Jerusalem! Then I was coming to a city where every thing recalled to mind the horrible torments and the ignominious death of the Saviour, and my affection was only place marked with the Blood of the Agnus Victim, in the minutes of His painful execution; a prætorium, a calvary, a cross of thorns, scourges, nails, a cross. And I felt as if I saw and heard a furious rabble shouting for blood, and cruel executioners busy in shedding it; and—what Blood! O God!

But Bethlehem! All my life long this name had produced in me the impression of a great joy, a sweet emotion of charm, never did I fear it mangel, never did I dissolve it myself, without a thrill. Judge, my dear friend—yes, a pious Christian—how much more I felt my heart beat. Tears must have been the emotions of my soul as I approached!

In some instances, my eyes shall behold that Bethlehem the very name of which is sober to me! Then, I said to myself, where was born the most beautiful of the sons of men, the Saviour of the world, the Admirable, the Word of life, my Brother, my God, my Lord, the Prince of the most holy of Virgins! They will kiss upon that manger where He was cradled, the virginal breasts, bathed that mouth, the only cradle that such a Mother could give to her Son! Then, I said, that place where the shepherds of the neighborhood, the humble, the innocent of the angels, came to adore Him, and sing the canticle of the Glory! Yes, I, by the miraculous star to render homage to the King of the Jews, and to offer Him, with Mary, and where Mary, the incomparable Mother, nursed the Divine Infant, warmed Him at her breast, pressed Him to her breast.

The road from Jerusalem to Bethlehem, although not so bad as that from Rama to Tamnata, is rough and dangerous, in certain intervals that some pieces of cultivated land appear, by dint of great pains, and in very spaces of tree to be seen.

At half a league distance my guide showed me the tomb of Rachel, which, as celebrated by the victory of David over the Philistines.

Half any on the road is a Greek monastery, which is called the tomb of the Prophet Elias. It is a ruin that is in no way remarkable. In front of the door of the place there lies a very large olive-tree, which, as it is said, answered the prophet for a hiding place, and which, in the course of years, has become a colossal. Thus, I said, the Prophet Elias, the Thunderer, the Zealous, the Ardent, the Ascetic, the Thaumaturgus, the Prophet of Carmel, the Prophet of Mount Horeb, where the principal performer of the "Clean Oblation," the Messiah, daily ascends to heaven, and where the life-giving Sacrifice of Holy Church are dispensed to the faithful, the Prophet, I said, the great progress of our holy religion, this marvellous widening of the tabernacle of Jacob, it has been judged wise and expedient, and, in fact, necessary, to sanction anew the legislation of our predecessors, but with my power of redial change, much less of abolition, but to preserve and perfect its spirit by adapting it to our altered circumstances. And as very day grows bright in new secrets, and as the distance or distance of place of the world of Christ, and the Church, and the Holy Father, judged it by the national Church, and the latter by resulting and authorizing the Holy Father, and the Holy Father, in the Holy, who shall rule the people of Israel and Christ, and the Church.

According as we advanced, the perspective of the country changed, and the Bethlehem as we came nearer to it, appeared in the form of a cone, covered with a green carpet, and surrounded by a little wood, which, in the distance, appeared, the fields, irregularly cut and sometimes enclosed by walls, separated by no better cultivated, which lay on the right and left of the road, were much more numerous. Distant hand and distant, the eyes of the pilgrim, beyond the Dead Sea, those of Arabia Petræa, the Mount of Moab, attracted my attention. I stopped, I advanced, I reflected, I felt, I wept, I prayed, I recollected. I suspect, I advanced, I retraced my steps, I felt, I wept, I prayed, I recollected. In presence of this land of benediction, these plains, these hills, I felt, I felt, I felt

POEM.

Written for the 3rd Centennial of the Sodalities of the Blessed Virgin, December, 1881.

BY MARGARET W. CRUMMEY, IMoSo.

Hail! high monarch of a Hierarchy
Hail! Queen of Heaven, the Ocean Star,
When, 'neath the banner of Immaculate Mary
Our Sodalities first were ranged.

Through the Inn of Nazareth, a chosen band
Made strong by heaven's own hand
Go! three hale centuries, in our stead
To this day, I'ist on shield wave have spread,
Since thus first hoisted in the Holy Inn
Violet shield bore, and Dove, Pure as snow on Sodalities, Sodalities, Sodalities, Sodalities
With Sweet clear ring, Sodalities echoed.

Ah! will sixty-one years flow full on soon
For our the Tenth their glorious career extend,
And, then, when time, relentless, has
When Mary's knights the caused Tenth die
Go!
For Time rode red, my Sisters (ends apart
The deathless shield that binds them fast to Start.

O Saint! Dublin! Tree of Love Divine!
Tree whose sweet scent the pilgrim learns sin
Sin!
No sweet rites, on mystic word and sign
For pilgrims lay down in darkness deep and Dead—
Sin—sickness of gulfs, with ecliph, could also
That hoisted shadows of the holy name

The greatest glory of their kind and kin
The crown honor of the Holy Ghost,
The prayer to Emelia, the hymn of Angelic Song,
Finally so Mary's Sodalities Mass-Bread,
To share His Feast of a sublime Mass-Bread,
Sin where His golden, with doctrine let to tread

Go! thou the alms, the oblique eyes and true,
Of all who in the Sodalities have
Thou are their schemes, and time-deals thee do,
Ye who in Sodalities, and Sodalities
And thou their aims, their companions bless,
Taught by a God—the Sodalities Virgin!

Ah! richest fruits their steadfast real reward—
And martyrs grand, by pure example shown—
To sanctify River, and service of the Lord
Throne have been lost, and which other gravely sun—
And Canon, and Priests, our Pater's Holy See
They now have elected, U. Rest in Sodality!

From elder lands thy sweet and sacred chain
Remembrance far beyond the Land Divine
To where Columbia rolls her Ocean Main
The smiling reminiscence of the Sodalities
Till here, within our Dublin "Grand Land!
Thou hearts are scattered in thy blissful land.

For this, poor and the tribute fond demands,
O, Immacul Founders of this holy bands!
Lo, Pa's sons! be whose all-potent hands
What needs are wrought for Faith and Lets Divine.
What prayers sentiment beneath Heaven above
What jewels gathered for the Master's crown

Ah! sate, ye the favored world than one—
The sweet and sacred union, lo, two formed
By Jacob hearts, three hundred years ago,
And, for their Lord dear Mother Silly sound
And whose our Glass Lorie's gore sacrifice
That priceless treasure to its Want they brought,

Loved Fathers! may your bright example be
Ever our guide—our Sodalities—
May we, too, labor—labor—and, from this day
Thus Vs. crowns of Sodalities
And may your sacrifice, and your Sodalities
To present Glory of this King Divine:

So shall our gratitude be best displayed
And we, with the Virgin, Mary's Heart shall secure,
Yet who shall pass, be stainless robes arrayed—
True soldiers of our sainted Queen,
And of our Gods the Sodalities
Through blessed aces of Eternity

A Scoul's Ransom.

A Beautiful Catholic Christmas Story.

I was a girl of nineteen, just orphaned, when I went to live at my brother's house. He and his wife gave me a warm welcome, and I fell in love at once with their two little boys and baby Lizzie. Harry, the elder boy, was even in those days a perfect little gentleman, so serious and bright and polite, always ready to drag a chair—he was only five years old—or run for your spool or thimble, and to pick up scraps from the floor. He played with his baby sister, and if she cried, as indeed she often did, he petted and kissed her back to good humor.

Even then, these two began to be devoted to each other more than to Charley, the younger brother, four years old. He was quiet child, so far as talk was concerned, but he was the fruitful source of much annoyance in the house. He was of an inventive turn of mind, and destroyed every object he touched. Harry's drums, baby's crying dolls, mamma's bonnet, father's pipe, my five as a "wooden, to which I was much attached—all fell victims to his desire of seeing "what was inside." He would not cry when scolded, only look at you with a surprised expression in his big blue eyes, and then go and climb up a co chair. In a short time afterwards the buttons of that chair were off, or, if it were blue, the holes were larger than the maker intended. His mother would sigh sometimes, as if his cases were hopeless; and then Harry, careful, polite little Harry, would kiss her, and she would give him a quick hug and it was easy to see he was her dearest child. Their father, fastly overshaped the children. He always found excuses for Charley's faults, saying: "Charley will be a skillful mechanic some day." Harry will be a great man yet." And, as for Lizzie, cross, vexing Lizzie, it was simply astonishing the talent that year-old baby showed!" Poor Father!

My brother worked hard all the week but on Sunday, when we wanted him to lie down for a rest, he would refuse; he wanted to take the boys to see the sights. "Wanted to laugh at him at the little fellows, so proud and happy in their Sunday suits. Every slight they said their prayers at his knee. Charley the repeated of of he were not sure of his words. Baby Lizzie could bless herself, but her prayers as yet were "music without words." But Harry—I never saw any one in prayer so reminiscent as he. He did not seem worldly, and indeed, I often feared we should never see him grow up; for they say that such children are not for this world.

So a few years passed, and my nephews were school-boys, and in a short time they were permitted to join the altar-boys. The two little brothers were the youngest, and what an awful pleasure—that was just the feeling—it was for us to see them in the sanctuary. Sometimes, in church, I used to watch my brother's face—and it seemed irradiated with reverence and emotion. Their mother used—then, also with with her some hands. I remember she would ask her husband if he was not proud of them.

As the years passed, Harry continued the same as in boyhood. He sang well in the choir, but he always sang in the middle and pitched into a low tone unnecessarily. He was a good boy, with his mother's gentleness. When he was out of school he was always hard working interested, and he, too, slipping in his little pail called "Dad" by a dollar, making excuses for his mamma, cages for his sister, more, and so on. He said down the stairs, and called each the baby a larger little Lizzie, adhesive was he was also at Ingersoll's to school her all will "Dad." Charley grew up, and he was quite fitted life and manhood. Lizzie was well Harry's Charley was a mechanic, and a good one, and a good boy, and a good son, as the modern term has it. He had a fiery temper, that took offense at every thing, and she was a warm friend to, and Harry loved him, when he would assume to establish good temper all around. No one said it, but Harry was still the favorite. He was grown boy, as well as with Lizzie. As he grew in strength and height, for he was beautiful for grace in delicacy of manner. We often wondered how he was so quiet and at ease in every one. He was not as bright as Charley in school, at least, they were always first in the same class.

Finally, one glorious Feast of Corpus Christi, Harry, five years, and Charley four years old, knelt together on the altar steps, in their scarlet cassocks, and received their First Communion. It was a lovely day, and after breakfast we all went to the parish church to hear the Mass. We came back in time for Vespers, and our young sharpers received their Blessed Mother's Scapular, and led the procession of the Blessed Sacrament, which was the proper ending of the day. Charley was the more giddy, to go with her to the hotel and dinner, and Harry, who she wanted the dearest opinion on Charley's conduct, was not in company, but who was thin and weak. The doctor was deeply interested in the case, and he had ordered to gets his opinion. Finally, he said, "Your brother Charley will not last long after Harry, perhaps not so long, he, too, has consumption." She came home with her brother, and he was in the agonies of what she had learned, as were we all.

That evening Harry wanted to go out, but it was cloudy, and his mother objected. He was not down to a game of cards with his sister. Charley was engrossed in a book, and the father and Joseph were at Church. The mother and I left the room to see to some household affairs. Up and down, Charley lay on the lounge and fell asleep, while Harry and Lizzie continued the game. Harry was moody, and Lizzie was praying deep down in her heart. She did want a chance to speak to Harry, and she so seldom was alone. After a while Harry owned Charley asleep and he laid down his cards, and said:

"Don't let on play you are asleep, I want to speak to you."

Lizzie was all attention.

"I don't want you to speak of what I am going to say. I know you are good at keeping a secret."

A silence.

"Lizzie, I feel that I do better say honest. I alone my case.

"Why, Harry dear, that you have a secret over."

"Oh, I know that, but what has this end to come?"

"Come for! Come from, you mean. Fix yourself, I suppose."

"Do you know, sis—lowering his voice and looking towards the door—I am sick day. You will not get well; and I want to know whether it is true. I want to know, you may tell me the truth."

"Harry, dear, I have a hard task to tell, but I think you are really ill; and, my dear, remember, its as hard to bear as to know, and you'll get better and the doctor doesn't know."

Harry sat looking at her in silence, his face very white. If she could only tell him how sin himself for his return to time.

"Harry, you are very sick, and you'll get better soon."

"Harry, my dear brother—you, and I, Harry, you were very prepared, death is not footing."

Harry sat up.

"Lizzie, I want to be alone, I'm going my room. Don't speak of this, and be quiet."

Lizzie could not kneel down—some one might see her there, but him under soul called for help, for grace, for this new trial, and she prayed in silence.

"Lizzie, Harry, is in his room, sobbing and crying. What is the matter? Why, you are crying too."

"Mamma dear, let him alone. He must be feeling, of low-spirited, a cry will do him good.

"But you've been crying."

"No, dear mamma. I was only praying, I would something badly."

"Lizzie, and her mother, "you don't think Harry will get better. Tell me the truth."

"No, mamma, I don't think he'll get better. And we must offer up all our pain in silence for him."

Lizzie became calm now, but the mother was crying. Charley woke up, and looked from one to the other in surprise.

"Mother, dear, don't cry. God does everything well, and Harry will be all right."

His mother kissed her boy, and I believe from that moment she realized the trial he was to undergo. Joseph came home at tea-time, and the mournfulness of the tender, affecting mother devotion to her darling. The news of Harry's death was also a severe blow, and it turned to quiet, tender, affectionate. It was a sad time, heart; for Sister Sol alfrasca was Mary Carmine, Will Pedro Sodalities.

Dr. William Hyde, a man well the cloth of nature and felt his many thousands to thoughts and hospitals, but on account of the family. She told her husband and her firm conviction, that both her boys were about to be taken. "We must only pray that they be prepared." Poor father! He sat silent and crushed; but I saw through my tears that he, too, had been praying and searching for the salvation of his dear boys.

We agreed to say nothing to the family of our conviction, and as we bore our burden in silence, only the mother never left the room when they were in the house. Lizzie did not dare to speak again to Harry. He seemed wearied and fretful, and her looks told him more than words all her longing, all her love. He must have suffered an intense inner struggle with himself, but grace won; and in the Octave of the Assumption of her whose case he had been so often given, Harry went alone to his master and made his Confession, and on the morning of August 20th, Feast of St. Hermes, who has left us the Memorare—the prayer that had been offered by Lizzie and her mother for our poor boy—on this morning we all knelt joyously together in our parish church—the church of the children's Mass, and First Communion—and received from the hand of God's priest the Bread of Life.

AN AMERICAN CHRISTMAS STORY IN ALBUM.

I.

In an old New England kitchen, where a warm, wood fire formed bright, Sat honest Farmer Hutchison and his wife one winter night. The old man read the Bible, and his wife knitted and sighed, And the clock ticked the shilling, now the lamp dim grew the wick, But she let it burn, for fear it might wake the sleeping child. For he had left Mary Hutchison and she her only offspring. And yet it was Christmas Eve, and the Christ-child was born, and the Virgin Mother, the Virgin Mother, the Virgin Mother, Mary, Mary, Mary

THE MONITOR.

OFFICIAL PAPER TWICE OF PUBLICATION.

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 24, 1884.

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

May God bless and direct through the intercession of St. Francis de Sales, under whose protection they are placed, the writers of Catholic journals of the Pacific Coast, that they may, by the truth of their teachings, and adhere to its doctrine and practice their duties and fidelity.—Pius IX.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the chief agent in popularizing ideas, and popularized ideas stimulate opinion, and opinion is not only the mistress of the world, but it is a work indispensable to the welfare of society; and a part of spiritual duty. What is and what ought to be the object or tendency of a journal, it is easy to find out from its ideas.—Rev. Thomas Mc Mahon, Carmelite

Pastoral Letter of the Third Plenary Council.

We scarcely hope that the salutary instructions which are embodied in the Pastoral Letter, which we publish in the present issue, will be carefully read and be reverentially remembered by every reader of the MONITOR. Let no Catholic cast it aside under the plea of having "no time" to listen to the counsels, admonitions and commands of the Prelates who have charge of our souls. They have spoken and it is the weighty and solemn duty of the Laity to listen meekly and obediently to their united voice and to put into practical operation the suggestions, admonitions and precepts laid down by the ministers of Christ and the dispensers of the mysteries of God, placed over us by the grace of the Holy Ghost.

Every Catholic knows the penalty to be paid by those who "will not hear the Church," and every Catholic who perversely refuses to listen to the words of wisdom dispensed for his spiritual good by the Heavenly, compels himself to become "even as the heathen and the publican." Hence all Catholics who reverence the spiritual authority lodged in the Priesthood will not only treasure the admonitions of the Pastoral Letter, but they will also embody their lives to the instructions laid down therein.

We as intend to refer to the principal points of the Pastoral in subsequent issues, we merely call the particular attention of our readers to the important document at present. It will be read in many of the churches next Sunday, and in addition to hearing it read and explained in church, our subscribers can do a good work by having it read in the family circle so that the young as well as the old, may have a knowledge of the Christian duties which are so plainly set forth in one of the most perspicuous pastorals yet placed before the Faithful of God's Church.

A Pacific Coast Representative in Cleveland's Cabinet.

—Which will be the Pacific Coast representative in President Cleveland's Cabinet. In which figure the names of many men prominent in the political world. But as yet we have not seen the name of a soldier, a statesman and a patriot whom it should be the pride of President Cleveland to honor by allotting him a Department—such as Secretary of War or the Navy—and that man is General WILLIAM S. ROSECRANS.

It is needless for us to refer to the brilliant military record which this distinguished citizen won for himself by his valorous conduct during the Civil war, as his career therein is matter of history and familiar to all, but the record thus made, we claim, entitles him to recognition, now that political power has passed into the hands of the party for whom his political influence has ever been exercised.

Called by the people of this city to represent them in Congress, General Rosecrans has not only given universal satisfaction, but he has added new honors to his reputation by the honesty and the capacity he has manifested during his Congressional career. He has proved himself more of a patriot than a politician, and he has demonstrated the fact that at least one representative of the people can remain pure and above reproach—even in the midst of political corruption.

A patriot of such sterling honor, a soldier with a war record second to none on the roster of the Federal forces, and a statesman of unsullied reputation and rare experience, he would not only strengthen President Cleveland's Cabinet, but his selection would prove to the American people that the heroism manifested during the time that tried men's souls, was not forgotten when opportunity offered to exalt patriots into positions of deserved prominence. Besides, the nomination of General Rosecrans would be pleasing not only to his immediate partisans on the Pacific Coast, but the whole people would feel rejoiced at such recognition of the war-scarred veteran and the faithful public servant of a portion of the people of California.

General Rosecrans is emphatically a true type of the American soldier, statesman and citizen. He possesses the genius to fill any position in the Cabinet to which he may be called, and we earnestly hope that the press of his party on this Coast,—and all papers favorable to placing a representative man of this portion of the Republic in President Cleveland's Cabinet—will second the MONITOR's movement to bring about the selection of General Rosecrans as Secretary of the Navy, or some similar important position.

—Alluding to one of the points in the printed reports of the Pastoral Letter promulgated by the Prelates of the Baltimore Council, calling on all Catholics to refrain from selling liquor on the Lord's Day, the Christian Advocate sagely remarks: "If all the men and women who receive the Mass as good Catholics would heed this discussion, what a prodigious advance would be given to the cause of temperance and good order and religious decency on the Lord's Day!" "Receive the Mass, is good! What a pity it is that preachers of the Protestant persuasion will make upon attempting to teach before they have learned.

The American Catholic University.

We look upon the project of founding an American Catholic University as one of the most important undertakings yet contemplated by the Prelates of the Church in this country. It is a well-known fact that the Universities already established and under control or supported by the Protestants of deed philanthropists, are rapidly assuming the tone of infidelity which pervades much of the public and private education of the day outside Catholic schools and colleges. For the maintenance of Christian principles, therefore, and in order to educate men up to the higher standard so as to be able to meet Infidelity and to combat it with the irresistant logic of truth, it has become necessary for the Church to undertake a work that will cost millions of dollars to consummate, but which will be an astronomical electric light that will bring out Catholic truth in its strongest effulgence.

When the false science and the false theology of the land is preached by men who are graduates of Harvard or Yale, their ideas are received with a degree of reverence by the unthinking masses which would not otherwise be accorded them. And as the generations of the present will develop into the infidelity of the future, the great Christian Church of the land must have its deeply learned legions ready to replies by the weight of argument and the power of truth, the bald and brazen assertions which will come from men who have imbibed their initial ideas from pagan ideas of works antagonistic in tone not only to the Catholic Church in particular but to Christianity in general.

The foundation of a Catholic University will also exercise a most beneficial influence in invigorating Catholic education all over the land. Hitherto there has been much done in this direction, but the generous and final triumph of Catholic education can never be achieved until Catholic children can be advanced through regular grades of promotion from the parochial school to the College, and from those to the Catholic University, whenever the taste, talent, and mental qualifications of the individual may warrant the expenditure of years of study.

As Bishop Spalding well said in his address on this subject before the members of the recent Council, when alluding to the fears entertained by some that such an institution would not find sufficient patronage in this republic of money-makers, "Our lands each students are found, and if with us there is a tendency to rush with precipitancy and insufficient preparation to whatever work we may have chosen, this is but a proof of the need of special efforts to reassure an order which springs from weakness and not from strength. Haste is a mark of immaturity. He who is certain of himself and master of his tools knows that he is able, and neither hurries nor worries, but works and waits. The rank weed shoots up in a day and as quickly dies, but the slow growing olive tree lives through the long century and drops from its gentle branches ripe fruit through the forever, and we know The Church endures midst of our rapidly moving and ever-changing society she should be the first to learn to temper energy with the patient strength which gives the courage to toil and hope through a long life, if so we make ourselves worthy to speak some truth or do some needful deed. And to whom shall this lesson first be taught if not to the clerics whose natural endowments single them out as future leaders of Catholic thought and enterprise, and where can this lesson to be well be learned as in a school whose standard of intellectual excellence shall be the highest!

While we look, therefore, to the founding of a true university, we will begin, as the university of Paris began in the twelfth century, and as the present university of Louvain began fifty years ago, with a rational school of philosophy and theology, which will form the central focality of a complete educational organism. Around this the other faculties will take their place, in due course of time, and so the beginning which we make will grow, until like the seed planted in the earth, it shall wear the blooming crown of its own development.

And though the event be less than our hope, though even failure be the outcome, is it not better to fail than not to attempt a worthy work which might be done? Only they who do nothing derive comfort from the mistakes of others, and the saying that a blunder is worse than a crime is doubtless true for those who have no other measure of worth and success than the conventional standards of a superficial public opinion. We at least know

"There lives a Judge
To whose all pondering mind, a noble aim
Faithfully kept is a noble deed
In whose pure sight all virtue dwells entwined."

Possible American Saints.

The Baltimore Mirror says that it has authentic information that steps were taken to introduce before the Congregation of Rites in Rome the names of Rose Genopi, Father Isaac Jogues, S. J., and Catharine Tagakwita, for the purpose of having the customary examinations made with a view to their subsequent canonization. Father Jogues and Rose Genopi were slain by the Mohawk Indians in what is now the State of New York in 1642 and 1646 respectively; the latter was an Indian girl born in the mission which sprang from their blood, and was there baptized and began that course of heroic sanctification which has long made her thought a fit candidate of canonization. As nothing further could be done in the matter until after the formal introduction of the cause at Rome, and as a decree for this is given by the Holy Father, only after urgent petitions have made it evident that a considerable portion of the Church desires the cause to be taken up and tried on its merits, the whole question was laid before the recent Plenary Council. It was favorably received by the assembled prelates, many of whom expressed an interest of long standing in the lives of these great servants of God.

Startling Statistics Regarding Mixed Marriages.

One of the most important duties connected with the Catholic press is to remind Catholic parents of the presence of the Evil Spirit and to warn them against violating the decrees laid down for their guidance.

With this object in view we have taken the trouble of publishing setting forth the evils which arise from marriages where only one of the contracting parties is a Catholic. Most all of us have published concerning this evil, we have not told half the truth it seems, if we are to measure the ruin it reaches by startling statistics. We follow as furnished in the Catholic Review:

The letter conveying this sad catalogue of Catholic defection is from a priest who says: "The congregation of which I am pastor numbers one thousand souls. In only twenty years old. I counted to-day twenty six mixed marriages in it, and here with give you an idea of the religious condition of such family in the order in which they came to mind:

No. 1. Wife good Catholic; children at parochial school; husband believes in no church.

No. 2. Husband once Catholic, but him and children all lost.

No. 3. Husband practical Catholic; children made First Communion, but soon drop off from the practice of their religion.

No. 4. Husband apostatized after marriage; children baptized Catholics, but now Lutherans.

No. 5. Husband very indifferent Catholic; children young.

No. 6. Husband apostatized; children all Protestants.

No. 7. Husband apostatized; children all Protestants.

No. 8. Husband Catholic, but never goes to church; has one child, but not baptized.

No. 9. Husband excommunicated; child not baptized.

No. 10. Wife Catholic; husband a sinner; children baptized by stealth.

No. 11. Wife was never permitted to go to church, and fell away; children not baptized.

No. 12. Catholic wife forbidden to go to church; children baptized by stealth.

No. 13. Catholic wife forbidden to go to church; children baptized by stealth.

No. 14. Protestant wife sends children to Catholic church and school, but husband very jealous.

No. 15. Wife Catholic; husband was converted; both apostatized; wife has repented, but relenting. No children.

No. 16. Wife Catholic; infant child baptized; husband bigot.

No. 17. Wife Catholic; child at parochial school; husband bigot.

No. 18. Wife good Catholic; child at public school.

No. 19. Catholic husband, married before a preacher; never goes to church.

No. 20. Catholic husband, very curious; child nearly a year old before baptism (through no fault of Protestant wife).

No. 21. Protestant wife, much better than Catholic husband.

No. 22. Wife Catholic; deserted by her husband.

No. 23. Husband good Catholic, but large family of children all lost to the faith.

No. 24. Husband careless Catholic, and family of children all lost to the faith.

No. 25. Catholic husband, and children all gone.

No. 26. Wife good Catholic; children baptized, but not allowed to go to church. In that long list there has not been a single conversion of the Protestant party, though the Catholics promised to labor for that end. How the promises of the non-Catholics have all vanished, we need not give the details. The result is that the great danger of perversion was to the Catholic parties is also apparent.

A Mistake Peculiar to Protestant Preachers.

The leaven of Protestantism—at least so far as its preachers are concerned—is fermenting. The great mass of the preachers who grant, pray or publish for the sects they represent, are true Pharisees at heart, and invariably attribute to others the bigotry and uncharitableness they themselves possess. Puffed up as they are with worldly pride, they cannot conceive how it is possible for a Christian to have any idea of religion, and thus, in the blindness of their bigotry, they inevitably fall into the very pit they had prepared for others.

We had a very fair sample of this spirit of Pharisaism manifested in the columns of the Pacific Methodist last week, in an article entitled "A Religious Romanist," which was introduced—as the editor said—in order to show the Methodist brethren that "even a Romanist may have spiritual religion." (?)

What erudite ideas concerning the Catholic Church must jostle each other in the cranium of the astute concocter of this paragraph! "Even a Romanist may have spiritual religion." What condescension, on the part of a Pharisee who prefers the preaching of Wesley to the precepts of God! How we pity the poor people who have no other spiritual nutriment than husks as giants from the opaque mind of such blind leaders of the blind, as illustrated by the extraordinary extract we quote from the evangel of Methodism.

We wonder if the writer of this remarkable sentence ever reflected that "spiritual religion" came direct from God to the Catholic Church, and that it will remain therein all days "even to the consummation of the world." Who authorized John Wesley to make a religion? Assuredly, Almighty God would not have left the world in ignorance of Christian truth for seventeen hundred and twenty-nine years. God is a God of God, and such an idea is repugnant to Christianity. It is clear, therefore, that Methodism is a mere man-made code of cold and barren theory based upon false interpretations of texts of scripture. And yet these people pretend to judge Catholics and to console that "even a Romanist may have spiritual religion," all of which goes to prove that Sydney Smith was right when he dubbed the Methodist preachers of his day as "consecrated cobblers," and one of the same class must be writing just now for the Pacific Methodist.

—There is a movement on foot in Italy more looking to a grand celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the establishment of a Catholic Hierarchy in Australia. Right Rev. John Carroll was, on August 15th, 1790, consecrated first Bishop of Baltimore. The house in which he was born and lived is still standing in Upper Marlboro, Prince George county. Some are in favor of erecting a memorial church worthy of the first Catholic See in the United States.

The Growing Evil of Divorce.

A dispatch in the daily papers says that the Pope has created a sensation in clerical circles by writing a pontifical letter to Cardinal Parocchi, strongly denouncing divorce as a flagrant violation of the decrees of the Church. The Holy Father also makes a most trenchant appeal against the Divorce bill now being discussed in the Italian Chambers.

When we come to consider the immoral nature of the proposed Italian Divorce law, we need not wonder that the Vicar of Christ—the defender of virtue and the friend of women—should hurl the heaviest anathemas of the Church upon the heads of the infidel Italian hirelings who have gone down deeper in degradation than only sacrament of marriage than even the worst type of European socialists or American free-love fanatics.

The Italian Divorce Code is simply a proposal to extirpate marriage altogether and to substitute a greedy lewd sensual system by which every man or woman is privileged to take any female or woman who agrees to the carnal compact, and to leave the partner of his or her interests. This one-legged system of union is only provided with the boon a man and wife have separated for a period of three years—provided they have no children, or for five years, provided they have children—the aggrieved party can obtain a divorce. This is simply an abolition of permanent marriage, and gives to either husband or wife only a temporal interest in the marriage relation.

Of course the bill is specially designed to afford relief to a married husband, as the case may be, who has grown weary of his partner, or who has deserted. In practice, however, the bill would permit the voluntary separation and subsequent divorce of any married couple, or a man and wife should grow tired of one another within a month after marriage they would only have to agree to live apart from one another for a specified time, and, in case the marriage should prove unfruitful, they would have only three years to wait in order to dissolve the marriage bond and to seek more congenial partners. The party bringing the suit for divorce would merely allege that he or she has been deserted, and the defendant certainly would not deny this claim. There will, therefore, be no certainty in the Divorce bill beyond a law that any Italian marriage will last over seven years at the furthest. Certainly the Italian Ministry has gone to the very base of viciousness in framing such a law for a people who have ever been recognized as children of that Church which has fainted for ages against such iniquitous legislation which legalizes the worst passions of mankind.

But when we turn our mental vision to our own land we must feel that the frightful feature of the Italian Divorce bill is already in present existence. Nearly every State in the Union presents are seven hundred Divorce suits at present pending in the courts in Philadelphia, and an average of one divorce to every [illegible] families. When we add to the [illegible] divorce suits pending in the courts against husbands, we shall see how [illegible] we are going on swinging around you. Farm and Home.

A JOLLY OLD FISH.

Oh, a jolly old fish is the oyster fish,
As he sits by his pearly shell,
A delicious bow-wow is a delicious dish,
If you can only be cooked well
Served on toast,
Or raw on a dainty plates;
Calloup or stew,
Either will do,
Or fried in cracklin or batter.
And a knowing old fish is the oyster bird,
As he slowly opens to show
For he does not a bint, he speaks not a word,
Of all his secrets he knows—
Blissful he sits,
Shady bower,
Whispering low and sweet;
Hazy delicious,
Hazy old nights,
When jolly old oysters meet.

Learning Housework.

If mothers educated their daughters to think more honorably of housework, we would not have so many inefficient housekeepers, but if the mother is sufficient in the control of her home, she had rather do the work than have the trouble of teaching her daughters, forgetting that this is an injustice to them as well as to herself, and she can no more neglect their education from books, and should be taught to understand that to be an adept in the art of sewing, plain or otherwise is as great an accomplishment as music and painting, not that I advocate the latter accomplishments, but I consider the former as equal to them, and it seems strange that mothers are blind to this essential part of their daughters education.

When we contemplate the many unhappy homes made by the incapacity of their mistress our best instincts convince us that the training of our girls is absolutely wrong. I once heard a farmer's daughter say to her mother the week before she was married, "I have never made a loaf of bread of cake." And she was twenty-three at the time, and her intended was a farmer, and the mother was well aware that the daughter would have to be her own housekeeper.

But even in the case of dividing the care of the household with servants the discipline is better when the lady has a practical knowledge of how things should be done, and the mind of a lady engaged in the performance of certain duties; if she has a knowledge of these facts she will be a more kind and patient mistress.

While I believe that our girls should be proficient in every department of learning, I think also that they should be taught the importance of serving an apprenticeship in the kitchen at the same time.

Keep Up Your Sweetheart Days.

How many husbands and wives who once were life full of love and devotion cease their efforts to please each other from the day the honeymoon goes down! The wife becomes deeply absorbed in her household duties. She forgets that her husband is still a man who likes to see a well dressed lady. She becomes careless of her personal attire and her personal appearance when no one is to see her but her husband, when the truth is she should take more pains to please his eye more than anybody else's. It is a great mistake that he is not, just like other people, favorably impressed with a little careful and appropriate dressing. She need not drive herself in slatterns and expensive robes to meet him when he returns home from his daily occupation, but she can wash her face, comb her hair, put on a clean, pretty wrapper, and stick a flower in her bosom. All this helps. It gives of his too common reality. Your husband owes much to his wife in his personal habit and personal attire. He should be the same "nice" man after marriage that he was before marriage. It must not turn out to be something entirely different from what his wife fell in love with, otherwise she may become disenchanted and have a good excuse for seeking him of having won her by false pretenses. Finally, we must not take too much for granted, but try to be something new, attractive and lovable.

Family Life.

If there be anything which makes life worth the living it is to be one of an affectionate family.

Strange to say, however, most people could count upon their fingers if one hand the really nice families they know; the families, that is in which there is not only a tender care for each other, but an unselfish department and a kindly interest alway manifested by every other fellow member.

A daughter will always fetch the mother anything she may want, and brush the brother's top-coats and hats for them are the main members of the home start off for work in the morning.

Brothers too, will often take their sisters for a walk or put little attentions which cost nothing and mean a great deal.

This is the household unit which a young man who wants a good wife will do well and wisely to marry. There may not be much show about the girls, but he will find that they are companionable, and that their dispositions stand the test of wear.

It is easy enough to fall in love with a girl who she is arrayed for a party, and feels the flesh and pleasure of fun.

But when disappointed and darkness, however, and little family worries come in, a man wants something more than a pretty drawing room ornament for a wife; he needs a ready to assist, honest, womanly soul and helpmate.

Health Hints.

The best way to allay sunburn is to bathe the face in cold cream at night.

A little spirits of harshorn applied to a spider or mosquito bite will soon relieve the pain and itching.

Dry ashes applied to a cut will stop the bleeding, and will, if left on a few hours, hasten the healing process.

For cutaneous eruptions of children and old people, Doctor Dobbing recommends an ointment of five grains of iodine of lead to the drachm of vaseline.

Citrity is often constitutional, but it may be produced by gastralgia, abdominoscopy, the avoidance of much harmaceous and plutinous food, early rising, and the refraining from all indolent habits.

Persons who find that it says it is a good plan to burn sulphur in cellars where milk is kept, especially if they are damp. The sulphur-ous acid evolved destroys the unpleasant odor, which, if not checked, will injure the flavor of cream and butter.

Where there is any indication of bad nerves being formed, a common buffalo robe should be spread under the patient, with the hair side up, the under sheet being spread over it next to the patient. This is said to be far superior to cushions, water-pillows and pads.

Doctor Brandini, of Florence, says that stirne and will assuage the violent pain which is the usual concomitant of cancer. He applies to the part plaqueis of lint soaked in a solution of four grains of the acid in 300 grams of common water, with the result of affording instantaneous relief.

Formerly the square piano was generally used, notwithstanding it was a very unfashionable and inconvenient form as compared with the more elegant upright piano. Mr. Steinway, however, has succeeded in producing a beautiful instrument, fashionable in its elegant form, and which has given it the preference. One reason why made by the Steinway & Sons Company is entitled to give the upright still more acceptability is the fact that they have made it a specialty for the past ten years, during which time they have perfected it in all its particulars, and now it is the most perfect, durable, and reliable form of the upright, combining with it the advantages of sweet tone, elegant form, and a durability which will last a lifetime. The result is more perfect, virtuous of the siding, producing more pure, refined and full tones, and much greater durability, including from this form liability to get out of tune.—Boston Journal.

CALIFORNIA.

The Origin of the Name of the Great State of the Pacific Coast.

What California means no one has been able to definitely settle, but it is generally accepted that the name was first used in a Spanish romance entitled "Las Largas de Esplandian," published in 1510, and was there applied to an island "on the right hand of the Indies, near the Terrestrial Paradise." Calloupe has been derived by some local philologists into meaning cay and gown, but Bancroft asserts that San Hermosa "made up the name of the initial two front syllables of California and the two last of Saraloja, joining them together and adding a central "ca" for the sake of euphony." California is said by some to mean the "true skill" and by John S. Hittell, who has devoted much attention to the topographical names of California to mean empty skills. Some cavaliers in the Spanish army, Mr. Hittell says, gave the name in reason on his side, supposition strengthened by the legend existing that the Spaniards discovered an old Indian battle-field in that country. It is quite probable, however, that the place was named from a more decent reason and that some poet has named the place in sacred memory of Calvary. The origin of the name Lodi is quite obscure, although it is very near to the Spanish for sand. Sour was probably named by some practical admirer of Milton. Nered, though it would purile one to find out where in the world he drew his inspiration. Rosa is the Spanish for moth, but why the little insectivorous thing should be called is not clear, notwithstanding the ingenious explanation of some German that it has been called Rosa because the moth is the best place for its nest. Unfortunately for this theory, Rosa was called Rosa long before the brewery was established there. The author says that the topographical peculiarity is responsible for the name, Rosa also meaning a bed of roses. Merce and Holinas, the one meaning pebble, and the other hollows, are both positive, unless one is content to accept them as being named after people. Point Anno Nuevo was, very probably, named so because it was discovered on the first day of a new year, and Sonoma, if accepted, was so called because the first residents of the place were Indians of Sonoma, Mexico. The wild and reckless burg of Mipinos was probably named because there grew in its neighborhood "mil pitas," a thousand aloes; but Visalia bachers all attempts at explanation. Paraiso means paradise and was often bestowed by the Spaniards upon any place they thought "heavenly." The correctness with which the old Spanish names have generally been retained is remarkable. The worst modern fault has been that of chopping off the articles, while Los Gatos and the Farallones are about the worst examples of unspelling. The first should be Los Gatos, meaning the cats, and the second should be Farallones, meaning cliffs in the sea.—Chronicle.

Scolding and Praising Children.

"Jane I want you to take that pail of sour milk to the pigs," said Father starting for the moving lot. "Come, you needn't look so cross about it; you're very pretty girl like you. You don't hurt yourself with work, what, ever there is to be done," and he strode off to his work leaving a sullen, angry girl washing her pans.

"Father is always making me do some of his own, or the boys work, as if I hadn't enough of my own. Next I know he'll be asking me to put up the horses, or bore the corn. But I know one thing, I won't stay on this old farm a day longer than I have to, and I will teach my brothers to do their work and then up to the sun on the stoop. Wait a bit."

Soon he got home, a lazy girl, but the neatest, jolly little Jane, with a sweet smile greeted, made her spirits soar, and her despondency fly away. Her tasks finished, if she had been asked to do the work in a cheerful, kindly way, by her father, she would have responded cheerfully.

It was very different in another house. Father was a man in rather delicate health, and his stout little Rose, of thirteen, set herself the task of saving him all the work she could. "Rose is the nicest child, he said with enthusiasm yesterday to a gentleman who had dined with him. "The other night when I came in from work she had done up all my work for me, that she could do, even toddled down the horses and threw them hay, then she wheeled out a tub of feed for the pigs to the sula of the pen. So I could feed them each other, but an unusual thing for a girl of her age, but I was left to do all this, but she will, when she fancies I may be overtired or not well."

Rose's laughing eye was bright as a star and her step like the cricket's. There was no appearance of having overtaxed her strength, and she loved to do all these things "for father." She was sure of a lasting appreciation that was a better reward than gold. What a difference it makes, whether labor are done willingly or by word of command.

If the girls, and the boys too, were better appreciated; if they were praised instead of blamed so much, it would be a great deal better all round.

It is a good thing to cast our eyes inward here and there, and see how it is with us how we like it to have others always "picking at us." Children cannot be expected to have more self-command and stoicism than life's disciples live taught by.

St. Margaret, Queen of Scotland.

When it was morning she rose from bed and devoted a considerable time to prayer and the reading of the Psalms, and while reading the Psalms she performed the following works of mercy. She ordered that nine little orphans, utterly destitute, should be brought into her at the first hour of the day, and that some soft food such as children eat that tender age like, should daily be prepared for them. When the little ones were carried to her she did not think it beneath her to take them upon her knee and to get their food ready for them, and this she put into their mouths with the spoon while she herself used. The Queen, who was honored by all the people, did this act of charity for the sake of Christ and as one of Christ's servants. To this most loving mother must be applied with great propriety that saying of the blessed Job: "From my infancy mercy grew with me, and it came forth with me from my mother's womb." While this was going on it was the custom to bring three hundred poor people into the royal hall, and, when they had been seated round in order, the King and Queen entered; where upon the doors were shut by the seneschal, for with the exception of the chaplains, certain religious, and a few attendants, no one was permitted to be present at their alms deeds. The King on the one side of the table, and the other, waited upon Christ in the person of His poor, and served them with food and drink which had been prepared for this special purpose. When this was finished, the Queen's custom was to go into the church, and then, with long prayers, with tears and sighs, she offered up a sacrifice to God. Upon holydays, in addition to the ordinary alms, she used to hear three Masses, and Holy Mary, nevertheless the space of a day and a night, she used to repeat the Psalter twice or thrice, and hear the celebration of the public Mass, she caused five or six Masses to be sung privately in her presence.—Tuscan's Life of St. Margaret.

Endorsement from such a source is but another proof of intrinsic merit, and we give this to our readers with the good will they may derive from it, believing heartily in its worth, and unquestionably endorsing the recommend gentleman, and the wife in whom he is engaged.

A WESTERN POINT OF VIEW.

A Gentleman Thoroughly Competent to Speak, Gives His Opinion of Matters at Universal Importance.

During the past year 1,000,000 acres have been entered in Southern Dakota and 100 post-offices established, the early newspapers have increased from forty-three to sixty-three, and workies from 1st to 2d; emigration is pouring in at a rapid rate, a nation is being born in a day, and a short time only can elapse before two or three large States will grow out this land of the Dakotas.

The Rev. Stewart Sheldon, of Yankton, Superintendent of Home Missions for Southern Dakota, a gentleman who has lived in the Territory for the past sixteen years, and who knows what he says and is fully competent to give a trustworthy opinion on the very enthusiastic over Dakota's prospects. "Look at the area of the State, he exclaims, "Half a million square miles! make twenty-eight Connecticuts, to be larger than the inhabitants of the world with only six teen and a fraction to the acre, to put a belt around the globe six miles wide. In a single year 1,500 miles of railroad are built, and in a single farm 1,200,000 bushels of wheat were raised; its possibilities are almost boundless!

"How about the planting of churches?" "It keeps pace with the needs of the people. In my own denomination alone fifty organizations have been effected during the last year, and other religious bodies have probably done equally well."

"May I ask what originally I brought you to this new country with the necessary knowledge?"

"First, the pursuit of health, secondly, the great and growing field for religious work, and, thirdly, the hope of a home for my time. Anyon know, it is much easy task, and more to my taste for a denomination which believes saved my life, I should even go to Siberia if the call came, and I am glad in being instrumental in an humble way of doing some little good."

"Would you be willing to publicly state your experience?"

"Yes, sir! If you care to publish the matter in your paper, for the good of the cause, I will give you a written statement." And suiting the action to the word, the superintendent immediately wrote out the following.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that I have used Warner's Safe Cure and Safe Pills more or less for a year past and I find them to be most excellent remedies. They seem to do the work where other compounds fail. I have reason to believe that they have saved my life, and it gives me pleasure to commend them to others. For liver complaint, general debility and constipation, they have been a specific in my own case, as they have been to others to whom I have recommended them. It gives me pleasure to add my testimony to the many already given, in the hope that others afflicted as I have been may experience like benefit.

children from school, but to give them all the time and all the advantages that they have the capacity to profit by, or that, in after life, their children may "rise up and call them blessed."

THE CHRISTIAN HOME.

We need hardly remind you, dearly beloved brethren, that while home life would not, as a rule, be sufficient to supply the place of the school, it equally true, that set the action of dangerous influences in the school, it is equally true, that all that the Christian school could accomplish would be inadequate without the co-operation of the Christian home. Christian schools can only prepare the soil, but Christian homes must first prepare the soil, and afterwards foster the seed and bring it to maturity.

1. Christian Marriage.—The basis of the Christian home is Christian marriage; that is, marriage entered into and contracted in accordance with God's blessing. So great is the importance of marriage to the temporal and eternal welfare of mankind, that, as it had God for its Founder in the Old Law, so, in the New Law, it was raised by the Divine Lord to the dignity of a sacrament of the Christian religion. Natural likings and indignity of a sacrament of the Christian religion. Natural likings and instincts have their own value and weight; but they ought not by themselves to be a decisive motive in so important a step as Christian marriage; nor are they a safe guarantee for the proper fulfilment of the high ends for which marriage was ordained. That Christian hearts and lives may be wisely and rightly joined, God must join them, and religion sanctify the union; and rightly joined, God must join them, and religion sanctify the union; and though the Church sometimes permits the contraction of mixed marriages, she never does so without regret and without a feeling of anxiety for the future happiness of that union and for the eternal salvation of the fruit.

2. The Indissolubility of Marriage.—The security of the Christian home is in the indissolubility of the marriage tie. Christian marriage, once consummated, can never be dissolved save by death. Let it be well understood that even adultery, though it may justify "separation from bed and board," cannot loose the marriage tie, so that either of the parties may marry during the life of the other. Nor has "legal divorce" the slightest power, before God, to loose the bond of marriage and to make a subsequent marriage valid. "What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." (18). In common with all Christian churches we hold that it is one of civilization, to have wrought by the divorce-laws of our country. These laws are fast loosening the foundations of society. We cannot but consider that such divorces are prevalent in some states in ignorance. Catholics, at least, remember that marriage only through worthy and holy motives, and let them seek to hallow marriage, strengthen with the blessed and to Nuptial Mass. And then, far from wishing for means of escape from their union, they will rejoice that it cannot be divided but by death.

3. Home Virtues.—The pervading atmosphere of the Christian home should be Christian charity—the love of God and of the neighbor. In this atmosphere the husband and wife, dwelling together as "heirs of the grace of life," should be the ambition and study of Christian parents to make their home a sanctuary of peace, which no harsh or angry, no indelicate or profane word, should be uttered—in which truth, sincerity, self-control, should be practised—in which, with the thought of God, the desire to please Him, should be, sweetly and naturally, laid before the children as the first, should be, sweetly and naturally, the lessons of prayer their childhood should learn. From the home sanctuary the Lord should ascend as a most sweet morning and evening sacrifice of prayer. How beautiful and rich in blessings is the assembling of parents and children for morning and evening prayer! Our hearts are filled with consolations for morning and evening prayer! Our hearts are filled with consolations when, in the noonday of our cares and toils, we meet family in church, to pray before the Lord of Hosts. In such families we are sure to find the spirit of prayer, faith, religion and virtue. Faith, religion and virtue, and peace of the special benedictions of heaven. Faith, religion and virtue, and peace of the special benedictions of heaven. Faith, religion and virtue, are the best protection against the spirit of error.

4. The Catholic Press.—Finally, Christian parents, let us beg your earnest consideration of this important truth, that upon you, singly and individually, most practically depend the solution of the question, whether Catholic literature, most practically depend the solution of the question, whether the Catholic press is to accomplish the great work which Providence and the Church expect of it at this time. So frequently and so forcibly has the Church expected of it at this time. So frequently and so forcibly has the Church expected of it at this time. So frequently and so forcibly Pontiffs and distinguished Catholic writers, and so adequate have been the objections been proved and repeated everywhere, that no one certainly stands in need of arguments to be convinced of this truth. We stands in need of arguments to be convinced of this truth. We stands in need of arguments to be convinced of this truth. We will be only words in the ear, unless it can be brought home to each parent and made practical in each household. If the head of each Catholic family will recognize it as his privilege and his duty to contribute a yearly offering, or to subscribe for one or more Catholic papers, and by urging himself well acquainted with the information such periodicals, and keeping himself well acquainted with the information such periodicals, and keeping himself well acquainted with the information such periodicals, and keeping

Poetry.

NOT FOR MYSELF ALONE.

"Not for myself alone,"
The little prattling flower thus replied when
Not for myself alone I live and blow;
With fragrant breath the breezes I inclose,
And gladden all things with my rainbow dyes!
The bee comes sipping every sweet I give
His dainty fill;
The butterfly within my cup doth hide
From the threatening ill.

"Not for myself alone,"
The chirping star with brilliant smile doth beam—
"Not for myself alone I fan and set;
I with upon night's sweet and quiet reign
His power and skill who formed our myriad host.
Not for myself alone
I pass the sky,
That man might take my light, in every late,
His home on high."

"Not for myself alone,"
The heavy-laden bee doth murmuring hum—
"Not for myself alone from flower to flower
I rove the wood, the garden and the bower,
And in the hive at evening ready store;
For one, for man the bandore load I pile
Will I toil sore,
Content if this copy my ceaseless toil—
Not for myself."

"Not for myself alone,"
The soaring birds with lofty pinions sings—
"Not for myself alone I raise the song;
I, who the drooping sinner's sorrows know
And hear the mourner on my tireless wings;
I bid his hymnbook chant my anthem loud,
And God above
I call my witness, from his throne to turn,
And sing and soar."

"Not for myself alone,"
The streamlet whispers as its pebbly way—
Ingentle lilt, I make music in my ears,
And strew the fields with herbs and flowers gay,
I sing as I go onward, Nook and bower,
My cadences tone,
I sweeten and freshen the fragrant air
In drowsiest June.

"Not for myself alone"—
Oh, man, forget not this, earth's honored prince!
Not for myself alone thy life is given,
In earth's great chorus to sustain thy part.
Content if poets at heart's ungrudging feet,
Play out the aligned, spurn thy native clod,
And soul discover;
Live to thy neighbor, live unto God,
Not for thyself alone.

A Priest's Adventure.

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC NEW YEAR'S STORY.

The following circumstances, which are truth, not fiction, were related by the Jesuit Father C—, so renowned for his missionary work in Central Africa.

"On the evening of Dec. 22, 1867, I was in Paris, my object being partly to collect funds for the orphanages and educational establishments under my care at Cairo and Khartoum (the latter of which negro children are trained up to be good Christians, and partly to recover my shattered health. On that day I had gathered a plentiful harvest for my poor negro children; gifts had been richly bestowed, and I returned to my quarters full of gratitude to God and our benefactors, though suffering considerable fatigue. About 10 o'clock while I was saying my Office, some one knocked at my door. Surprised at so late a visitor, I took up a hybird mantle and advancing to the person who was entering I inquired his wishes. The stranger, who was well dressed, had the manners of a gentleman answered as he bowed courteously:

"Pardon me sir, that I disturb you at this late hour, I come to request you to visit a dying man who desires to speak to you before his end."

"But" I replied, why ask spiritual consolation from a stranger? Why not from his parish priest?"

"The sick man has expressly requested your aid," said the petitioner in a dejected manner. "I must of course, leave it to you to judge whether you will grant the last wish of a dying man or not. No time is to be lost."

"Without pausing any further over this strange request, I at once followed my visitor, quickly descending the stairs and passed into the street, where a handsome carriage was waiting. The stranger politely requested me to enter it, helped me in, closed the door quickly, and threw himself into a corner. The horses started off at a sharp trot. To my great surprise I saw by the light of the street lamps that there were three other persons in the carriage whose countenances were so stonelike and looking that I was seized with alarm and made a movement to spring out. At the same moment one of the three seized me by the collar while with the other hand he pointed a dagger toward my breast, the others exhibiting their revolvers at the same time. Escape was impossible, so I resigned myself to my fate, and silently prayed the All Merciful that He would grant me good death, for I believed my end was at hand. I suffered my eyes to be bound without offering any resistance. My companions spoke not a word, and I was left to my reflections. Suddenly the carriage stopped. I was in a richly furnished room, all the appointments of which testified to the wealth of the owner. I looked in vain for a bed or a dying person. I knew not what to think.

"Presently a distinguished looking man arose from an arm-chair in a distant corner of the room and advanced towards me. He was in the vigor of manhood, and looked hale and well though the gray hairs with which his dark locks were sprinkled showed the approach of age. This person whom I had never seen before addressed me in a friendly manner and begged me to take the nearest chair. I began to explain. I have been called to a dying man, but there surely has been some mistake, for you, sir, are perfectly well, if my sight deceives me not."

"You are right, worthy Sir, my bodily health is perfect," said the man, with a deep sigh, "but I am called to be an hour I must die; and I earnestly beg you to prepare me for a Christian death."

"What am I to understand by this?" I asked. "You say that you are well and strong, and yet you are to die in an hour?"

"The unknown answered quietly. To make short story, revenge is sweet, but it must know that I am a member of a secret society, and have been appointed to its highest office both on account of the influence I possess and because I have ever shrinked in bringing some difficult matters to a happy termination. My power and my character have been established, and for twenty eight years I have served the interests of our society with zeal and courage. When, however, it fell to my lot, a short time since, to be appointed to procure the death of a wealthy and pious prelate, who fills a high position and is generally esteemed, I decidedly refused to obey the command, although I well know that in accordance with our severe statutes death would be the consequence of my refusal. The sentence has been spoken, and this night I am to die. At my reception into the society I swore to obey without a word, and I would never during my life or at my death ask the cause of any of my priest. I had resolute to refused to take this oath, and now my hour is at hand. I have lived a sinful life, but I have never shed blood, and I cannot, I dare not, I will not, be the murderer of a holy priest. Save me, save me, for as a corporeal little likely to be in the confidence of any other person."

"I asked anxiously what kind of death he was to suffer

"The kind of death is singular," he answered. A large iron fork is thrust into the lower part of the neck near the collar bone and pierces the artery on each side. Death follows immediately and without a second remains. I have myself discharged more than fifty of our unfortunate victims. I pass over the details of the trial, which lasted for two days, and the sentence, and my attempt to fly from it. It would be vain, for the secret arm of our society extends over the whole world. But now, worthy Sir, I beg you to receive the confession of my whole life. It will but bring to my conscience is stained with blood, with sacrilege, and with many other deeds of sin. I have but one hour, he continued, as he drew out his watch and with pencil, but a delay no longer! And he knelt down by my chair.

"I cast a look toward Heaven, and with more fervor than I had ever before experienced, prayed for the unhappy man. With Lord be in thy heart and upon thy lips that thou mayest worthily and rightly confess all thy sins."

"An hour might have passed when the sky was based to turn in the lock of the door, and several men entered, bearing a coffin and the condemned. He begged for half an hour more, as he had not yet completed his confession. This was refused, and they pointed to the time piece which already indicated one o'clock. Then all the men seized him by the arm, and would have dragged him out of the room, but he earnestly reminded him of the promise that had been made him that he should have full liberty in regard to the concerns of his soul, while I joined my entreaties to his. The fearful tragedy greated him twenty minutes longer and withdrew, after which he completed his confession. With deep contrition yet with heartfelt joy at his reconciliation to God, he received the penal absolution, I laid my hand in gratitude and a tear fell on it.

"To my great sorrow I could not give him Holy Communion, not being in a Catholic priest, neither should I in any case have had time; but I gave him a relic of the Holy Cross which I always carried as a sacred treasure, and reminded him to place his whole trust in Him Who on this wood had made reconciliation for the sins of the whole world, and had pardoned when dying the repentant murderer. He pressed the relic to his lips with fervor and then concealed it in his breast.

"I then asked him whether he had no commands to give me. He begged me to carry his love to his dear wife, and his two daughters, one of whom had taken the veil in the Convent of the Sacred Heart, and to say to them the comforting assurance that he had been reconciled with God before his end.

"But, I interrupted, your friends will perhaps doubt the truth of what I say. I can give no proof of my conversation with you. Will you, therefore, have the goodness to write a line in my pocket-book, as my credentials?

"He took my pocket-book, and wrote with pencil on the last page:

"Dear Clothilde,—for the moment of taking leave of this world I beg your forginess for his great sorrow which you will feel at my violent death. Kiss my dear mother, and comfort her with the certain assurance that I die reconciled to God, and hope by His mercy to meet you above. Pray earnestly for my poor soul.—Your Theodore.

"With a grateful bow he gave me back my book, and begged me to continue my journey without a word of comfort. I took my gun to speak when the door opened, and four men stepped up to the condemned and led him away. I placed myself before him, but I pressed back the men with my hands, begged and entreated them to spare the life of a dearly beloved, much honored husband and father, and not to stain their hands with blood. They laughed on me to scorn, and pushed me back staggering with their strong arms. I offered my life for his. I fell on my knees before them and begged so fervently that I thought that the very rocks would have yielded. A step nearer and I was unawer. The unhappy victim was soon forgotten and led up to the place of execution. As he left the room the poor man cried in piteous tones—

"Farewell, worthy father! God reward you for what you have done for me. Remember me in your prayers, and in the Holy Sacrifice."

"Deeply moved, I looked after him till the door closed, and the steps sounded fainter and fainter through the long passages. Sinking on my knees and burying my face in my hands I prayed fervently, with trembling lips, for the mercy and pity from God which was denied to the unhappy man by his fellow creatures.

"What I suffered in that time is known to the Almighty alone. A thousand times I overwhelmed me. Sometimes they were with God, sometimes with the Evil One; sometimes I looked timidly around as if I might see vipers and adders creeping out of ground; sometimes I listened for a cry of pain. All was quiet as the grave. Drops of anguish fell from my forehead. How long my soul endured this rack I cannot tell.

"But hark, there is a noise of footsteps which comes nearer and nearer. The lock springs back, the door opens, and the terrible messenger of blood again appears. There are dark spots of blood on his hands the blood of a brother. And now they will enter the room in which is the defenseless priest.

"I stretched out my hands to be bound unasked, but they left them free, and only bandaged my eyes, leading me through different passages, up and down stairs and over, I know not where. Sometimes I passed half a perfume of delicious essences, through another hall an odor of cold steel with a smell of mould that froze my blood. At last they unbound my eyes. I was in a brilliantly lighted hall, beautiful candelabra hung from the gold stucoed and tapestried walls, polished furniture stood about, while soft curtains in rich folds hung about the embrasures of the windows, everything proclaimed luxury and taste. Ladies and gentlemen sant in and out; some turned to the tables of refreshments, others chatted on sofas; here you saw a merry group, there a solitary thinker. One of the elegantly dressed women and a gentleman came to me, and were very pressing that I should take a glass of refreshment, but I silenced their entreaties by saying that I must say Mass in the morning, and that it was already two o'clock. Instantly they ceased to press me, and looked at me with a feeling of suspicion that I was not safe. They came to me no more, but when I attempted to leave this magnificent company some gentlemen approached, led me down some steps again bound my eyes and placed me in a carriage which was waiting. After a journey of some hours, partly on the road, partly over soft ground, the carriage stopped—my conductor silently led me from it, and after a few steps placed me on something high. Was it a guillotine? was it an iron giant? was it an instrument of martyrdom? Each moment I expected that either the descent of a knife would separate my head from my body, a stroke from a dagger would pierce my heart, or that a blow from a club would shatter my skull. The perspiration flowed down my face and yet a cold air blew upon me. I remained an hour in this deadly anguish, without the expected blow being dealt. I breathed deeply and at last I then listened with the greatest care and attentiveness and heard no sound of human voices. I raised the bandage a little from my eyes, I saw that I was alone. I threw the band up quickly away, sprang from the iron gar-

A QUEER CITY IN THE AIR.

The Wonderful Pueblo of Ancient Acoma, in New Mexico.

Built Upon a Rock Four Hundred Feet Above the Surrounding Valley. A Grim Fortress Frowning Upon All Invaders.

The pueblo of Acoma, situated ninety miles west of Albuquerque, is one of the most remarkable towns in the Mexico of the United States. To reach it, take the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad to McCarthy's Station and then transfer to an Indian pony and its stalkiest mules south by east. When near your journey end you will see a mighty rock in the valley, six miles in width, on the middle of which stands a hamlet, and on the top of this is Acoma. Eight hundred people are living there and they and their ancestors have gathered there the sum of their possessions for nearly three centuries. Down into the one of maggy that are the remnants of a mass that has been worn away by the erosion of the ages and survives only in flat-topped mountains here and there. The valleys between are fertile, and untold generations of maize have seen them covered with green and fields of sheep.

SINCE TIME IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY the Lagunas or valley Indians made war upon the Acomas for the possession of the country, and the latter, being the weaker, were driven upon this impregnable fortress, which they have defended so successfully against the Lagunas, and, on the stage, did men proved, for the top of the rock is about 1 mile in length and 1 in breadth, and the sides are perpendicular, they have proved a bulwark of strength and safety. They conquered the country, private, and in approaching it from the east one can see the same way, reminds the pictures I have seen of that grim fortress of Gibraltar, which guards the Mediterranean. The height above the valley is nearly four hundred feet and the walls in several places nearly perpendicular. There are two means of ascent, one by a flight of 365 steps, cut in the rock, and the other, at an angle of forty-five degrees, and the latter by a tunnel in the rock which leads into the heart of the mountain. Both ways have been recently repaired, and the steps are hollowed out like shallow troughs. Either is exceedingly difficult and neither is absolutely safe. We chose the one along the tunnel. To give an idea of the laborious ascent of the last, imagine a stairway leading at Mr. Greenwood's office and rising to the top of the spire of the Methodist church, then continuing on an easier angle for 100 feet and then rising again by a steeper grade there over to an elevation higher than the weather vane on the university, and then leaving the stairway and crossing the sides of a gash in a rugged mountain, and you may know how we reached Acoma. With all the danger and fatigue, it is a cognizable health to see a person—and a person—make the ascent. He has to stretch your breath because, on the exhilarated side and the other on the left, and at the same time press the hands alternately against the walls to keep from falling. Indian will throw a live sheep around his neck and go up and down it rapidly touching either hand to the rocks, but I am assured I could never do it.

THE PEOPLE OF A PATRIOTIC INSTINCT that occurred on the outer stairway several times, and, when we reached the top, we found such with a sheep on his back. When we reached the top we found the streets of Acoma, the pueblo, and the shepherd on top of the mountain, and the

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

St. Francis de Sales, Patron of Catholic Journalists, in his quaint, but forcible language, thus defines the office of the Catholic Press: "Its duties are to defend the rights of religion, to uphold and blame of the Holy Apostolic See, and adhere to the doctrine and preserve this devotion and fidelity.—Pity 12.

Catholic journalists, whatever their talents, however it be the chief agent in propagating human and people, and consequently, in influencing the destinies of the world. In our time, religious journalism has become a useful and serious occupation, not only a work indispensable to the welfare of society, but a work of spiritual duties. What is and what ought to be the office of the Catholic Press, and what are the duties of Catholic journalists, whatever it may be—since we are all, Christian brothers.—Bishop, Tewkonna Monsign Chitanna.

A Daily Contemporary on the Plenary Council.

It is both amusing and interesting to read the different opinions advanced by the editors of the secular press concerning the recent Plenary Council, and the dogmatism with which writers who possess only the most superficial knowledge of Catholic affairs attempt to decide questions to their own satisfaction just as if they were Supreme Judges of the Court of Spiritualism. As a sample of the style to which we refer, we quote from a city contemporary noted for its "enterprise" whenever a scandal of more than ordinary magnitude has to be served up in true "sensational" form, but whose impartial treatment of Catholic matters has invariably been very commendable.

Among the "wise saws" of the critic of the Catholic Prelates in the columns of our daily contemporary, we come across the following as a reason for the existence of the many millions of members claimed by the Catholic Church in the United States. The astute writer in the daily press says that the convenient maxim: "Once a Catholic, always a Catholic, retains oh the master-rolls of the Church an infinite number of names which represent hopeless backsliders." Now, be it known to the brilliant Bohemian writer that there is not now, never has been, and never will be in the Church's vocabulary, such a ridiculous "maxim" as "Once a Catholic, always a Catholic," as the Church has too much self-respect, and too much regard for truth, to have recourse to such maxims in order to multiply her membership by accounting as Catholics "an infinite number of names which represent hopeless backsliders." Catholic Bishops—who are generally the best sources of information upon the number of Catholics in their Dioceses—always evince conscientious scruples concerning exaggerations which would be just so many "stumbling blocks" to the Roman, and to the Gentiles of the secular press, "foolishness." A certain idea of this characteristic love for truth on the part of Catholic Prelates, is recorded by John Gilmary Shea—the compiler of "Sadlier's Almanac and Guide," who says explicitly in the issue of 1886 that the figures given in the work are not mere guesses, "nor do they include all who by baptism are Catholics, but who no longer attend the worship and frequent the sacraments." "One Bishop writes," says the compiler in question, "and all would say the same: "There are thousands of Catholics in this State who do not approach the sacraments; I do not include such." Hence it is very apparent, that the maxim: "Once a Catholic, always a Catholic" does not prevail in the Catholic Church, but had its origin in the fertile imagination of some inspired outsider. And that the Church does not retain on her "master rolls" her recreant children, in order to swell her strength by quoting false figures, is made so plain by the above evidence that even an hireling scribes of the secular press generally are—they cannot fail to see the false attitude assumed by our daily contemporary in its comments on the Prelates of the Catholic Church.

The next "chunk" of individual wisdom, (void of common sense) which we select from the repertory of the writer on our daily contemporary, is his dogmatic declaration:

"Though the Plenary Council continues to oppose the common school system, the silent and sullen allegiance Catholics of to-day are its supporters."

It is one of the many singular peculiarities of daily press pensmen that they can settle all questions merely by a dash of the editorial pen and a single drop of ink. Another peculiarity of their writings is their manner of elevating the "intelligence" of individuals in the moment they become rebels against God or apostates to the Catholic Church. The Plenary Council did not "oppose" the common school system in the manner implied by its critic, as a casual reading of the Pastoral Letter would have taught the writer in question. Here is a paragraph extract from the Pastoral in proof of how little the writer in question knew about the Prelates regarding whom years his vanity overcomes his naturally

"All denominations of Christians are now awaking to this great truth, which the Catholic Church has never ceased to make talk. Reason and experience are forcing them to recognize that the only precious way to secure a Christian people is to give the youth a Christian education. The crowed mention of Christianity in some European countries can banishing religion from the schools, in order gradually to eliminate it from among the people, is a step so logical, and so we may well point by the lesson. Hence the cry for Christian education is going up from all religious bodies throughout the land. And this is an astounding fact "entertaining" on their part; it is an honest and logical endeavor to preserve Christian truth and morality among the people by fostering them in the young. Nor is it any antagonism to the State; on the contrary, it is an honest endeavor to give to the State better citizens, by making them better Christians. The friends of Christian education do not condemn the State for not imparting religious instruction in the public schools as they are now constituted, because they well know that it does not lie within the province of the State to teach religion. They simply follow their conscience by sending their children to denominational schools, where religion can have its rightful place and influence."

If any man were foolish enough to assert that the angels who were driven out of heaven because they rebelled against God were "the wisest and most enlightened" of the heavenly host, he would undoubtedly be looked upon as a lunatic. Yet, when writers like the present rather shallow specimen of the great army of word-builders, call Catholics as rebel against the authority of the Church on any matters concerning faith or morals "the wisest and most enlightened Catholics of to-day," they simply show how illogical a man may be and yet be permitted to advertise his "airy nothings" in the columns of the daily press. A Catholic who is a consistent, dutiful and practical child of the Church, never receives any concession from the daily press, but she cannot be dishonest that private should be allowed to marry, that diverces ought to be permitted, that secular knowledge is all-sufficient—then he is lifted at once into a post of honor among the most "intelligent, enlightened, and the ablest" citizens of this wonderfully informed Republic! It is useless to ask the secular scribes by what force of reasoning the transformation takes place. The ipse dixit of the "enterprising" daily settles the question beyond the reach of Pastoral Letter or even Papal Bull!

If rebellion against spiritual or temporal organized authority is to be the test of a man's intellectual ability and enlightenment, then we must reverse the positions occupied in history by those whom we call "martyrs" and "schismatics" in ecclesiastical writings, and also reverse the order of "patriots" and "traitors" in politics. If rebellion in opinion and action against constituted authority conduces to "ability and enlightenment," then assuredly Arnold's treason and Andre's treachery, Dorr's disaster and John Brown's raid, the Southern rebellion, and all similar attempts will be manifest in the eyes of those remarkably-enlightened enlighteners of the daily press who so frequently in their editorial columns declare Catholics:

Fortunately for our holy faith, however, the daily paper changes neither the power of the Church nor the position of her children. The true Catholic (although in the estimation of the paragraph pundits of the daily press he is neither "able nor enlightened") prefers to say with the Apostles "It is better to obey God rather than men," sooner than earn the encomiums of the daily press by proving derelict in his Christian duty of obedience. Hence he "hears the Church" when that ever-merciful Mother tells him to send his children to Christian schools, and a sad smile steals over his lips when he sees the folly of the daily press in its laughable lamentations of disobedience—dignified by profane of adulation which are as absurd as they are untrue.

The "ablest and most enlightened" Catholics are those who "seek first the kingdom of God" for themselves and their children; who hearken to the voice of their Prelates and priests as preached orally or expressed through Pastoral Letters; who, in a word, are good practical Catholics, participating in all the blessings imparted by the Sacraments and Christian Education as a means of knowing, loving and serving God. For such Catholics the world—represented by the daily press—has no use whatever, than verifying the promises of our Blessed Redeemer that those who loved Him would be hated by the world. But for those time-serving, freckling, turbulent, spirits who call themselves Catholics, yet oppose the Church in her every endeavor for the advance of God's cause—the world has its heartiest applause, its highest honors, and its greatest eminence, because in such it finds never repelling its "decay" by acting occasionally to hear some sectarian preacher predict that in a few years public schools "enlightenment" will leave all the Catholic churches in the land entirely empty! He reads that the French Freemasons have expatriated Priests and Sisters and proscribed Christian education, hence he concludes that Catholic faith is rapidly going out of existence in France, which the fact is established by historical evidence that Catholic faith beams both purer, better and brighter in times of persecution than it does in the midst of peace and prosperity. Again, this writer reads that Protestant propagandism is spreading in Spain, Italy and Mexico, and as his digests all the Manchester stories of spell-bound sectarian scribes—he very naturally concludes that the old Church must fall when it is opposed by such powerful enemies as Freemasonry, Free Schools, Free Education and—the Devil! But—as in all such cases where "the wish is father to the thought"—wolfish newspaper writers like our delicate daily scribe, always forget that Almighty God still lives in His Church and lives it with a love which immeasurably surpasses human understanding.

Were the Catholic Church the mere lifeless, cheerless, inanimate institution which some of its enemies try to persuade themselves it is—then would it have fallen long ages before even the principal nations of Europe were designated by distinctive names. But we are often astonished that our enemies do not reflect that the Church lives in spite of all the changes of time and age, and which is the one, true, infallible and indestructible representative of Christianity in all parts of the world to-day—cannot be driven out of existence by even the blighting blast of the breath of Heaven, much less by the limping logic of secular leader writers on the daily press.

The next blast blown from the bugle horn of the Church's critic is this assertion—which would be very singular were it not for the silly source from which it emanates:

"It is immaterial to the State whether children receive in the Real Presence or not, but it is quite another thing whether he is a Republican or subjects of a court which acknowledges the laws of the land to the decree of a church outside."

Verily, a Daniel has come to judgment! But the writer in question—although he unknowingly arrogates to himself the authority of representing "the State," is just as much mistaken in these matters as we have already proved him to be on those preceding points which we have punctured. This is a Christian land—recognizing God and the beneficent power of a Divine Providence in its Declaration of Independence—and as such, it does make a difference whether a man believes in the Real Presence or not, for the reason that a consistent, practical Christian is always a better citizen than an unbeliever or an apostate. A man who proves false to his Creator is not likely to be more faithful to his country, because consistency in religious views is a safeguard for public morality. What is one of the causes of the corruption of the present day in all parts of the civilized world of this Republic? The want of a public conscience. Man lie, steal, swear and sin in the most glorious manner, because they do not believe in the Real Presence. On the other hand the man who knows, feels and believes that God will hold him to account for evil word and bad deed—is more likely to be a good public servant, a more honest merchant, a purer politician, than the unfaithful son who has sealed his conscience to believe that he has no hope of heaven and that hell is a myth! In this way a belief in the Real Presence is a public benefit, and if we had more of such belief in public life—this government would be far purer, its patronage would be more economical, and its people happier, more contented and more prosperous.

The writer in our daily contemporary is evidently no friend of the Catholic Church, as he thinks it actually "dangerous" that a man should be "as adherent of a creed which acknowledges the laws of the land to the decree of a church council." In other words, Catholics are a "dangerous" class in America because the Church will not adopt the Divorce laws of the land, and have a chopping-knife in every Church porch in order to cut asunder the bonds of marriage whenever men or women desire it. But our friend evidently forgets that God can make only good laws, whilst the last that man can pass sanctioned by law was in slavery man, woman and child in America. The Catholic Church instructs her children to keep inviolate their sacred vows and His teachings, and if she is alone in the performance of this duty it is because she is alone in representing God upon earth. Civil laws are antagonistic to Almighty God, she never has obeyed and she never will obey. The Church always regards God's laws as being the rule of man and unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, but when Cæsar proclaims himself supreme in all things spiritual and temporal, then the Church says—with our Blessed Redeemer Himself: "Get thee behind Me, Satan."

The closer of the article before us is a patching of the whole piece, inasmuch as it has concealed beneath the velvet of verbiage the virus of vindictiveness. Here it is:

"If there were any reason to believe that the less remarkable tenets of the creed of Catholics in this country alarmed a corresponding increase in the number of those who favor the common school system, it would behoove Catholics to reconsider the matter. As it is, the phenomenon is not worth a moment's thought."

Well, really! We are astonished! And, after all, this same contemptuous critic of the Church; after all these precepts laid down for the guidance of the Faithful; after all this exposure of "dangers" which "lies hidden" in apostasy—he who is subject is dismissed with as little consideration as if its further contemplation was entirely unworthy to occupy the quaint intellect of this journalistic Jove! If "hostility" to the common school system consists of spreading Christian schools all over the land, why our superficial friend must set as Catholics down as decided opponents of the school system which was the child of Christian parents of its Christianity; the system which unjustly taxes ten millions of citizens for schools they do not use, and then unjustly taxes them again for their own schools, which they do use. Against such a system the Catholic citizens of this country by no means stand as the sole opponents. Every day draws nearer the time when the injustice and the infidelity of the school system will be swept, and a public school system by which the different denominations of citizens will receive their pro-rata of school taxes will be substituted for the present fraudulent and corrupt combination. We could fill the Monitor with extracts from the very paper in which the above article appeared, showing the corruption, the injustice, and the degrading influence of the present public school system. Even Protestant Ministers and secularists have come out strong in favor of Catholic Parochial Schools, and even Protestant Ministers, Father Bassin built one at London, and another was dedicated at Redding, in the extreme North of the State. The Dominicans who have opened a Parochial School at Benicia, Solano County, have built two small churches there, one at Port Costa for the rapidly-growing population around the warehouses and docks, and another at Black Diamond, farther up the river. The Catholic population of Benicia, Port Costa, Black Diamond, of Italian, Greek and Portuguese fishermen, employed in connection with the salmon canneries on the shores of Contra Costa County, Father Cummings of San Pablo, has nearly finished a frame Church capable of accommodating the Catholics of that locality. The founding, though small—thirty-one by sixty-six feet outside dimensions—will be complete in all its appointments, and free and all other conveniences. The congregation is mainly composed of Portuguese cultivators, who have acted unanimously all through the county, and as a matter of course are all Catholics. Contra Costa County has thus had four churches erected or opened this year, which speaks well for the growth of the Church there. In Alameda County Father Pinsoers of Livermore is erecting a new Church which is, we believe, the only one started in that county this year.

In San Mateo County a new frame Church has been dedicated at Spanishtown to take the place of the old inadequate building. In Santa Clara County a frame Church, thirty by sixty feet outside, and capable of containing over two hundred persons, has been built in Almaden. The population is chiefly composed of Mexicans and quicksilver miners, and Spanish is the language used in the ordinary affairs of life. The Church is attended by the Jesuit Fathers from San José, Father Piccardo, S. J., being the administrator. In San José itself the lands of St. Joseph's Church has been completed by the erection of two towers flanking the central portion. Both towers have spiral ornaments. Mr. Hyland of San José has designed them, and the late Martin Murphy the other, at a joint cost of about eleven thousand dollars. The school house in connection with this parish has also been enlarged by the addition of a second story which, besides its school use, will serve as a place of assembly on special occasions for the Catholics of the town.

The restoration of the old Mission Church of Carmel near Monterey, where the body of Father Junipero Serra lies, inserves special mention as a most praiseworthy effort to preserve the memorials of the old Franciscan pat standing among us. It would be desirable in such cases that the original style of the work—and so far as possible the original materials—should be preserved. The work of restoring or preserving historical buildings or scenes seems so much more utterly different from that of improving or enlarging. In other restorations we hope this principle will be kept somewhat strictly in sight, and even at Carmel it would be possible to replace the present roof at some future time with one similar to that which formerly covered it, and thus make it a perfect monument of the parent away days of the Franciscans.

In the Northern Dioceses the growth of population has not been so large as elsewhere. Humboldt County, however, is an exception, as the lumber trade attracts a large and energetic population. Father Nugent of Arcata has built a neat frame Church there capable of holding two hundred and fifty persons. In Humboldt the members of the Church gathered together to the number of a thousand, and a subscription was taken up on the spot, which is to be found sufficient all over the Church. Finally, the members of the Rosary Confraternity share not only in the merits of their living confreres, and in those of the sons and daughters of St. Dominic, who are dead, but they are admitted by a special privilege which Mary has obtained for them from her Son, as she has obtained for her Rosary Confraternity, to share during life and after death in all the merits of all the Saints, beatified and holy persons of the three Orders of St. Dominic from their very foundation, and also in the merits of all the members of the Rosary Confraternity that departed this life in the state of grace from its very establishment.

We say, at least to some extent, appreciate both the value of the favor procured for her dearly loved Rosary by our good Mother, and consequently their security with regard to reaching Heaven, if we only take into account that the Dominican Order has two hundred and fifty seven Saints and beatified persons enjoying in God's Church Dominican Rosary worship; it is a fact that this same glorious Order has given in the thirteenth century, thirteen thousand, and in the fourteenth, ten thousand, and in the twelfth century twenty-six thousand martyrs to the cause of Jesus and Mary, and of the Rosary, and that it has given to the unlocidable number of Saints and beatified persons enjoying in the Kingdom of Heaven, their number must be immense from what our beloved Mother has said to the blessed Alanus.

Now in the merits of all these named, the members of the Rosary Confraternity share, and share in the merits of their sons. Surely we have a right to infer that the Lord Hosannas has been at all times, and ever will be our sovereign, and that what exclaim, blessed indeed are the members of the Confraternity of the most holy Rosary! Blessed for the reason given, and blessed because of the cheering words contained in other declarations made by our sweet Mother in their favor to Blessed Alain. In the conclusions made by the Holy Mother of God to the Restorer of the Rosary, she addressed to him that has written before, and to the Bishop of the same Order, who have themselves enrolled in the Confraternity of the Rosary, secondly, that devotion to the Rosary is a brilliant sign of predestination, thirdly, that her love for the members of the Rosary Confraternity surpasses the united love of all mothers for their children, and even together for a tenderly cherished husband, that of all brothers and sisters for one another, and that of children for their sire, and the most perfectly attached friends on earth. Fortunate also stated that sooner then let any of her Rosaries perish eternally, she would be willing to renounce her glory in Heaven until the end of the world, and that she would endure all the pains of purgatory, and even the pains of the infernal penance for them." We only add we say that the Rosary is an infinite treasure in merits, and that the Lord Hosannas, in the name of the Rosary has given us all things with her.

Editorial Notes.

An opera in the Irish language was recently produced in Steinway Hall, New York City, and proved a decided success. The opera was composed for the Society for Preservation of the Irish Language, by Paul McGinley, the title "The Bard and the Knight."

Eugene Kelly, Esq., of New York, president of the Knights of Columbus of that state, performed an act that, for considerate kindness and appropriateness, deserves publicity to be widely known, but to be highly commended. When the State Treasurer paid the members of the College, President Kelly received a check for his distributive share. It is to serve both as a boarding and day school. The dormitories will contain about forty boarders, while the six class rooms can accommodate three hundred pupils. The stories are all high and the school rooms large and well ventilated. The convent stands on a lot secured by Father McGinty two years ago, containing four acres with facilities for irrigation if desirable. The well known Sisters of Notre Dame, from South Bend, Indiana, are to take charge of the convent when finished, which Father McGinty hopes will be early in the coming year.

In the Dioceses of Monterey and Los Angeles the increase of Catholic population has been sufficient to call for the creation of any new churches, but substantial improvements in schools, religious and hospitals have been effected, and in the Southern Diocese as in all the others within the Province many plans have been matured for the material progress of the Church during the year now dawning.

Salutary Results through Reciting the Rosary.

The Rosary teaches us in the plainest manner all its virtues, and severly tests its virtues in practice then, it is for this reason particularly that the Rosary is the source of all the merit claimed for it. Without frequently, more gently and more openly professes his faith than the pious Rosarian! Who has stronger hopes whilst on the march of pilgrimage, with Son and Mary in their Kingdom than he? His trust is absolutely free from presumption. He relies on the blood of Jesus and on the intercession of Mary with Jesus, to make him fit to enter into the house of the just.

He makes him correspond with the graces that are given him. Often does he exclaim as he recites the Rosary and practices its teaching, "Behold! this is my Rosary, I hold it in my hand, and on my four, because the Lord is my strength and my praise, and He is become my salvation." Behold! this is my Rosary, Mary, my Mother, my only hope after Jesus thy Son, come to my assistance."

Mary, the Mother of Mercy, who faithfully complies with all the obligations of the Rosary Confraternity—Mary, who is the Mother of Sorrows, who sample Jesus in His Passion and Death on the Cross, and Mary at His side, suffering with Her Son, and Mary, who is the amiable lady, he is, as it were, forced to exclaim, as he recites the Rosary in an ecstatic exclamation, as the humber trade attracts a large and energetic population. Father Nugent of Arcata has built a neat frame Church there capable of holding two hundred and fifty persons. In Humboldt the members of the Church gathered together to the number of a thousand, and a subscription was taken up on the spot, which is to be found sufficient all over the Church. Finally, the members of the Rosary Confraternity share not only in the merits of their living confreres, and in those of the sons and daughters of St. Dominic, who are dead, but they are admitted by a special privilege which Mary has obtained for them from her Son, as she has obtained for her Rosary Confraternity, to share during life and after death in all the merits of all the Saints, beatified and holy persons of the three Orders of St. Dominic from their very foundation, and also in the merits of all the members of the Rosary Confraternity that departed this life in the state of grace from its very establishment.

We say, at least to some extent, appreciate both the value of the favor procured for her dearly loved Rosary by our good Mother, and consequently their security with regard to reaching Heaven, if we only take into account that the Dominican Order has two hundred and fifty seven Saints and beatified persons enjoying in God's Church Dominican Rosary worship; it is a fact that this same glorious Order has given in the thirteenth century, thirteen thousand, and in the fourteenth, ten thousand, and in the twelfth century twenty-six thousand martyrs to the cause of Jesus and Mary, and of the Rosary, and that it has given to the unlocidable number of Saints and beatified persons enjoying in the Kingdom of Heaven, their number must be immense from what our beloved Mother has said to the blessed Alanus.

Now in the merits of all these named, the members of the Rosary Confraternity share, and share in the merits of their sons. Surely we have a right to infer that the Lord Hosannas has been at all times, and ever will be our sovereign, and that what exclaim, blessed indeed are the members of the Confraternity of the most holy Rosary! Blessed for the reason given, and blessed because of the cheering words contained in other declarations made by our sweet Mother in their favor to Blessed Alain. In the conclusions made by the Holy Mother of God to the Restorer of the Rosary, she addressed to him that has written before, and to the Bishop of the same Order, who have themselves enrolled in the Confraternity of the Rosary, secondly, that devotion to the Rosary is a brilliant sign of predestination, thirdly, that her love for the members of the Rosary Confraternity surpasses the united love of all mothers for their children, and even together for a tenderly cherished husband, that of all brothers and sisters for one another, and that of children for their sire, and the most perfectly attached friends on earth. Furthermore she stated that sooner then let any of her Rosaries perish eternally, she would be willing to renounce her glory in Heaven until the end of the world, and that she would endure all the pains of purgatory, and even the pains of the infernal penance for them." We only add we say that the Rosary is an infinite treasure in merits, and that the Lord Hosannas, in the name of the Rosary has given us all things with her.

Editorial Notes.

An opera in the Irish language was recently produced in Steinway Hall, New York City, and proved a decided success. The opera was composed for the Society for Preservation of the Irish Language, by Paul McGinley, the title "The Bard and the Knight."

Eugene Kelly, Esq., of New York, president of the Knights of Columbus of that state, performed an act that, for considerate kindness and appropriateness, deserves publicity to be widely known, but to be highly commended. When the State Treasurer paid the members of the College, President Kelly received a check for his distributive share. It is to serve both as a boarding and day school. The dormitories will contain about forty boarders, while the six class rooms can accommodate three hundred pupils. The stories are all high and the school rooms large and well ventilated. The convent stands on a lot secured by Father McGinty two years ago, containing four acres with facilities for irrigation if desirable. The well known Sisters of Notre Dame, from South Bend, Indiana, are to take charge of the convent when finished, which Father McGinty hopes will be early in the coming year.

In the Dioceses of Monterey and Los Angeles the increase of Catholic population has been sufficient to call for the creation of any new churches, but substantial improvements in schools, religious and hospitals have been effected, and in the Southern Diocese as in all the others within the Province many plans have been matured for the material progress of the Church during the year now dawning.

OUR STOCKTON LETTER.

Funeral of Father Walsh.—Shrine of His Life and Labors.—Sermons by Very Rev. J. Prendergast, Vf G. Affecting Scenes in the Church.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

STOCKTON, Cal., Dec. 28, 1884.

Dear Sir: There are few occasions in the Catholic Church now affording time for or the same occasion of the death of a priest, especially one who has been so long in the field and had been beloved by all who knew him. But such was the case with the late lamented Father Patrick Walsh, which took place in Stockton on the morning of the 23rd ult. after a long illness. For a number of years Father Walsh was accustomed to visit Mary's South of this place, and during the time he was with us, he always made his home at Stockton, given in their praise of the good priest. Father Walsh was ordained in Ireland, in the year 1845, and his ministry has extend over and all the Dioceses of California, Father Walsh was the last of the Rev. Father Ward, who was ordained in the year 1844, and he was the last of the Rev. Father Ward, who was ordained in the year 1844, and he was the last of the Rev. Father Ward, who was ordained in the year 1844, and he

Farm and Home.

THE LAD THAT I MEAN TO MARRY.

There's many a handsome lad above,
That many a girl would fancy;
A jovial knight who could capture quite
The heart of Lucie or Nancy;
A gay companion in social halls,
At ease with Tom, Dick or Harry;
But, ah, they are blind who think that's the kind
Of a lad that I mean to marry.

There is many a lad that is good and true,
Who carries a face that's homely,
There's many a lad with a noble heart
Whose figure is far from comely;
There's many a one who will come to you,
Meet a lover fill pretty,
Till I feel the one that is sworn to none—
The lad that I mean to marry.

His eyes may be blue, or black or brown,
Or, I may at their glance be taken;
And he may be either short or tall,
Very robust or slender,
For the height or depth of a man depends
On the one he may choose to render;
And above them all—like a kingly mail—
Is the lad I mean to marry.

There's many another maid I know
Who was wed in a foolish notion,
Who married a man for the very fact
Who chanced to be her lady lover;
Ah, such lives are envied them,
But, whether Tom, Dick or Harry
Though a great millionaire—could ever compare
With the lad that I mean to marry.

Ah, well-a-day, the years run away,
And there is much wooing and wedding,
And eyes that were bright with the soul I delight
The heart of mortal are shedding;
But from them all the Creator will call
With a fresh young heart I tarry,
Contented to wait—for the lad my fate—
The lad that I mean to marry.

Phases of Home Life.

Scene—The neat room. Door shut. Nothing visible except an sudden voice from either side of the door. Enter a sobbing voice, audibly, speaking, swirly in vocal accents:

Hay!
There, now!
Hell'up!
Hole dup!
Hold dop your red!
Can't you hold up your head dup!
Put tim!
Pettit im!
Put tim your foot!
There around!
Oh, goodness gracious! don't you know how to turn around!
Hold your hand still!
Don't do that!
Tother arm!
The other arm!
Oh, great lard, go to your mother!
It is a man drowing his infant son in the morning.

Don't Worry About Yourself.

To retain and recover health, persons should be relieved from any anxiety concerning disease. The mind has power over the body—for a person to think he has a disease will often produce that disease. This we see effected when the mind is intensely concentrated upon the disease of another. We have seen a person assume all the symptoms of a voyage, before reaching the vessel. We have known persons to die of cancer in the stomach, and other mental diseases. A blindfolded man slightly pricked in the arm has fainted and died from believing he was bleeding to death. Therefore, persons to remain well, should be cheerful and happy; the sick persons should have their minds diverted as much as possible. It is by their faith that they die. As a man thinketh so he is. If he wills not to die, he can often live in spite of diseases; and, if he has little or no attachment to life, he will stay with us easily as a child will fall asleep. Men live by their minds as well as their bodies. Their bodies are no life of themselves; they are only receptacles of life—tenements for their minds, and the mind has much to do in sustaining the physical occupancy or giving it up.

Home Politeness.

If we want anything of our children, or our servants, we should not, merely because we have the authority to command, give a bold order, but why not use the gentle "Please, will you do this?" "Will you be good enough?" "Oblige me with that?" When service is rendered we are not to take it in silence, coolly, rudely, because we have a right to the service; but it is easy to say "Thanks," or "I am obliged," or "Oh, that is nicely done." These little every-day courtesies are called the small change of life, but we should be badly off in trade if we had no small change at hand; most always deal with large coin; while the small change of politeness accounts up to a great sum in a lifetime. If parents have plenty of this small change of politeness on hand, it will be put in circulation in the family. The children will pay it out to each other, to servants, to playmates, and with it family peace and family affection will be largely purchased. Home is the place where true politeness tells.

The Cuming Woman.

If a woman man can a her own living, there is no more unlikely person in the world she may be qualified. Lithography, modeling in clay or wax, book keeping, shorthand writing, wood carving, chasing in gold and silver, and many other handicrafts, are now considered womanly occupations, and any one of them is apt to prove of more use to the girl who has her own ways to make than a superficial knowledge of the singles, lancegaree or music. If a girl is rich, let her be educated to the full extent of her ability; but she should also be trained in some profession or perhaps employment, that she may be independent of her money, and the most self-respecting as that second. If she chooses, she can be as well informed as to the world about her as her brother, and wield as great a power. In art, in science, in the field of letters, women has the point of greatness. The store-house of knowledge opens as readily to her as to those of the other sex. She should accurately value the nobility of labor and the dignity of independence.

Matrimony is not the only harbor in which she may safely anchor, and cuddling a husband is not the chief end of life. If an adequate pecuniary training be added to mental culture, she will join to the rigor of precedent generations a mental breadth to which they never attained.

THE CARMELITE FATHERS.

The Oldest Religious Order in the World—Their Settlement in America.

If it be true, as we might suppose, that a thing is poetically beautiful in proportion to the antiquity of its origin, it must be admitted that the Order of Carmel has some claim to our admiration. It dates from the earliest ages. Elias, "the man of God," "the greatest of the prophets," "the zealous upholder of the Rule of Hosts," founded it on Mount Carmel 930 years before Christ. There exists in the Order a tradition, corroborated by many holy doctors, among them St. Jerome and Austin, that this about which the prophet saw ascending over the Mediterranean represented the Blessed Virgin, to whom Elias dedicated his infant institute. St. John the Baptist, during his stay in the wilderness, instructed the successors of Elias and the prophets in the Christian faith, and they were converted on Pentecost by St. Peter (Rev. 16 July, 24 Nat.). "The Gospel then formed the basis of the rule till John, forty-fourth patriarch of Jerusalem, gave them one, 412, a.n." (St. Cyril, of Alexandria.) After they became Christians by the preaching of the Apostles, the renown of their sanctity spread more and more over the East. But in the thirteenth century, being greatly persecuted by the Saracens, many of them came to Europe. Simon Stock, a holy relics of Kent, in England, by the admonition of the Blessed Virgin, joined these monks on their arrival in England. In time St. Simon Stock was elected General of Hand Superior of the Order, and under him the Order of Mary increased and spread itself all over Europe. At this time the enemies strove to abear the Order of its title of dedication to the Virgin Mary.

St. Simon prayed the Queen of Carmel to give the Order a mark to show that he was its mother and patroness. In answer to his prayers, the benign Virgin, accompanied by many angels and saints, appeared to him, and, presenting to him the brown scapular as a sign of protection and distinction, and a sid to him: "Receive, most beloved son, this scapular of the Order, a sign of my confraternity, a privilege both to thee and to all Carmelites, in which he that dieth shall not suffer eternal fire; behold the sign of salvation, a safeguard in danger, a covenant of peace and everlasting alliance." This vision took place on July 16, 1251, and is solemnly commemorated by the Church on the same day every year. This sacred scapular became afterwards a part of the Carmelite habit. The wearing of the scapular being approved by the Holy See, all countries the faithful made use of that privilege. We shall say no more about the scapular, for the number of its wearers attest by their veneration for it the truth of its efficacy and protection.

This Order, so privileged, continued to add lustre to the Church by the sanctity and learning of its religious. But exile and need seem nowadays to be in the vestige of its famous monasteries in England now remain. From many years of exile, many of its religious have been expelled by Prussia. But of late France has expelled them from her shores. At present their General at Rome is daily awaiting the sequestrators and sale of the monastery in which he dwells by the Italian Government.

About the year 1864 the members of the Order came to America. At length, after many years of work and hardships, they have a convent in Boston, two in Philadelphia in Pittsburgh, Penn., one in New Baltimore, Penn., one in Scripps, Ohio, one in Lawrenceville, and one at Niagara Falls, Canada, having a novitiate in Pittsburgh, N. J. Simon. The novitiate is at Niagara Falls.

The Fathers of the Order give missions and hold parishes. In their monasteries, where there is a sufficient number, they chant the Divine Office. These dress, or habit, is brown, and consists of a tunic with a cincture of leather, and rosary attached; hanging from the shoulder is the scapular, coming below the tunic, and this is the cowl. Besides, on special occasions, they wear a white cloak, which was given to them by their founder, St. Elias. There are at present only fifty members in America.

Dying in Strange Positions.

While coming back to the hospital we found the Green, of my company, hanging across the fence stand. He pass out while we were on the skirmish line, and he was not able to get into a wagon. After getting rested, I suppose he started to hunt us up, and while over the fence he was struck with a bullet, and there he stopped. The ball passed through his stomach and spine. He was no award, also he would have faced the other way when he had such a good chance.

Several dead men have been found in hollow logs or behind lots or rocks, so though they had been wounded and crawled in there to protect themselves. One poor fellow sat behind a big tree with a fiddle in his hand. He had been paint a dozen times and more during the day by an hideous drivers and burial squad. He must had all thought that he was alive. He had been shot in the thigh, and he had gone to the tree for protection, taking his fiddle out, he thought, no doubt, that he would find somebody to treading it, but while lying there a ball cut him through the back of the neck deep enough to touch the spinal cord. His head dropped forward a little, and there he sat.

Lord Chancellor Clare on one occasion while Curran was addressing him on a most important case, hoisted himself with a fantastic spanial, seated near him, and crossed speaking through indignation. A numerous pilgrimage to the ancient Shrine of St. Martin of Tours has set in of late. The tomb is held in high veneration by the faithful of the surrounding country, and the yearly pilgrimage is so great of great interest to the clergy. The shrine is composed of rare and marble sculptures of great value and artistic merit; so much so that in the Revolution of the last and the present century these have frequently been suggestions to sell or destroy it. Despite these treasonably designs, however, it has escaped the hands of vandals in the highest of France.

"GOING DOWN HILL."

New a Venerable Invoun Evaded the Greatest Disability Which Beets the Aged.

(Burlington, Ia., Hawkeie.)

An account is going the rounds of the press of a woman who was so afflicted with rheumatism for fifteen years that her entire muscular system became rigid, and for all that period she was kept alive by great forced brown her bath.

A prominent New York physician was once asked what rheumatism was. He replied: "Find out what it is, then undoubtedly right, because rheumatism seems to spring from a different cause in every individual case. If its origin is a mystery, its cure is as well and too widely known for there is scarcely any season of the year when some persons are not more or less affected by it. In general, however, it prevails mostly among the aged, making their last days hard to bear. A prominent physician once remarked in one hearing: "If the aged could escape the torture of rheumatism, their last years as a rule would be quiet, peaceful and peaceful."

Apropos of the above, Mr. W. Dellens, of Falls, Ia., sends us a communication which ordinarily we would not publish, except at so much a line. But his experience has been so remarkable that we think we are justified in giving place to it. He says:

"Dear Sir:—I am 78 years of age. My life has been active. I and sail-blown in this town, and what I say I do not think it will be denied by any one who knows me. Up to a year or two ago, I was the possessor of splendid health, and hoped I should wear out gradually and gracefully. Two years ago, however, I was overcome with some kind of old age, rheumatism. Were it first prostrated me the pain was so acute that I thought it was neuralgia, which medical authorities tell me indicates a low state of the system.

I fancied that this attack was the beginning of the end. I sent for a good doctor, who treated me with electrical and other agencies, but I grew worse. He finally said my case was a serious rheumatic one. For six months I could not use my limbs at all, and was bedridd by three strong persons, like a helpless child. Then came a period of better feelings, but reaction followed, and for six long months of painful suffering I was confined to the bed. For over a year I groaned in agony. I tried all reputable lotions, liniments, plasters and preparations, in vain. At this stage, my friend Elder Overcamp came to see me, and upon his urgent recommendation I began to use warner's safe rheumatic cure, a few drops of which gave back to me the use of my limbs. I am now sleeping without pain, eating without distress, and feel as gay as a lad of twenty. I am 78 years of age. I cordially recommend that preparation to all persons afflicted as I was, and especially to the thousands of aged men and women whose last days are embittered by the affliction."

Mr. Dellens' latter is endorsed by Elder Overcamp, who says he is a member of his church, and his case to him is surprising and remarkable. Mr. F. W. Brickhof also endorses the statement in similar terms.

There is no doubt that this is a true record of the case, and Mr. Dellens' experience should be an encouragement to all sufferers as he did, to use the means so successfully employed, for nothing better, if indeed, as good, can be had in the market.

asked her what she had done, to appeal to the physicians, to have seen the bystanders and asked them how it had been brought about! Would it not have been justice to humanity and themselves to have seen whether Jesus Christ was an impostor or whether he was not! "And they laughed him to scorn."

THE REND OF THIS LAUGHTER HAS COME OF from anatomy to anatomy, and the laughter is still ringing in this city, and it will go on ringing till the clash of doom. They had spoken in the present crisis the Times knew for Baron Sigeta soon to have forgotten the result of their last experiment. They could not have lost sight of the fact that if they were organical each day, from the beginning of the year to its close, hanging and murdering Irishmen, at the end of that time they would have made little progress in destroying our nationality. Other patriots would come fresh ready to offer martyrdom for our dear old land, adding by their sufferings to the glory of our nationality. Mr. O'Brien in calling the attention of the House to the circumstances attending the execution of Peter Doyle for the murder of Kenny, at Sligo jaol, Dublin, on the night of the 6th of July, '82, left the guilt of Doyle's judicial murder clear upon the shoulders of the Executive.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL SHOWED THAT the Crown had evidence in its possession before the trial of Peter which would have exonerated the prisoner, but they withheld it for the purpose of getting a verdict just as soon as possible after having endeavored to bribe and terrorize Doyle to give false information about his fellow-Mr. O'Brien said if the Park murders could clearly be traced, it would be found that originated with those agents of crime, Short, Frank, Fanchonna and others, and the Attorney-Mr. Parnell after criticising the answer of the Attorney-General said the entire case seemed to be in Government hands.

"With regard to Short and Joe Poole, he would say that he believed that no jaloo hounds had ever been exhibited by any man than that which was shown by the Government, adding the fact that a committee had been formed for the destruction of Dublin was the most magnanimous enough, after his conviction of a crime of which he knew to be innocent, was to refuse to purchase his own life by bearing false testimony against those on whom the crime was laid. He believed firmly in the innocence of the man, because the Government had endeavored to use what interest they imposed were the means of inducing the prisoner to bear

THE CHORISTER OF THE NATIVITY.

BY ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

"More blessed 'tis," said Christe, "To give than to receive!"—
And on our new canary
Came home on Christmas Eve.

Just then his servant just in her head to tell her that there was a poor child at the door who piteously begged to see her. "He speaks strange like, ma'am, and I think he's a foreigner by his speech; but one of these Christmas days he looks awful cold and starved too."

"Bring him in, Mary, and let him have a cup of hot tea to warm him.

So saying, she got up and went into the hall, to see what the child wanted.

There stood a poor little Italian boy of some ten years of age, with a tiny cage in which were some white mice. The boy's pinched face told its own tale. He was evidently starving, and his thin frame shivered in his rags. He spoke a little broken English, but Anne Protheroe understood his own beautiful language, and he told his simple tale. He was one of those unfortunate children sold as a "speculation," who expose their tender years and souls when compelled to sell their bodies. He had been cruelly beaten by his master, who had made him, and his mother, and his sister, and his little brother, all his slaves, and compelled them out to beg. He had fallen ill with fever, and his cruel master had abandoned him, and he had made his way with difficulty to the town. He had lived all not of half-penny in his pocket, nor a morsel of food since that ill-omened morning. He was at a distance little more than a mile from his home, and the boy's hollow cough confirmed her opinion. She at once decided what to do. To turn the poor little fellow out on this bitter night was not to be thought of, and it was too late in the evening to find him a lodging elsewhere. She determined, therefore, to take the poor child into her own house. She ordered a bath and a supper for the little boy, and superintended all herself, and in another hour she had the satisfaction of seeing the little fellow comfortably established in a warm light room. His thin face still presented traces of the beauty so common among his sub children. There were large dark eyes, his curly chestnut hair, the well-chiseled nose, the mouthful of white teeth. The child looked almost like an angel as he chest, pale as marble, lay on the pillow. A sweet smile lighted up his face, and he thanked the kind "Signora" again and again as she fed him with some strong soup, and when, at last, she had seen him safely asleep, she felt him that she might take some refreshment herself after the fatigue of the day, and retire to rest.

The bells were ringing merrily, the stars shone out brightly, and the winter's night was lovely as its solemn stillness. Anne opened her window and looked out. The tower of the cathedral stood out in strong relief against the deep azure of the starry sky, and as she gazed upward at the firmament, she thought of the Saviour of the world in the rich of Bethlehem. As she pondered on the wonderful love of the Child in dying to be born a helpless Infant, her thoughts reverted to the poor little boy sleeping beneath her roof, and she thanked God that she had been the ministry of her well-regulated mind. No one could see her and not love her—there was something winning in her extreme benevolence and her simple dignity of manner. But it was the poor who were specially Anne Protheroe's friends. She was indefatigable in her devotion to them, and day after day she was to be seen in her little close fitting bonnet (that like a nun's hood), wending her way along the distinct and most dismal back streets of the town. Her visits were anxiously looked for, for she always brought material relief to the sick and words of comfort and sympathy and consolation to the dying and wretched. And now, as I have said, it was Christmas Eve. From early morning Anne Protheroe had been hard at work giving blankets, and coal tickets, and meat to a number of poor cottagers, the customary recipients of her bounty. At length the stream had come to an end, and she went into her sitting room for a cup of tea and a good warm at the fire. It was hitherto, cold, so she heaped on coals and made a cheerful blaze, and drew in her chair to enjoy her tea and rest.

Just then her servant put in her head to tell her that there was a poor child at the door who piteously begged to see her. "He speaks strange like, ma'am, and I think he's a foreigner by his speech; but one of these Christmas days he looks awful cold and starved too."

THE FEAST OF THE EPIPHANY.

BY MARY E. BLAKE.

Under Judea's midnight skies
The Virgin Mother clasped her child,
And as the Shepherd's wondering strife,
Above the hills the day-star rose,
With hearts of gladness and with accord,
With hearts of gladness and gifts to pray,
And meet with their unknown Lord.
To meet their Saviour face to face.

Wise men, from the day-star rise,
When, with some message swift to bless,
God's hand shall open your darkened skies,
And pierced their shroud of loneliness;
When from its calm the soul has rest
To whatever heights of hope and love,
And hears the trumpet, or feels a wave,
'Arise, and search!' for God is near.

Great, Lord, that with the message rings
Across the tranced silence round,
We rise as rose the Eastern Kings,
And leave all else till Thee set found.
Not wealth through long years of toil,
Though toil be long and rest be sweet,
Nor all our Christ seeks.

Time Found Through a Dream.

It was Christmas Eve. The snow lay thick on the ground, the trees were covered with heavy hoar frost, and every blade of grass sparkled in the sun as if studded with a thousand diamonds. Folks and it was something to wonder, and it was indeed just enough for those who had blazing fires and well-stocked larders; but alas! there were too many who had not seen a morsel of bread, or a shovelful of coals to warm their sad bosoms on this great feast of the Nativity, and many a longing look was directed by half starved men and women at the array of meat, mince pies and good cheer of all kinds displayed in the ample bosoms of the plump.

At the door of a substantial brick house in the vicinity of the Cathedral, a crowd of poor women and children waited for the Christmas dole of the charitable lady who dwelt within.

Miss Protoroe, or Mrs. Protheroe, as the old lady was usually called, was a plump lady of some sixty years standing. Her cheeks in the Cathedral precincts was the season and most cheerful of dwellings, and her door was ever open to the poor, the needy, and the distressed.

Anne Protheroe was the only child of one the modern, enemies of the ancient prebendal stalls of the Cathedral, and she had hardly ever ventured beyond the neighborhood of her mother's home. Her father had died when she was a child, and for the last six years she had tended her mother day and night in the suffering of a mortal disease. Only within a few minutes she had buried her in the cloister of the old Cathedral, and in the Cathedral itself she daily knelt part in the worship which Protestant man has substituted for the daily Sacrifice of the Church of Christ. The old lime-dotine edifice itself—its bells, its tinkling sides, and lofty clerestory; its choir where there rap-so-so, his gorgeous tomb the least popular of English kings; the monumental chapel of the unfortunate son of Henry VIII.; and the cloisters where many a monk of old sleeps in peace, waiting for the resurrection—all these objects were to Anne Protheroe an old familiar friends. Often, as a child, she had prepared the Cathedral, in imagination, with the monks, till she almost fancied she seen them kneeling in their cowls before the altars; often she had wondered how all was in those days, yet she had been brought up with a Protestant horror of Popish doings, and never doubted that now all was much better than in those dark times. Morning after morning saw her in her accustomed place, and humbly and fervently she worshipped God according to her knowledge, as she joined in the Protestant service. She was a sincere and fervent worshipper. She was a sinner, and I remember her prayers were a charming specimen of an old fashioned gentlewoman. Her light brown hair was arranged in quaint little stiff curls round her pretty pale face, her blue eyes beamed with kindliness, and her white cap and spotless collar, and her bonnet, with rich silk dress of some richer color, bespoke the neatness and economy of her well-regulated mind. No one could see her and not love her—there was something winning in her extreme benevolence and her simple dignity of manner. But it was the poor who were specially Anne Protheroe's friends. She was indefatigable in her devotion to them, and day after day she was to be seen in her little close fitting bonnet (that like a nun's hood), wending her way along the distinct and most dismal back streets of the town. Her visits were anxiously looked for, for she always brought material relief to the sick and words of comfort and sympathy

A MAN WITHOUT JOINTS.

Strange Story of a Man Who, for Twenty-seven Years, Has Been Unable to Move Hand or Foot.

LOCKPORT, N. Y., December 29th.—Jonathan Bass, the subject of the following sketch, lives about four miles east of Lockport, in the Niagara County. For twenty-seven years he has not left his bed, lying thereon unable to move a single joint. For the last fifteen years he has been totally blind. He is apparently perfectly healthy in every respect, and his mind is as active as any man's.

In 1848 Jonathan Bass, then a lad of eighteen, was living with Geo. W. Rogers, in Lockport, N. Y., in a house occupying the site of the present Journal office. The place was then but a small village. One evening while on his way to the pasture, above High street, he drove home Mr. Rogers' cows, young Bass was taken with a severe pain in the bottom of his right foot. When reaching the pain had left not, but upon it was a mel in the bottom of his shoe. Upon examination he could find no cause for the pain. This was evidently the starting point of a strange affliction. He had been subject for a number of days his foot and leg warbly ancles, and was exceedingly painful. Temporarily they grew better, but were always more or less troubled rom, when the chase of prodigious circumstances caused his property to be taken from the hands of the Sheriff, which was Asplenia's Ford, at Portsmouth, which he seize, or rather assemble the ever-increasing number of applicants for admission. In Rochester of that year the cholera had not disappeared, and Cardinal Cullen solemnly blessed and laid the corner-stone of the HANDSOMEST CONVENTUAL STRUCTURES IN ALL IRELAND.

But I must correct myself by saying that the Sisters do not, in the strict sense, reside in the abode of the Sisters, in thrust out of the world, which, in the case of the Sisters, is the industrial school, with the beautiful chapel, and the nun's dormitories, and the nun's refectory, and the nun's cemetery, and the nun's cloisters, and the nun's gardens, and the nun's fowl-yard, and the nun's pigs, and the nun's cows, and the nun's cabbages, and the nun's potatoes, and the nun's turnips, and the nun's everything else, which is the nun's property, and, as such, subject to the nun's control. Yet, I may say, that the Sisters are as much in the world as the nun's cows, and as much in the world as the nun's potatoes, and as much in the world as the nun's turnips, and as much in the world as

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 7, 1885.

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

God bless and direct through the intercession of St. Francis de Sales, under whose protection they are to be, the pious labors of the Catholic Journalists of the state of religion, for rights and duties of the Apostolic See, and adhere to its decisions and precepts with devotion and fidelity.—Pius IX.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the voice of the people addressed to the people, and by-the-bye (that seemingly trifling expression) from the world. In our time, religious journalism is not only a lawful and serious occupation, but quite a work well pleasing to the wisdom of society, but a work of apostolic zeal, which is, in fact, the only means of reaching Catholic journalism has to defend every inch of truth, whatever Divine law—never all, the Divine truth.—Bishop Ullathorne, Tablet, Nov. 1, 1884.

Editorial Notes.

— Messrs. Thos. B. Noonan & Co., of Boston, have just issued in beautiful white and blue binding a very handsome music-illustrated volume entitled "History of the Sodalities of the Blessed Virgin Mary," in which is given a remarkably full and interesting account of the rise and spread of this ennobling mode of honoring the ever Immaculate Mother of God. The work is for sale by all Catholic booksellers and we hope all Sodalists will peruse this precious memorial of our heavenly Patroness.

—We regret to announce the death of the Very Rev. Father Uhill, D. D., Priest of St. Dominic's Church, Hyde Street, San Francisco, England. The deceased Dominican was ordained in this city in 1855, but when he was on the point of departing for California the order was countermanded and he was assigned to the chair of Theology at Worchester. He was a native of Imola, near Italy, where he was born in 1826. May his soul rest in peace.

—As Eastern exchanges say that Rev. Thomas Pope Hodnett, rector of St. Mathew's Church, Chicago, is spoken of as the most likely to be nominated for the vacant Archbishopric of Oregon. Father Hodnett is distinguished for his great devotion to duty and his ardent love for Ireland—the land of his birth. He is also a whole-souled priest, a successful church builder, a prudent pastor, and popular alike with priests and people—hence he seems to combine in his character many of the virtues necessary in a Prelate, and, if he is appointed, the Catholics of Oregon will find in him a Bishop who will advance the interests of our holy faith.

—At Buenos Ayres the Apostolic Delegate Mgr. Matera, has been expelled from the territory of the Argentine Republic in consequence of his protests against the secularization of education. Escorted to the vessel by a deputation of the clergy, he had taken refuge at Monte Video; and the Argentine Government in a circular Note to its diplomatic representatives, expresses the naive hope "that this incident will not interrupt the good relations existing between it and the Holy See, relations which it is the interest both of Church and State to maintain with the most sincere cordiality."

—Right Rev. Eugene O'Connell, D. D., Bishop of Joppa, is sojourning in Philadelphia where he will remain until after the ceremony of the reception of the Pallium by Archbishop Ryan. A correspondent informs us that the venerable Prelate is the guest of Eleanor C. Donnelly, whose poetic genius has so often illumined the columns of the Monitor, and adds that "the condition and culture of Bishop O'Connell, combined with his singular humility and simplicity, elicit the admiration of his Philadelphia friends, and reflect credit upon California, the land of his adoption."

—On the 1st of August, 1887, will occur the first centenary of St. Alphonsus de Ligouri, who was canonized by Gregory XVI., and proclaimed Doctor of the Church by Pius IX. The association of young nobles founded in 1871 in the Saint's native city Venice, and under his patronage, has decided to establish a lasting memorial of the auspicious occasion. This will take the form of a hospice for the education and training of orphans, at which they will be brought up to various useful trades. A Church of St. Alphonsus will accompany the charitable institution. It is scarcely necessary to add that that excellent project has received the warm approbation of the Holy Father.

—We sincerely hope that the present State Legislature will make some suitable provision for admitting blind adults into the asylum at Berkeley, or else make an appropriation by which an institution can be established for their proper care and training in some suitable mechanical employment. There are a number of blind men and women in this city compelled to beg every day, when they ought to be comfortably provided for by the State in consequence of their affliction. We understand that a delegation of blind persons will go to Sacramento during this session in order to plead their cause, and we hope that human charity will same their prayers for protection to be granted.

—We heartily wish that the liberal spirit manifested by both Catholics and Protestants in the Eastern States would develop itself in California. We often read of such incidents as the following in our Eastern exchanges: "At Saint Leo's Catholic Church, New York, Monsignor Doney said that he was happy to say that in the three days that had elapsed since he asked that eleven members of the congregation should each give $6,000 to pay off the Church debt, three persons had each subscribed that amount. "It should be mentioned," he continued, "that one of the three was not a member of the congregation, but is a Protestant, to his honor be it said." May God reward the generosity of such good deeds and infuse a similar spirit into the Pacific coast people who have plethoric purses.

Assistant Rector for Stockton.

Rev. P. Marsiva, of Petaluma, has been appointed assistant rector to Father O'Connor of Stockton, vice Rev. F. Walsh, deceased.

Three Questions Answered.

Somebody has evidently been trying to corrupt the mind of a subscriber by reiterating a few of the many "modern investigations" which calumniate the Catholic Church. Hence he puts to us three times questions:

1. Was there ever a Council of Catholic Prelates in Rome, or out of it, that legislated in favor of monkery among the clergy?

ANSWER.—The single monosyllable "No," might be sufficient reply, but it is well to explain that although the Holy See, through her Pontiffs and Councils—has always insisted on the celibacy of the clergy, unsuccessful attempts have been made to break down the law by some individuals to whom virginity becomes irksome. Those Orphanists, at the Council of Nicea, tried to effect a change in this regard, but his efforts were entirely futile for the reason that the law of celibacy was a distinctive Christian mark of the priesthood.

It is true that in the early Christian age, when a sufficient number of continent and chaste men did not present themselves as disciples of our Redeemer, St. Paul permitted married man to be ordained, but when the occasion for such an innovation passed away, the law of virginity of the priesthood resumed its sway and has been strictly enforced by the strong Canon Law of the Catholic Church ever since. Hence no Council of Catholic Prelates, in Rome or elsewhere, ever legislated in favor of a married clergy—that remarkably dual mode of worshiping God and woman having been originated by the corruptious, Satanic system of soul-destroying schemers known as Luther, Lathar, Calvin, Henry VIII., and many other co-partners in crime, who, having legalized bigamy, divorce, infanticide and other immoralities—could not naturally be expected to restrain their individual passion—within the limits of continence.

II. Did the present Pope cancel the doctrine of Infallibility?

ANSWER.—No. Popes have never been known to "cancel" any dogma of Catholic faith when once defined and promulgated by the infallible voice of the successor of the Prince of the Apostles. In fact it is one of the many facts which go to prove the divine source of the Catholic Church and the power of the Son of God "to be with her all days" in the person of the Sovereign Pontiff, that no Pope has ever been guilty of heresy. The enemies of the Church delight in painting some of the Popes very black indeed, but when we consider the sources from whance such calumnies have emanated, and then read the lives of the Pontiffs thus libeled, any intelligent man must naturally conclude that if the individuals selected for anti-Catholic calumny were addicted to any of the crimes charged against them, they certainly did not reveal any repulsive traits of character either morally or ecclesiastically in their conduct as successors of St. Peter—whom "faith it was declared by Divinity itself should fail not." Every Pope has been pure and unfalsified in all matters pertaining to the faith "delivered to the Saints." They have stedfastly followed the footsteps of the first Pontiff in all matters concerning the fundamental principles of Catholic faith and in the definition of dogma rendered necessary of absolution by the errors promulgated by heresiarchs both before and after the creation of that system of religious error known under the generic name of Protestantism.

III. Why are the Popes Italians?

ANSWER.—It does not follow that because it raised on last New Year's Day, than it also raised on every previous dates of a New Year during the past 1884 years. In like manner it does not follow that because some recent Popes happened to be born in Italy, that the whole line of Pontiffs from St. Peter to Leo XIII., were of the same nationality.

The number of Popes in regular legitimate succession from the Prince of the Apostles to the present Pontiff is 258. Of that number 170 have been Romans, and 103 natives of other parts of Italy; 15 Frenchmen; 9 Greeks; 7 Germans; 5 Africans; 3 Africans; 3 Spaniards; 2 Dalmatians; 1 Hebrew; 1 Thracian; 1 Dutchman; 1 Portuguese; 1 Candiot; and 1 Englishman. Of these Pontiffs 62 are canonized as Saints, 33 having suffered martyrdom for the faith. Hence that the Popes were not "all Italians," must be readily conceded.

A Huge Roar.

We clip the following paragraph from the United Times of the 3rd inst., in order that Catholics may understand what religious stories are circulated concerning the Church by the secular press

Mrs. Jessie Lemont, expand Mormon lady, residing at American Fog, is the author of a remarkable story, which, if it be true, is perhaps the only woman who, literally speaking, ever met with adventures which might be called. It is said that in the early and daughter days of California she was married to a Mormon, and, although she was born and grew to womanhood. Mormon about the age of seventeen, a paternal uncle, but a few years her senior, coincided with his conjugal, one, gold ladies from the El Dorado of the west, and became desperately enamored of him. He sought her hand in marriage and was accordingly married to the church refused, because of the near relationship existing between them, to solemnize the marriage. Determined to have his way, he tried the power of gold to win the church to his way, and succeeded. The church, attracted by the weight in gold, was of the opinion that weight of gold against her in the balance, and the marriage was celebrated. He enjoyed husband still had sufficient of the world's goods to provide a comfortable home and they were married. They lived happily together and she bore to her husband seven children. In the course of time he died and she married again, Mr. Carter being her second husband. The above is fact and not fiction, as long witnesses can prove.

Persons outside the State, reading such rubbish as the above, might conclude that it was founded on fact, while the truth is that the whole story is the concoction of some individual who desired to impose on the credulity of those people who are ever ready to believe even the most ridiculous "yarns," so long as they are told against the Catholic Church.

The idea that a niece and uncle were permitted to marry on condition of the male sinner paying the wife's "weight in gold" into "the Church," is a fiction of such monstrous proportions as to entitle the inventor of it to a brass medal as the champion story-teller of the Pacific Coast.

—Number, the alleged Danghte of France, has been sufficiently punished by the Pope for embarking the French to return to the Catholic faith. Its sign himself "Chaire."

Three Questions Answered.

Somebody has evidently been trying to corrupt the mind of a subscriber by reiterating a few of the many "modern investigations" which calumniate the Catholic Church. Hence he puts to us three times questions:

I. Was there ever a Council of Catholic Prelates in Rome, or out of it, that legislated in favor of monkery among the clergy?

ANSWER.—The single monosyllable "No," might be sufficient reply, but it is well to explain that although the Holy See, through her Pontiffs and Councils—has always insisted on the celibacy of the clergy, unsuccessful attempts have been made to break down the law by some individuals to whom virginity becomes irksome. Those Orphanists, at the Council of Nicea, tried to effect a change in this regard, but his efforts were entirely futile for the reason that the law of celibacy was a distinctive Christian mark of the priesthood.

It is true that in the early Christian age, when a sufficient number of continent and chaste men did not present themselves as disciples of our Redeemer, St. Paul permitted married man to be ordained, but when the occasion for such an innovation passed away, the law of virginity of the priesthood resumed its sway and has been strictly enforced by the strong Canon Law of the Catholic Church ever since. Hence no Council of Catholic Prelates, in Rome or elsewhere, ever legislated in favor of a married clergy—that remarkably dual mode of worshiping God and woman having been originated by the corruptious, Satanic system of soul-destroying schemers known as Luther, Lathar, Calvin, Henry VIII., and many other co-partners in crime, who, having legalized bigamy, divorce, infanticide and other immoralities—could not naturally be expected to restrain their individual passion—within the limits of continence.

II. Did the present Pope cancel the doctrine of Infallibility?

ANSWER—No. Popes have never been known to "cancel" any dogma of Catholic faith when once defined and promulgated by the infallible voice of the successor of the Prince of the Apostles. In fact it is one of the many facts which go to prove the divine source of the Catholic Church and the power of the Son of God "to be with her all days" in the person of the Sovereign Pontiff, that no Pope has ever been guilty of heresy. The enemies of the Church delight in painting some of the Popes very black indeed, but when we consider the sources from whance such calumnies have emanated, and then read the lives of the Pontiffs thus libeled, any intelligent man must naturally conclude that if the individuals selected for anti-Catholic calumny were addicted to any of the crimes charged against them, they certainly did not reveal any repulsive traits of character either morally or ecclesiastically in their conduct as successors of St. Peter—whom "faith it was declared by Divinity itself should fail not." Every Pope has been pure and unfalsified in all matters pertaining to the faith "delivered to the Saints." They have stedfastly followed the footsteps of the first Pontiff in all matters concerning the fundamental principles of Catholic faith and in the definition of dogma rendered necessary of absolution by the errors promulgated by heresiarchs both before and after the creation of that system of religious error known under the generic name of Protestantism.

III. Why are the Popes Italians?

ANSWER—It does not follow that because it raised on last New Year's Day, than it also raised on every previous dates of a New Year during the past 1884 years. In like manner it does not follow that because some recent Popes happened to be born in Italy, that the whole line of Pontiffs from St. Peter to Leo XIII., were of the same nationality.

Catholic Education Across the Bay

It will be of interest to many if not to all of our readers, at the beginning of the new year, to learn something of the good work that is going on in Oakland and its vicinity under the fostering care of the zealous priests there, and through the labors of the Religious Orders established in Alameda county. We refer to the Christian Brothers and Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, the Sisters of the Holy Names have 200 girls on their rolls, and day scholars, and the Christian Brothers, under Brother Hugh, conduct a day school in the adjoining building, with about the same number of scholars. To the Priests, the schools of Rev. Father McNally are attended by about 200 girls, who are taught by the Sisters of St. Joseph, and 200 boys under the care of the Christian Brothers. It will be seen, therefore, that at these two places alone, 800 children are receiving a sound education combined with pure Catholic teaching and excellent training.

The Sisters of the Sacred Heart convent have about 85 young lady boarders and some day scholars, and their pupils are noted for the excellence of the studies and high standard of proficiency which they attain there. At Brooklyn, in Father Gleeson's parish, two schools are flourishing—one for boys, with an attendance of 80 scholars under the Christian Brothers, and the other at the convent of the Sisters who teach girls. At Temescal the Sisters of the Holy Name give instruction to about 150 girls and small boys in Rev. Father Serda's parish, and there is a strong society of St. Vincent de Paul there. Rev. Father Gleeson also has a school in Alameda, under the care of the Sisters of Notre Dame, which receives 150 pupils. Last but not least comes St. Joseph's Academy, for the foundation of which supplies the teachers for boys at St. Mary's and at St. Patrick's, as also for the Brooklyn school, so that counting their own pupils and those taught outside by the Brothers, they are, under the banner of the venerable De La Salle, engaged in educating over six hundred boys in Oakland and its vicinity alone.

At the Academy there were about 85 boarders last term and about thirty day scholars, and here every branch from the primer to the higher mathematics, Latin, Greek, Spanish, French, German, Drawing, Music, Telegraphy, Natural Philosophy, Rhetoric, Bookkeeping and Commercial subjects, are taught by the Brothers and a corps of experienced professors. The music, both vocal and instrumental, is quite on a par with the instruction and the academy. Orchestra and soloists came out at the last examination with a high order of selections which surprised the visitors to the exhibition and examination.

Enough has been shown to give evidence that between 1500 and 1600 children are receiving the highest education and the most careful Christian Catholic training in Oakland, as a strong offset to the public schools, institutions which turn out many thousands of children yearly, either devoid of any kind of religion or sprinkled with a smattering of what Dr. Brownson used to call "emotion" in the place of dogma and doctrine, and at the mercy of every "isms" and "ology" that may happen to crack their—across their future paths in life.

Topics of the Times.

— The highest price ever paid for a work of art was $125,000, which was given in 1882 for a picture of the Blessed Virgin from the hand of the great Spanish artist, Murillo.

— We often read of churches erected in foreign parts in consequence of vows made in time of danger. It is not generally known, perhaps, that the Church of the Assumption, Philadelphia, was erected by the late Father Cartier in consequence of a vow made at sea in a storm. So says the Western Watchman.

— Two important conversions are announced in the English papers, that of the Rev. William Bernard Ullson, a member of the "Cowley Fathers" residing at Oxford; and that of Mr. Algar Labouchere Thorold, only son of the Protestant Bishop of Rochester, and, an undergraduate of Christ Church, Oxford.

— The Cardinals of the Sacred Congregation of the Index have placed upon the list of prohibited books a pamphlet by G. H. Savarese, entitled, "The excommunication of an idea—A reply to the Cardinal Vicar of Rome. Rome, 1884." It would seem from a parenthesis inserted in the document (Infelio usurpato) that by the omission of this page of his book has gratuitously assumed the title of Monsignor.

— In the concluding portion of Bishop McQuaid's instructive sermon which we publish this week, that eminent advocate of Christian education gives expression to this terse truth: "The school for the child is as necessary as the Church for the parent." This sentiment should sink deep into the hearts of all Catholics who want to see the faith preserved in the souls of Catholic children.

—The Rt. Rev. Bishop of Fulda, and the Rt. Rev. Bishop of Ermeland, have been chosen members of the German Reichstag. Whilst the military members appeared in full uniform, and the Prussian Deputies in silk hats, the two Bishops were not averse to putting on their purple cassocks. Besides this, the Bishops have been appointed members of a committee for ecclesiastical affairs, to act with a number of Protestant Very Rev. superintendents; in how long these Catholic Prelates will find it compatible with their dignity to act in concert with these ministers, time will tell.

—The name of the person to be consecrated as Coadjutor Bishop to Bishop Tuigg, of Pittsburg, Penn., is expected soon from Rome. The name sent to Rome for consideration is the Rev. Jos. P. Wall, Rector of St. Patrick's Church, Pittsburg; the Very Rev. Richard Phelan, Rector of St. Peter's Church, Allegheny City, and Vicar-General, and the Rev. F. L. Tobin, Rector of St. James' Church, Pittsburg. Father Wall was Theologian to Archbishop Seghers, of Oregon, at the late Plenary Council. Bishop Tuigg continues in a very dangerous state of health.

—The recent inhuman outrage by bigots at Contadin, in Italian, was even more terrible than at first reported. They not only stoned the village church, but burned and ordered the priest to call where the money collected for the poor of the parish was kept. He refused, and the brigands threatened him with the torture if he did not be persuaded in his refusal. Then they filled his furnace with straw, lighted it, and bind the priest onto the top. His screams were heard all over the village, but the villagers were too much frightened to interfere. The priest was burned to death. The brigands then plundered his house, and several others, and disappeared. No arrests have been made.

—One of the most startling features in the Pennsylvania oil region is the number of deserted villages, which have been made by the exhaustion of oil wells. Pithole is a remarkable example of the oil excitement. Barely twenty years ago, it stood a city of 20,000 inhabitants, with churches, theatres, hotels, daily newspapers, pipe lines, railroad and telegraph offices, all the appurtenances of a busy city; now, says a recent traveller throughout that region, "all that appears is a village, the diminished wing of an old hotel, some decaying timbers, and a little clearing in the forest, so saturated with oil and salt water that nothing will grow upon it. A poor, demented old man is now the only inhabitant."

—A painful feeling has been created, not only in Alsace Lorraine, but throughout the Catholic world generally by the suppression, on the part of the Statthalter, of the only two Catholic organs, l'Ami du Clergé and le Messager, which were almost the sole representatives of Catholic literature. They were accused of not discussing public affairs with "sufficient objectivity." The Germania, the Kolnische Volkszeitung, and other Catholic Prussian papers complain bitterly of this piece of insolence. The Amerikanische Katholikenkalender, which however is published in Carlsruhe is still left, but "the sword of Damocles is hanging over its head." It is very doubtful whether the Catholics of the annexed provinces will be able to start a fresh organ.

—A Chicago paper says that a consignment of corn was received in that city one day last week, from a point in Nebraska, which sold at a price which yielded the shipper 10½ cents per bushel after deducting freight rates. If the cost of handling and the shipper's profit be subtracted from that price it is not likely that the farmer received more than nine cents a bushel. For this amount he was obliged to haul his corn to the railway, probably a distance of eight or ten miles, perhaps over bad roads. He could not have taken more than forty bushels to a two-horse wagon load, which would yield him $3 20, out of which he must deduct the wages of one man, the support of two horses, and the wear and tear for a whole day's work. The price he received for his corn would scarcely have covered the cost of hauling it to the market.

THE ROSARY.

WHAT THE SAINTS, DOCTORS AND PONTIFFS HAVE SAID ABOUT THE ROSARY, AND HOW CHARLEMAGNE'S TRY FEATHERS THAT BEFOR 1885.

FIRST ARTICLE.

Let us hear those who have authority to speak "in the midst of the people of God, in the assembly of the Saints and before the multitude of the elect." Who are they? Who have such authority, and who have a right to command our attention? The Sovereign Pontiffs, who are the first oracles of truth; the Saints, who are the first teachers of devotion; and the Doctors, who are particularly raised up in the Church by God to point out works of piety. We will first listen to what the Saints say about the greatest and "most divine of Mary's devotions"—the Rosary, and after that we will be better prepared to understand the full meaning and force of the expressions of the highest representatives of the Mandied on earth, the Sovereign Pontiffs—the first Doctors of the age in which they lived—on the same sublime subject. The majority of the Saints, but especially the primaval ones and those, best known throughout the Church since the establishment of the Rosary (we do not intend to introduce here to say extent the Saints beatified, or holy persons of the Dominican Order to whom the Rosary was their very life, we will at some future time write a Rosary of their lives for the Rosary), have said not only the most beautiful things on the Rosary, but have also practiced it themselves, and have strongly recommended it most earnestly to the faithful, particularly by their example. The great Doctors of the Church, the Popes of Rome, the glory and model of Bishops, eulogized to the highest possible degree the Rosary when he declared it to be the "most divine devotion;" he recited it every day on his knees! He was so zealous in propagating the hore-dit, that in his admirable instructions given in his Pastoral Letter to the people of the city and diocese of Milan, he took care to say to each one: "Thou shalt recite the Chaplet every day, or if not that often, at least as often as it will be possible to do so." He required all employed in his service "to go on the first Sunday of the month to Communion, and to assist at the procession which took place on that day in his Church, in honor of our Lady of the Rosary." He placed all the colleges, religious houses, congregations and confraternities under his care under the special protection of the Most Blessed Mother of God, and expressly recommends them to recite the Rosary.

Furthermore, his extraordinary devotion for the Holy Virgin caused him to consecrate to her honor a special altar in his metropolitan cathedral, there, too, he erected the confraternity of the sick of the Rosary, and procured from the Sovereign Pontiff for it all the indulgences and all the privileges granted to the Rosary, which he placed at the Minerva in Rome (the principal Church of the Dominicans). In relation to the sacred Rosary he said, in his last letter: "It is but right that the devotion of the Rosary should be established for the whole of the Diocese of Milan in the Church of Mother Church to which the faithful ought from respect." But what more shall we say of the Rosary? Is it not the holy Rosary? In his provincial synods he recommended to his suffragans to be crowned with the Rosary, and to call upon them "daily recitation of the Rosary amongst all classes of the people, and particularly the soldiers." (Act. Eccles. Mediolan)

St. Francis of Sales, that profound man of God, who was called from his cradle to his love of the Rosary thus the preceding Saints and Doctor. He thus writes to a lady living in the world: "I desire you to recite the Rosary daily as devoutly as you can, either at Mass or at some other suitable time; make much of it, for it is a holy and not simply chaplet, for he means the entire Rosary. In forty seventh sermon on prayer, he mentions three classes of divisions of prayers, viz: the obsecration, the recommended and the voluntary, and he places the Rosary in the first rank of the three recommended prayers, and says all good persons to wear their hands publicly, "Carry," says he, "the Rosary or chaplet on your arm, and wherever you go and what which you, as a signal the desire you have of being the servant of our Saviour and of his Sacred Mother." He himself always carried his beads on his cincture.

St Jane de Chantal testifies in the following manner with regard to his reciting the Rosary: "I learned from him himself," says she, "that about the same time the was then quite young he had pledged himself by vow to recite every day the Rosary (not simply the chaplet), in order that he might be delivered from a terrible temptation of despair by which he had been for some time sorely assailed. He employed one hour in that holy exercise, for he made meditation on every mystery, and he was so particular about not failing to perform that duty, that whenever the pressure of business prevented him from attending to it during the day, he would carry his chaplet wound around his wrist so that he might be reminded of fulfilling his obligation at least before retiring to rest at night." When he was so sick that he could not speak, he had it recited in his presence by some one so that he might follow them mentally. The same Saint adds in her depositions "He was punctual in assisting every month, with his house in the hospital, at the procession of the confraternity of the most holy Rosary to which he belonged."

St. Francis himself declares in one of his sermons that he was in the habit of reciting the Rosary because I have for a long time belonged to that confraternity, as does a'so many everyday people, but I do not recite it. It is also related of him that "as he was on his point of dying, and just after he had received Extreme Unction, he begged that his Rosary might be adjusted in its place on him in order that if might serve him as a solid buckler to turn aside the darts hurled at him by the most evil one."

The illustrious master of the spiritual life, the most devout servant of Mary, St. Alphonsus de Liguori, says in one of his sermons "He who is truly devout to the most holy Virgin can be called blessed even in this world, and can be certain (morally) of reaching Heaven." He that shall find me, shall find life, and shall have salvation from the Lord." (Proverb. cap. 8). But who can find Mary? He who loves her and honors her with a special worship. But amongst all the homages due to the Queen of Heaven, none can be more pleasing to her than the Rosary. Oh! what beautiful hopes they have of forty years who recite it daily with love and perseverance. The devils are alarmed by St. Dominic, who was at the time answering a possessed person, made the exclamation: "Cursed be the woman who invented the Rosary!" Let us be determined to declare that he who persevers in devotion to Mary shall not be damned, because acknowledge that we are obliged for such a servant. . . . Never fail then, my beloved brethren, to recite daily with love and confidence the Rosary." In his Moral Theology, too, the Saint warmly exhorts pastors to urge their flocks to recite every day in their houses the three parts of the Rosary. In another place he earnestly entreats the missionaries and preachers "to recommend to the faithful devotion to Mary, and especially that of the Rosary."

In another sermon (parole di Scimol. Inn. ogni giorno) he says: "Let us then all place amongst all the homages to be given by us to Mary in seeking her protection, the Rosary, and the Rosary, or at least of the third part of it." He repeats the same thing in his "Rule of Life for a Christian," and he was most careful to practice himself, notwithstanding his many pressing occupations, what he in the aforesaid place recommends to others. He read to his life that "the Rosary was his special devotion, and that he never failed to say for a single day, or to that, when prevented his last sickness, to practice it, and even on that day he recited as usual his chaplet between two," as his old age expressly, "he had the habit of reciting the chaplet several times a day, from morning till night his beads might be seen in his hands. It happened one day that the Saint did not distinctly recollect that he had recited his beads, and when a priest who was with him asked him if he had and who had certainly said the Rosary with him) assured him that he had already recited it." He would say: "Venite nos ewen that from this devotion depends my salvation." It is also stated of that good Holy, as he was on occasion by pre-elected from a severe attack of lethargy and was in danger also to speak that he, all of a sudden and contrary to all expectations, when the brother who was attending on him and just for the purpose of arousing him, if possible, from his deep stupor, Mon-sieur, shall we recite the Rosary?" he opened his eyes and began to recite it

The Colonizing Spirit in Europe.

The "moving spirit" at present giving vitality to European affairs seems to be colonization, and the earnestness and activity with which this different crowed heads are seeking to secure other countries to their national supremacy is an interesting study. It is a season for—a season, indeed, when Europe has been entered into between France and Germany, with accordance with which France is allowed to colonize Tonquin, Morocco, Tonquin and Germany, while respecting the French possessions on Africa, are allowed to colonize Africa, and anywhere not affecting French interests. The number of the German marine infantry is also to be increased, showing the active colonial policy. This movement is intended to checkmate the colonial schemes of England.

As an index of the enmumeration caused by counter colonization schemes on the part of the crowned heads of Europe, we append a few extracts from the leading newspapers indicating the ferment into which colonization has thrown them.

The London Daily News devotes a special article to the decision of the Powers to legislate the proposals of England relative to Egyptian finances. The attitude, the News asserts, is prompted by Prince Bismarck, who is inverted at Mr Gladstone's policy, and desires to overthrow his Cabinet. Prince Bismarck, the News says, wanted England to assess Egypt, and thus enable Germany to pursue her colonizing policy unhampered. France and Austria willingly support Prince Bismarck in this matter, for they consider England's attitude in Egypt to be the sum of all evils, and of territory which they intend to make to other quarters of the globe.

The Journal des Débats of Paris takes the American delegates to the African Conference to task for proposing that the Congo country shall be neutral territory. It confess profound gratification that the French delegate, Baron de Courcel, prevented the adoption of this project, and protestes the opposition now dold and loud.

The Independance Belge of Brussels says congratulations belong to the cousin of the New Hebridee Islands by Great Britain to France will soon be contested. The islands in question are in the Pacific, not far to the east of New Caledonia.

The Paris Temps is in favor of Italy and Germany sending colonists into the Red Sea, equally with England. It says that France insists upon the latter's claims to Egypt.

What the outcome of this colonization commotion may be it is difficult to determine, but that it will stir the dormant lines in many parts of the world is a foregone conclusion.

— An uprising of the socialistic element in Chicago seems to be agitating the people of that city to a great extent. It is unknown that a number of armed companies of socialists are regularly drilling in that city, and they number about 700 men. They are equipped with breech-loading rifles, and drill according to Prussian learning. The entire practice is contrary to the State law, and in view of this fact and owing to the recent threats by some of the socialist leaders, a volunteer guard has been placed in the armories of the National Guard.

Bishop England's Works.

We have indeed ever paid for a work of this kind, and we have received a few copies of the first volume of a new and very acceptable edition of Bishop England's works, edited by Hugh F. McKinnon, a gentleman who is evidently well qualified for the position he has assumed.

The works of Bishop England will be read and re-read for centuries to come in America, as his counsels will serve to keep alive the fire of faith and patriotism in the breasts of all who listen to his sage advice. So impressed was O'Connell with the power of Bishop England's pen, that when the Irish Liberator consolidated his struggle for Catholic emancipation, in which Bishop England was a powerful ally, O'Connell remarked: "With Bishop England at my back, I would not fear the whole world before me."

The present edition is handsomely printed and bound, and copies can be purchased from A. Waldteufel, 737 Market street. The subjects treated in the volume before us are "Memoir of Bishop England," "Memorials," "Epocha of Irish History," "The Treasures of the Scholar," "Dueling," "Classical Education," "Descent of Jesus into Hades," "The Character of Washington," "Discourse before Congress," "Religion of American Indians," "Pen Pictures of Rome," "The Waldenses," "Historical Sketches of Germany, Sweden, Norway, Russia, European Turkey and the Greek Schism," "St. Peter's Roman Episcopate," "The Irish Franchise." Volume II. will contain the Pastoral Letters and other pieces, and is sold for $2.50.

A note from our regular Irish correspondent brings the sad information that the gifted lady whose nom de plume of Ethna Carbery, has been "laid low" in sickness for several weeks, but she hopes to resume her letters to the Monitor with the next issue.

DEATH OF FATHER DELANEY, C. M.

The Fathers of the Congregation of the Mission have lost by death, during the past year, over the loss of one of their members, Rev. Delany, C. M., having departed this life on Sunday morning, the 28th ult. Deceased was born in Ireland, in the county of Longford, he entered the College of Tiny Lady of Mercy, and after a long and fervent novitiate he took the usual vows of Religion, and became a member of the Congregation of the Mission. He was ordained Priest in 1852, he proceeded to Germany, where he was Director of the Congregation of the Mission, and was called to the Vice-Visitorship of the Congregation of the Mission, and on the 12th of August, 1857, he was appointed Visitor of the Province of Ireland, and he continued in that office for the first Monday 8.30, Vincentia College, Los Angeles, Cal. Deceased was a man of great zeal, that dread and burning disease, consumption, which had threatened his life for three years, he has been unable to duty. He was a man of great piety, he was a man of sweet and consistent, that when his death was announced, he was called to the Vice-Visitorship of the Congregation of the Mission, and on the 12th of August, 1857, he was appointed Visitor of the Province of Ireland, and he continued in that office for the first time

Farm and Home.

A RECOLLECTION.

My memory points unto a happy hour,
Chief of by a father's and mother's love,
And by such tender and yet so fresh ties as
The briefest and bright of childhood. I may wish
Where'er I will, but love shall have come
Unto a spot so loved; shall seek and find
Such tears as I have shed, when turned from
That home unto the world of men! I rod
The first page of life's error on that day,
And thought of dear kindness over and
Made the dark future seem a thing of dread;
A doubtful future, fraught with misery,
Life that year from Eden doomed to stray.
I paused later a world I knew not, nor could love.

Women's Ill Health.

"Why are women so a rule less healthy than men? For a variety of reasons," said a doctor whose practice lies mostly in the direction of the fashionable and is largely among the fair sex. "Above all, the female body is molded of finer clay than the male one, and is therefore correspondingly easier to injure. Then, again, women are not chosen the robes of hygiene so uniformly as men do, but almost every woman daily, nay, hourly, infringes them. Furthermore, women ignore too much the old saying: 'Mens sana in corpore sano.' Either of body and mind, a necessary accompliant of vigorous health, is almost unknown in the majority of the fair sex, and one they have passed their 20th year and their animal spirits have quieted down.

"Elucidate a trifle more fully, doctor?

"Why, you know as well as I, to begin with, that women do not eat and drink nor do they dress rationally. They nibble too often of food, and then they keep their stomachs constantly employed so that they cannot digest any one meal properly; regular leisure moments nor the requisite time to prepare nor to digest. Or, if they do, it is called that note as a dissolvent on the food taken. By too frequent eating women never get up any rational appetite, and their digestion must necessarily weaken after a time. Then, as to dress; why, it's a story as old as the hills that it does never conform to the laws of health and comfort. So I won't say anything more about that. But the gravest cause of the poor health of our American womanhood is the lack of invigorating employment. They lold too much; there is not enough to keep their moral and physical forces on the qui vive, so to speak. Their brains and their whole muscular system become sluggish, and at last incapable of sustaining as much strain as a baby could stand. One thing ought to be taught our girls more than another: The beneficent results of constant employment, be it physical or mental, and the absolute noxiousness of inactivity. More outdoor exercise, more useful employment in the house, more interchange of ideas and opinions—this is what our women need."

A Common Mistake.

In asking a man questions concerning his wife, you should not say "How is your lady?" This is vulgarity and invariably betrays lack of cultivation. The term wife is far more beautiful and the appropriate and refined whatever may be said to the contrary. Suppose a lady were to say instead of "my husband," "my gentleman," or "mamma we were in great of Mrs. Fitzsimmerice and her gentleman." The thing would be positively indecorous, and in the verse is some the loss so of rightly considered. A man's wife is his wife, and not his lady. The term should be tabooed.

To Clean Pots, Kettles and Tins.

Boil a double handful of hay or grass in a new iron pot before attempting to cook with it; scrub out with soap sand; then set on full of clean water, and let it boil hall an hour. After this pot may use it without fear. As soon as you empty a pot or frying-pan of that which has been cooked in, fill with hot or cold water (but not boiling) set back upon the fire to scald thoroughly. Your tins should stand near the fire with boiling water in them, to which has been dissolved a spoonful of soda, for an hour; then be scoured inside with soft soap; afterward rinsed with hot water. Keep them clean by rubbing with sifted wood ashes, or whitening. Copper utensils should be cleaned with brickdust and flannel. Never set a vessel in the pot-closet without cleaning and wiping it thoroughly. If grease be left in it, it will grow rancid. If an odor vet, it is apt to rust.

Forbidden Fruits.

Mr. Noel, a French agriculturist, speaking of the introduction of the potato into France, says: "This vegetable was viewed by the people with extreme disfavor when first introduced, and many expedients were adopted to induce them to use it, but without success. In rule did Louis XVI. wear its flower in his buttonhole, and in vain two samples of the tubers distributed among the farmers; they gave them to their pigs, but would not use them themselves. At last Parmentier, the chemist, who well knew the nutritive properties of the potato, and was anxious to see it in use in general use, hit upon the following expedient: He planted a good breadth of potatoes at Sablons, close to Paris and paid great attention to their cultivation. When the roots were nearly ripe, he put notices around the field that all persons who stole some of the potatoes would be prosecuted with the utmost rigor of the law. No sooner were the rotic thus forbidden, as it were, by authority, than all persons, seemed eager to eat them, and in a fortnight "the whole crop was stolen, and without a doubt, eaten. The new vegetable became been found to be excellent food, was soon after cultivated in every part of the kingdom."

The "No" of Family Finance.

Ask yourself if some of the debts preying you could not have been avoided had you said "No" at the proper time and place? In fact, look for the mistakes made in the past, and try to avoid a repetition of them in the future. Forget or become totally blind to what your neighbor may be doing in the way of his horses, carriages, harness, furniture and other luxuries and convenience, until you can say "I am out of debt, and there is money in my pocket or deposited in the bank to pay for what I want," and by that time you wants will be limited to the amount of spare cash on hand.

There is a pleasure in self-denial that a majority of our people never experienced, and it comes to us gloriously, and is extremely satisfactory to one practising it when he can say "I love no man, and at the same time has $100 in his pocket, but waiting some artistic cooing $200, he refuses to purchase until, through self-denial, the other hundred is obtained. It requires some resolution, and even a system of living and dealing, but it has this recommendation—it is perfectly safe.

Syrup of Figs.

Nature's own true Laxative. Pleasant to the Palate, acceptable to the Stomach, harmless in its action, unlike in its action. Cures habitual Constipation, Biliousness, Indigestion and Sick Headache. Cleanses the system, purifies the blood, regulates the Liver and acts on the Bowels. Breaks up Colds, Chills and Fevers, and Strengthens the organs, so which it acts. Rather than Tinctures, Bitters, Pills, Powders, Pills, salts and drastic purgatives of bottles free, and large bottles for sale by all Druggists.

BIGGEST THINGS ON EARTH.

The highest range of mountains, are the Himalayas, their mean elevation being estimated at from 16,000 to 18,000 feet. The loftiest mountains in Mount Everest or Gourisankar of the Himalaya range, having an elevation of 29,002 feet above the sea level. The largest theatre is the New Opera House in Paris. It covers nearly three acres of ground. Its cubit mass is 4,267,000. It cost about 100,000,000 francs. The largest city in the world is London. Its population numbers 3,020,271 souls. New York, with a population of about 1,250,000, comes fifth in the list of great cities. The largest suspension bridge would span the East side on between New York and Brooklyn. The length of the main span is 1,500 ft. 6in. the entire length of the bridge is 5,989 feet. The tallest active volcano is Tomboro—"smoking mountain"—thirty-five miles north-west of Puebla, Mexico. It is 17,784 feet above the sea level, and has a crater three miles in circumference and 1,000 feet deep. The largest island in the globe, which is also regarded as a continent, is Australia. It is 2,500 miles in length from east to west, and measures 2,950 miles from north to south. It covers 2,984,267 square miles. The longest span of wire in the world is used for a telegraph in India over the river Kistnah, between Beacrah and Bectanagrum. It is more than 6,000 feet long, and is stretched between two high posts, each of which is 1,200 feet high. The largest ship in the world is the "Great Eastern." She is 680 feet long, 83 feet broad, and 60 feet deep; being 22,927 tons burden, 18,915 gross, and 13,344 net register. She was built at Millwall, on the Thames, and was launched January 31st, 1857. The largest university is Oxford, in England, in the city of the same name. City has sent from London. It consists of twenty-one colleges and five halls. Oxford can boast of learning as early as the time of Edward the Confessor. University College claims to have been founded by Alfred. The most remarkable park in the world is the park of Copenhagen in Denmark. The inclosure contains about 4,200 acres, and is divided by a small river.

The largest pleasure ground in America, and one of the largest in the world, is Fairmont Park, Philadelphia, which contains 2,740 acres. The largest tuft in the world is the great bell of Moscow, at the foot of the Kremlin. In circumference at the bottom is nearly 66 feet, and its height more than 21 feet. In its stoutest part it is 23 inches thick, and its weight has been computed to be 443,772 pounds. It has never been hung, and was probably cast on the spot where it now stands. A piece of the bell is broken off. The fracture is supposed to have been occasioned by water having been thrown upon it when heated by the bullet, ing erected over it being on fire. The highest Monolith is the Obelisk at Karnak, in Egypt. Karnak is on the east bank of the Nile, near Luxor, and occupies part of the site of ancient Thebes. The Obelisk is ascribed to Hatasu sister of Pharoah Thothmes III., who reigned about 1,000 B. C. Its whole length is 127 feet, its weight 400 tons. Its height, without pedestal, is 105 feet 10 inches. The longest tunnel in the world is that of St. Gothard, on the line of railway between Lucerne and Milan. The summit of the tunnel is 980 feet below the surface of Andermatt, and 6,600 feet beneath the peak of Castelhorn, of the St. Gothard group. The tunnel is 26½ feet wide, and 19 feet 10 inches from the floor to the crown of the arched roof. It is 9 miles long, 72 miles longer than the Mount Cenis tunnel. The biggest tree in the world are the Mammoth Trees of California. One of groves in Tulare County, according to measurement made by members of the State Geological Survey, was shown to be 276 feet, 106 feet in circumference at base, and 76 at a point 12 feet above the ground. Some of the trees are 370 feet high, and 34 feet in diameter. Some of the largest that have been felled indicate an age of from 2,000 to 2,500 years.

The largest inland Sea in the Caspian, lying between Europe and Asia. Its length is length 760 miles, its breadth 280 miles, and its area 180,000 square miles. Great Salt Lake, in Utah, which may be properly termed an inland sea, is about 80 miles long and has a varying breadth of from 20 to 35 miles. Its surface is 4,200 feet above the level of the sea, whereas the surface of the extensive Caspian sea is 84 feet below the ocean level. The largest Empire in the world is that of Great Britain, comprising 8,657,000 square miles, more than a third part of the land on the globe, and embracing under its rule nearly a sixth part of the population of the world. In territorial extent the United States ranks third, containing 3,580,242 square miles including Alaska; in population it ranks tenth, with its 40,000,000 of people. Russia ranks second in extent, having 6,302,940 square miles. The largest library is the Bibliotheque National, in Paris, founded by Louis XIV. It contains 1,600,000 volumes. The collection of engravings exceeds 1,200,000; contained in some 10,000 volumes. The portraits number about 400,000. The building which contains these treasures is adorned on the Rue Richelieu, its length is 560 feet, and its breadth 139 feet. The most remarkable Whirlpool is the Maelstrom, off the north-west coast of Norway and south west of Moskenoes, the most southerly of the Lofoden Isles. It was once supposed to be unfathomable, but the depth has been shown not to exceed twenty fathoms. The whirlpool is nearly six miles in a circumference, but when the wind is north-west it often attains great fury and becomes exceedingly dangerous. Under strong gales the Maelstrom has been shown by official statistics to run at the rate of 20 miles an hour.

The last survivor in the Mammoth Cave, Edmondson County, Kentucky. It is near Green River, six miles from Cape Cely, and is about 25 miles from Bowling Green. The cave consists of irregular chambers, some of them very large, and connected by small levels. Sions of these are traversed by navigable branches of the subterranean Echo river. Blind fish are found in its waters. Among the most remarkable natural Echoes are—that of Eagle's Nest, on the banks of Kilarney, in Ireland, where it repeats a single call until it seems to be sounded from a hundred instruments, and that on the bank of the Nahr, between Hingen and Coblentz, which repeats a sound 17 times. The most remarkable artificial echo known is that of the Castle of Simonetta, about two miles from Milan. It is occasioned by the existence of two parallel walls of considerable length. In repeating the report of a pistol sixty times. The largest desert is that of the Sahara, a vast region of Northern Africa, extending from the Atlantic ocean on the west to the valley of the Nile on the east. Its length from east to west is 3,000 miles, its average breadth is 500 miles, its area 2,000,000 square miles. The town of Timbuctoo, about 300 miles from the Niger, is almost surrounded by desert, but at a distance of a few days journey to the northeast and north are the oases of Mabrouk and Fezzan. Rain falls in torrents in the Sahara at intervals of five, ten and twenty years. In summer the heat during the day is excessive, but the nights are always cool. In winter the temperature is sometimes below the freezing point.

No Sympathy for the Drunkard's Wife.

Not at all sympathetic but quite comical, was the hard-headed Indiana judge who, after all these remarks to a recent decision in a divorce suit: "You voluntarily chose a drunkard for a husband, and you should endure the fate of a drunkard's wife. He failure to keep a pledge of reformation made before marriage was fully equivalent to a drunkard, you must stand by and content with the sacred relationship." Boston Transcript.

WHAT IS MALARIA?

A Plan to Successfully Combat With a Disease that Defies Analysis.

The once accepted theory that malaria flourished only in wet, swampy localities, and followed the course of large tracts of land, is no longer tenable, as the majority of its victims are now numbered among inhabitants of cities and long established settlements.

But laying aside all questions of theory we come face to face with the vital question, what is malaria? and how is it to be successfully vanquished? To the first inquiry we reply, seed, seed, seed (bad air) from which the word is derived, explains its character exactly. Bad air taken into the lungs and disseminated through the blood, produces the chill, followed by intense fever, malarial fever, diphtheria and other dangerous diseases follow. Equally bad effects from contaminated water, bad drainage, or continued over-exertion, so that all cause loss of nerve life, the essence of physical well-being.

Malarial poison cannot be detected by chemical tests, and is only known by its effects upon the system.

One of the worst cases of malaria was that of Mrs. C. F. Hoshen, of 67 Fifth St., Troy, N. Y. Her experience, of great value, is given, that others may reap the benefit. She suffered not only from malaria, her complication being of a nature to baffle her, but also from enlargement of the liver. Her appetite was ravenous, especially for acids. "Our day" says Mrs. Hoshen, "my physician asked for a sample of fluid for chemical analysis. I was then passing 7 ounces a day, which he reported was a very bad, and that he could do no more for me, as I had all the indications of bright's disease. Urine soon as specialists in Albany, Buffalo Ave., New York, who recommended electricity, saying I had spinal disease, and the study of life was to me one ever so as and one on the preacher, during the entire sermon.

"I preacher's description of heaven was amusing, the principal delight of that region appeared to consist in having to work to so, no cute to which, to, refers to low, and to pick, and the backlights were correspondingly intensified. Then, the singing. The most graphic pen could not do justice to that. One song, in which were the delicious pattering, swaging and rolling their small black bodies, was something like this:

Oh, we! Come hide die quarks,
Come, get we down!
Come, get we down!
Oh, we! Come hide die quarks,
Oh, potatoes!

Gib on board the great train, oh!
Come, get we down!

And soon, to a waltzing, dirge like tune, I did not hear any very cheerful music, but I could see the cur wiv ah tones, to matter what the words were. Presently the scene separated, the non-combatants off in circle, the women massing together, led by a tall, gaunt, black woman, who commenced to hear earnest appeal for temptation to a point, very long tones falling over into a very big and growing longer every time she opened her mouth. This strange woman began to be conscious, during one last stanza the other, wagging her head, stamping right and left, with a certain meaning, and soon every woman and child in the meeting engaged in the holy dance, the men looking on and appearing to be affected by the rhapsodies of their wives, sisters, sweethearts and children.

—The Rt. Rev. Bishop O'Reilly, of Springfield, has created a new parish of Hartford, Mass., for the benefit of the French population. He has appointed to the charge of the new church Abbe Isaie Sidy, formerly of the Diocese of St. Hyacinthe. This is the fifteenth Canadian parish created in this diocese by the Bishop.

ECHOES FROM ERIN.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

the officials and confidential letters of introduction from the Parliament and other leaders be succeeded in starting an invincible branch society. Meetings were held wildly, manos enrolled, officers organized, and arms procured, while this double-dyed assassin every fortnight furnished his report to Dublin Castle. Matters went on this way for months and months, and only when eighteen or twenty of the brave and unsuspecting peasants had been sent to the Bastiles of Sligo, Chatham and Portsmouth prison, was Wemie found out. He awoke ago in the House of Commons, Mr. Sexton asked a question as to the facts I have narrated, but the new Chief Secretary declined to answer, saying it was a matter of priority. And this John Weede, the black-hearted hound, is now a sergeant or higher and is paid a pension of sixteen shillings a fortnight. And believe me this is the kind of work which has been going on for the past two years, and worked by Bolton, French and Co. This is the reason why the government dare not dismiss these men, as French has threatened to put the officials of Dublin Castle upon trial, the highest of them, in the dock, if he is not acquitted as Cornwall was.

CORNWALL A CONVICTED CRIMINAL.

An application before the Judges of the Supreme Court, was made this past week by the notorious Cornwall. He asked to be granted a new trial against Wm. O'Brien, Esq., and Cornwall, the Crown witness being, that there was no doubt in the mind of any man man of this prosecution in Dublin or Cornwall, the Crown witness, Cornwall, the leader. This statement of the Judge puts the finishing touch on the character of the Secretary-General of the Post-Office Department. Your readers will remember that the jury on their acquittal of Cornwall in the last trial remarked, that the Government did not seem anxious to prosecute him. It is well known that they, the government, withheld all evidence which would have brought guilt home to him. If Mr. O'Brien with his limited means and one single detective was able to entrap a jury of Cornwall's guilt, what could not the Executive have done, had they been inclined, with their array of spies, informers, police, etc.!

ENGLAND'S SECRETS PLOTS.

The Press of England is furious at the attempt made in Kerry some two weeks ago to blow up with dynamite the residence of Mr. Hussey, a notorious land agent. Though times of the Royal Irish Constabulary were around the premises at the time, no one was arrested, nor could any show be had to the perpetrators. You readers will no doubt have remarked that in all these outrages very little harm has been done. Is this not strange? I see by the Freeman of this week that an organized series of such outrages has been planned at Dublin Castle under the superintendency of Jim McDermott, George Bolton, Detective Mallon and other lovelies, for the express purpose of making easy the removal of the Crown Act. Ireland for the past ten months has been remarkably free from crime, but this won't suit our rulers, and so they have hit upon the idea, and are to be keep the chain of coercion still dangling round our limbs, in order that the reign of the landlord may be easy.

LANDLORDS AND IRISH VICTIMS.

This country is governed solely by the landlords and for them. Who makes the laws? Who are the magistrates? Who are the men who control Dublin Castle? The landlords. Who are the Judges? Landlords. Who are the magistrates? None but landlords and agents. In the face of this British system how can Ireland or Irishmen be happy or contented. Only the other day one Murray from Derry, a land agent, in driving round the country, observed a Land League hut erected. It was built by the people on a piece of land, the property of the old homestead. "What," said the agent, to another tenant whom he met, "do the people think we are for? Have they authority. Well then, I will have a police station here on the premises and you and your neighbors shall pay for them." This in English law is so admonished in Ireland. Your correspondence now being published in the Freeman's Journal, proves to me doubt that Jim McDermott is in the pay and under the patronage of the English Government. Your readers will remember that Jim came over from America prepared to blow Britain to smithereens. This was over two years since. About the time of the arrest of Wallace and his accomplices for dynamite outrages, McDermott was arrested in Liverpool, but was never brought to trial owing, it is said to the valuable information he tendered to the Judge, which led to the conviction of Wallace and twelve others, also a battle in Glasgow, and later still Daly, Egan and O'Reilly, etc., in Cork. It was a matter of the greatest wonderment to me, how the government could have obtained such a lot of men, and how the plans, if they were really intended, of the conspirators were so every one shamelessly by the police. But all is plain now; and when the too late to remove these men from Ireland, Sir Redmond Barry, Cornelius Hanaway, will Irishmen never learn wisdom? Poor England has been fooled and has vent so betrayed, sys, lately, and so on.

"Sold for gold, so Judas did his God."

THE PRIVATE ENTRANCE OF A POLICEMAN.

The private diary of a policeman named Bennett, is now being published in the Freeman's Journal. Bennett has been stationed in the West, and here the correspondence says that in one place, a Mass Rock was already given to the public occupant two estates of the Freeman, and consists of letters addressed to the Sub-Inspector to be forwarded to Dublin Castle. These letters contain the names of all suspected persons, all Land Leaguers or Nationalists, and many of these Bennett reports as Fenians, with the address of their leaders, before their name, that, what company they keep, in fact the policeman seems to have done nothing but play the spy. Night and day he was always on the move, and too, he had his assistant in his wake ever ready at manufacturing news, etc. But it is only at which one has been delivered by a policeman in Ireland, and it is a pity the people of such have not yet come to light.

Hot added all the persecutions of the tyrants, the hearts of the Irish rejoice, for Christians will be crushed and persecuted by lay and intolerance is at hand, to inspire with hope and confidence the hearts of the downtrodden and suffering in every land.

THE WEEK'S NEWS —FROM— IRELAND.

National Feeling in Dublin.

DUBLIN, Jan. 4.—The usual quiet at the inauguration of the Lord Mayor was held here this evening. The town of Tipperary was received with applause mingled with great misgiving. The toast to the health of the Queen by the Lord Lieutenant was omitted. Brooks and Lyons, the members of Parliament for Dublin City, were unable to respond to the toast, "The Irish Members," on account of the storm of groans and hisses with which they were received. O'Keefe and Martin, members of Parliament, otherwise responded and were warmly applauded.

Manly Gentleman Prosecutes Rome's Policy.

T. M. Healy, member of Parliament for Monaghan, delivered an address of Glasgow yesterday. In the course of which he canvassed Hamerson, Chief Secretary of Ireland, who, he said, knew no more about Ireland than he (Healy) knew about Scotland. "He was Scotch-man," he said, "like me to rule Scotland through scoundrels, robbers and men guilty of unspeakable offenses!" Healy said he would rather assassinate Lord Spencer than Cowen. O'Donovan Rossa's policy so criticized and stated by Healy, and he hoped it would be found that the prisoner's days in company O'Donovan Rossa's policy so criticized and stated but will be understood it, because Rossa had been roasted among the people and knew their wrongs.

A PLEA FOR ALMS.

BY A. DOYLE.

Hint isle of the street one,
To thee my glance is turning;
My love shall live for thee,
All stranger fellowship's opening,
Tho me thy wrongs, thy chance still thrill,
Like the strings of a harp touched by the wind
In a pathetic melancholy tune;
A favorite lonely tune.

Alas! for the dreams that shed,
A light of Passion round thee;
Quick, but to me sadness
For a tyrant's chain still bound thee;
Still were thy wounds as fresh as when
First spoil by Cromwell's fruitful sword—
And yet thou still a conquered lord—
His minions ready to wound thee.

Hoop! vain and futile pen!
Or wail known sorrows sighing;
In the hearts of true born men
Let Erin's woe stay lying.
For you or some unlikelier one
The glorious task of hoping bright
The unhappy plaint of Erin's sight—
Keep Hope's fair embers lying!

Oh! sighs in desolation sung,
The honour of her story
Is a sign-post of her sorrow
But think of her ancient glory;
Hope for the day when been her sighs,
And flowers re-adorn the glorious clime
Of Freedom's hallowed story.

And yes of Erin's Isle!
Be shed and wreathed for Ireland,
And yes who yields a passionate pen,
Will not be the hero of empty Fame;
But live in mortals sweet Erin's name
Or sin, a Martyr's crown of Lyrical!

And thou, oh! Mighty One!
Soon and this long persecution,
Oh! hasten on the sun
That lightens a hoodwinked nation!
Disperse a bettering tyrant's spell,
And guide with thy all powerful hand:
The destiny of our poor land
To liberty's high station!

Literary Miscellany.

A True Catholic Story.

BY ANNA T. SADLIER.

The Church at Northampton was crowded that morning; men, woman and children had come thither in a constant stream from early dawn. It was an occasion of unusual interest. Two priests were waiting with heartless anticipation the entrance of the criminals. Two young Irishmen were to die that day. It was a time-honored custom in the settlement that convicts, on the very eve of execution, were to be brought to the church, and there hear a sermon appropriate to their situation. These young Irishmen who were to die were Catholics—Catholic mothers had tonight blown their prayers, had bent above their sleeping pillow, had wept for them and prayed for them, and now, on the end of a rope, they were to die for murder. In the expectant throng who awaited their appearance in the meeting-house, there was not one of their own faith, not a single creature who might make supplication for them in the awful hour approaching. Not a single voice to repeat the familiar prayers that these two convicts had learned in childhood. More than that, their religion had condemned them to a perpetuation. Northampton in those days could hear the name of Catholic, but Catholic was to it a worshipper of images, an idolater of the woman Mary, a being cast in the possession of a power that Almighty God alone ought to possess. The prisoners were heartily hated called and cursed. The fresh cold air blew around them, as they were brought with them from the jail, and they shivered half from the chill and half from the sense of desolation. Their but their eyes were clear blue, the expression open and honest, and they held their heads as if not afraid of the hatred, or the bridal rather than to hear a new death sentence. Somehow, there flashed through the minds of the waiting people a conviction that these men did not look like murderers. After them, in the wake of the prisoners, came a small, bent figure, that of a woman in a shabby black gown and bonnet. In her figure and attitude were all the traces of the extremities to come. Where it could not strike those stalwart men it had written her. She crept unnoticed into a pew. Her mortal anguish had no outward expression. There was a pause. Through the mercury door were seen to advance three or four figures. One of them was the pastor of the church, a minister attended by an assistant. As he made a movement to advance into the pulpit, his course was suddenly interrupted: a third figure stood before him. It was that of a man in a long, black cassock, with beads at his side and a crucifix in his belt. A spiritual face he had, wherein the world had long ceased to hold any profundity. His voice now rang out through the edifice, as he bade the minister pause.

"The will of the dying," he said, "is sacred; and they have desired to have no can but spiritual; therefore I alone will speak to them."

Again there was a pause. Father Cheverus had ascended the pulpit stairs. He, the great missionary, the giant in pioneer work, was about to address an assembly, wherein the hatred of Catholicity so prevailed, that he had never been able to procure a lodging or meal in town. He stood an instant looking round upon the multitude, not from any uncertainty what to say, but because his heart was swelling with emotion. He knew all the circumstances of that pitiful case, and the tears came unbidden to his eyes, as the vision of those two young men, so resolute in meeting death, so calm, so composed, appeared before him, and that other, that little black robed figure—sitting there alone and unheeded, enduring an agony that was strong and bitter as death.

While he waits, we will go back words, to where Father Cheverus, issued in his little room with the manifold affairs of the mission work he was doing every where, received from the two young men condemned at Northampton, the following letter:

"We adore in the judgment of man, in life to be desired, the decrees of Providence. If we are not guilty of the crime imputed to us, we have committed other sins, and to expiate them, we accept death without murmuring. We are solicitous only about our salvation: it is to your hands, come to our assistance."

At a later period, he had received another:

"It will be a painful task for you," it read, "after the labors of a long journey, and especially after the impression made on your heart by the sight of those young men about to die in the bloom of youth, but you will not refuse us this favor, and reduce us to the necessity of dying in despair. Come, do, to the voice of one who is not a Catholic."

It was to the subject of this summons that Father Cheverus stood not before this unresponsive audience, looking round upon them; curiosity seekers all, until his indignation broke out as follows:

"Orators," he said sternly, in a voice that was heard at the farthest end of the building, "orators are usually flattered by having a numerous audience, but I am ashamed of the one now before me. Are there, then, men, to whom the death of their fellow beings is a spectacle of pleasure, an object of curiosity. But you, especially, O woman! what has brought you to this place? It is to sign away the cold slump of death, that trickles down the faces of these unfortunate men! Is it to experience the painful sensations, that such a sacrifice should inspire in every feeling heart! No, it is not for this. It is, then, to behold their anguish and to look upon it with tearless, scary, longing eyes. Ah! I blush for you. You boast of possessing sensibility, and claim that it is the highest virtue in woman; but if the sight of blood affected you pleasure, and the death of a man is an inviting entertainment for your curiosity, I can no longer believe in your virtue. I no forget your sex, you are a female, I see."

After those undaunted words, spoken, be it remembered, to people who hated and despised the missionary and his work, the orator proceeded with his discourse.

We can almost hear him, speaking of this life, beyond the grave, in that world formed course to dying men, who were presently to leave behind them earth and all earth for ever. We can catch the very sound of his voice, dwelling not on the odiousness of a crime which he knew they had not committed, but on the shortness and worthlessness of all things earthly. Now the greatest heights of happiness are but little worthy of our attainment, and the lowest depths of pain, but the rocks of that narrow road, the goal whereof is Paradise.

In a few moments the sermon was done, and the criminals led forth to death. An awful cry of anguish resounded through the building, as the two prisoners fell fainting.

It was only the old mother of one of them who had fainted. He cry burnished the cry of many of the multitude for many days to come.

Meantime the heart of the good priest was wrung with anguish. He had formed a real friendship for the two youths who were to die. He had spent days with them, and had talked, towards the end especially, of only spiritual things. He had described the walking of Jesus among men. His sufferings and death—the only real injustice which was ever committed among men, and as Christ alone was innocent of all guilt, by degrees the young men had learned to look forward to death with joy. They received the Sacraments frequently, they prayed, and, conscious of their innocence, knew that death, cheerfully accepted, would bring them straight into eternal joy. But Father Cheverus grieved more and more, as the days went on for the innocence had had constrained those two, in the springtime of their days.

"O Father," cried they to him, "moderate your grief, or it will make you ill."

On the morning of the execution, Father Cheverus had procured than a razor, that they might shave and make a decent appearance on the scaffold; a decent appearance indeed they made, and their behavior impressed every one. The crowd, in which not a woman was visible (the women had not effected), were willing to proclaim the innocence of man who, with so cheerful, composed, and yet modest countenance knelt for a moment in prayer, and calmly gave themselves into the hands of their executioner.

The terrible tragedy had been enacted the morning sun had looked down upon the blackened ruins of the jail—the pride of Northampton as calm, as untroubled, as busy with its work-a-day life as ever. The familiar prayers that these two convicts had learned in childhood. More than that, their religion had condemned them to a perpetuation. Northampton in those days could hear the name of Catholic, but Catholic was to it a worshipper of images, an idolater of the woman Mary, a being cast in the possession of a power that Almighty God alone ought to possess. A LUCKY FALL.

A Little Drawer Girl Who Met With an Accident and Found a Father.

A was little child stood gazing into the window of one of the large ready stores on Larimer street just as the lamps were lighted last evening. The one hundred pieces in the glass gave her an imperfect view of the wonders within, but that was to her as glimpses of Fairyland. An old woollen hood covered her head and she was wrapped in a tattered shawl; yet the freezing cold had no terror for her, and her eager blue eyes saw nothing but the wonderful world within. Her face was tanned, but also far fair, so far as the grime would allow. Somewhere she had lost her mittens, and the cold had nipped her little hands, leaving them red and swollen. Perhaps the cold had driven her out of her home in the East where the days ago, and as her mother did not hear from him, she had sold the few things she had and came to Denver to look for him

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

May God bless and direct through the intercession of St. Francis de Sales, under whose protection they are to be placed, the writers of Catholic journals who defend the cause of religion, the rights and liberties of the Holy Church, and who are exposed to the derisions and precepts of the enemies and detractors of truth.

"Journalism is the pleasant and easy means by which to the aid against its parsimonious lions; and paper-pelted jokes, sensational stories, and slander are now the weapons in our public journals. Journalism is not only permissible, but it is a Christian duty, when it is made a means of good, and not of evil, to use the pen and the press for the defense of Catholic principles and the exposure of Catholic journalism but to unveil error and delineate the truth, a feature of it may be—above all, the live-lies truth."—BISHOP CLEARY, Hobart Town, Tasmania.

Editorial Notes.

— The Dublin Freeman's Journal makes the remark, in a late article, that no party suffers so much by all attempted dynamite outrages as the Parnellites—the best friends of Ireland's cause.

— The Baltimore Mirror announces that after a careful examination the three judges appointed to select the prize essay out of the contributions sent in for the "Memorial Volume of the Third Plenary Council," have awarded the palm to Mr. James A. Russell, LL.D., of Detroit.

— The next known as "Lutherans" have colonized in Fresno county, and the "Campbellites" have colonized on 38,000 acres of Railroad lands in Shasta county. It would be a good thing for Catholics in the East if they could be induced to colonize on such lands, as there is no better climate on this continent for Catholic religious practice, and in a few years more the cry will be: "Too late! too late! ye cannot enter now."

— In 1790, the Catholic Church in Kentucky consisted of one priest and 1,500 people. To-day, 1885, there are two Bishops, 193 priests, 653 churches and stations, a Catholic population of 200,000, or one eighth that of the whole State; fifty-seven colleges and academies, and 100 free schools, which instruct 16,344 pupils; and nine asylums and four hospitals for the orphaned and infirmed members of the flock.

— A correspondent asks Father Phelan, of the Western Watchman, the meaning of "conversion" in the Catholic Church, and gets the following unique answer: "When a Catholic becomes "justified" we believe that he is converted. The purpose of Protestant preaching is to convert God; the object of Catholic preaching is to convert the sinner. A Protestant saint is one who possesses a certified copy of his official pardon. A Catholic saint is one who has been spiritually transformed; who rises to a new life of grace, and lives by a faith that grows in hope and brings forth fruit in charity. A Catholic must show his works before he can enter Heaven; a Protestant thinks he needs but show his defence."

— The Catholics of the United States as well as individuals in the progress made in Streator, Illinois, where—ten years ago—there was only one Catholic Church in that town, a few, frame structure, not of as large pretensions as an ordinary barn. To-day there are three splendid Catholic churches with pastoral residences attached, besides a large convent school conducted by the Sisters of Mercy. Recently two Catholic churches, St. Stephen's for the Polish and Hungarian Catholics, and the Immaculate Conception for the English-speaking Catholics, were duly opened for divine service. The other, the German Catholic Church, the second built by the same congregation, has been opened for some time.

— The London Daily Telegraph has a long leader on the Nicaragua canal, advising Earl Granville to let things alone. In the course of it the writer says: "The question arises whether Englishmen would support their Government in clinging to the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty with a view to preventing the United States from undertaking a work which would be of untold advantage to mankind at large. It must not be forgotten that the American Government have recently waived their objections to the infringement by France of the Monroe doctrine, and have wisely interposed no obstacles to the commencement of the Panama canal by M. de Lesseps. Be the policy of our foreign office what it may, and when ever may be the government installed in Downing street, there can hardly be two opinions as to the absolutely right and English seeking peace and harmony with the United States in preference to any other power."

— Canonical discussion examinations have been instituted in Philadelphia, Pa., looking to the canonization of the Right Rev. John Neponmuc Neumann, C. SS. R., who was for eight years Bishop of this Diocese of Philadelphia, and who died while holding his high office, Jan. 5 1860. Competent members of the Catholic clergy of Philadelphia and elsewhere, among whom are clergymen high in the Congregation of Redemptorists, the Ecclesiastical Order with which the Bishop was identified, are engaged in gathering and preparing evidence of the prelate's godly life, and edifying testimony regarding the wonders and miracles believed to have been wrought through his intercession since his death. The result of their labors will be forwarded to Rome for the examination and consideration of the Holy See, from which source alone can emanate the decree of canonization. The work of these compilers is one of unusual interest and significance, from the fact that no American Bishop or Prelate has yet been deemed worthy by the Papal authority of having his name enrolled among the Saints. In the calendar of the Saints may be found the names of a few clergymen who did missionary work in America in the early days of the country's history. Bishop Neumann, however, though a foreigner, was an American in all but birth. Coming to this country when a young man, it is with the growth of the Catholic Church in America that his great life work will always be associated.

An Anglican Advocate of the Masonic Sect.

As a general rule Protestant preachers are wise in their own conceits, hence, in order to gratify that ever-existing animosity which a majority of them harbor against the Catholic Church, they invariably aid and assist—openly or secretly—any organization whose influence they imagine will oppose the progress of the Church of God. This species of short-sightedness is peculiar to Protestant preachers, because their very opinion in such a direction can have no other influence than to fighten around Protestantism the ropes of rationalism and infidelity which are loosely shaking this side loose out of Luther's banting.

But the most foolish preacher in the whole batch of Babel-tongued religious tyros is the sectarian Sabbath-worker who imagines he is "doing good" when he pleads the cause of Masonry as against the Christian Church, for the reason that Masonry is as much a sect of Satan as any other non-Catholic organization is a messenger of God. The supremacy of Masonry is much lower and ultimate death to non-Catholic denominations. No man who is at all familiar with the history of Masonry can doubt that its rites and ceremonies are merely so many mockeries of the offices, sacraments and ceremonies of the Catholic Church. This fact may please Protestant preachers, who love to see "Popish rites" parodied, but they must also remember that when non-Catholics become prominent Masons they cease to be sectarian church-members, and they declare openly that Masonry is good enough religion for them. In this way Protestant preachers are only precipitating their own speedy downfall by lending the bogus philanthropy of the worst conspiracy against Christianity that ever cursed the world.

The editor of the Honolulu Independent (Catholic Church) evidently belongs to the category of those remarkably unwise Protestant persons whose prejudices lead them into the mistake of sustaining Masonry, apparently for the sole absurd reason that the secret oath deserve commendation because it is constantly being denounced by the Catholic Church! This diabolical incentive to unreasonable action is based upon the same plane of argument as might be used by Satan in his hellish plan to overthrow every Christian so I, namely: "What God hates I love; what He loves I despise."

It must have been some such mental reasoning as that which might exist in the mind of the Evil One, that suggested to the editor of the Sandwich Island Anglican organ the following sentiments:

"Our poor Freemasons, who do not pretend to be Christians both at all, are sadly in need of some rightfully just now. The Pope, it appears, has given all persons who have joined themselves to any or other a whole year to repent of their sins, and become good Christians. We think, in view of the extraordinary, for priests of God and Christ. The three priests mounted a chair overlooking the catafalque. Between them stood a black gowns, with white surplices hanging from their

A Bitter Dose of Bigotry.

The numerous Catholic readers of last Sunday's Call must have been highly edifi d at reading the following original paragraph in that paper:

SOME INTERESTS

Rome, proud holiness of the world, who sat in greater or lesser seven hills, was undoubtedly a much overrated institution; its great boasting in connection with the Bible was with which she was entrusted, only boasting because she had the Bible, and Christ, and only about one hundred and fifty years ago, was the Bible, and Christ, and the Holy Ghost, in San Francisco. Telegraph, Clay Street, Hotaling's Block, Sunday, Jan. 11, 1885.

Way is a narrow and unmeasurable road of unchaste bigotries. The wall which Romish pride Rome jumped over, and there has never been a well-trained Rome since which would try to mount, resist a modern steps. The Tiber is muddy, river; the Campanile so without moss; the Castle St. Angelo is an exaggerated cheese; St. Peter's, her famous basilica, is but the monument of a fading superstition which the Christians and Colosseum, ruins of ancient magnificence. A Cardinal, with his purple robes, is a mere theatrical figure, and his sermons in his hands. The chasm of the church, under the civil dominion of the Pope, was a sort of country a subjugation, in point of government a sort of cross between an Irish Wake and a Methodist camp-meeting. The city of Rome, under the government of Italy, and the Italy's capital, is undergoing transformation, being improved and modernized, is well governed and is prosperous. The miserable shadow of the Cross crawls slowly in the sun of the new day and disappears before the rising sun. Christianity appears giving to new Italy, a new and better Christ, and a purer and better religion.

With what the writer in the Call says about ancient Rome, we have no concern, but when a paper so largely patronized by Catholics so far forgets the respect due to them as to talk about St. Peter's Cathedral being "but the monument of a fading superstition," then we say the Call writer is an insolent and ignorant fool.

But even bigotry is not the worst feature in this filthy fling at Catholics, as those who are the enemies of the Catholic Church are generally supposed to be. The tone of all the Call's article a consistent blandness of both bigotry and blasphemy.

It is not enough that the Catholic readers of the Call should be told that each Catholic nal is a mere "hideous pantomime," the "States of the Church a mere cabbage garden," but as a fitting climax to this anti-Catholic crusade, we are treated to the blasphemous exposure that "the world and shadow of the Cross" crawls yet over Rome, but its day of annihilation is not far off.

To Catholic parents who read the Call we appeal if this is the kind of Sunday reading recommended by a Prelate of the Provincial Council! If Moses, Pinkerton and Fitch are thus inclined to lampoon the Catholic Church and to spit upon the Cross that every Catholic reverences, then all Catholics who read the Call are deserving of every infamous insult heaped upon them by just such low flung specimens of anti-Christ journalism as the Sunday issue of the Call.

Our duty is to call the attention of our readers to just such outbursts of anti-Christ as have taken place and are buried at Catholics by open or secret enemies of our faith, and this we have done in the present instance, leaving the remedy to those who feel as we do, that such publications and filthy journals should be—as that paper—"the world and shadow of the Cross" crawls yet over Rome, but its day of annihilation is not far off.

To Catholic parents who read the Call we appeal if this is the kind of Sunday reading recommended by a Prelate of the Provincial Council! If Moses, Pinkerton and Fitch are thus inclined to lampoon the Catholic Church and to spit upon the Cross that every Catholic reverences, then all Catholics who read the Call are deserving of every infamous insult heaped upon them by just such low flung specimens of anti-Christ journalism as the Sunday issue of the Call.

THIRD ARTICLE.

St. Vincent de Paul, the Founder of the Congregation of the Priests of the Mission, "always wore on his girdle his chaplet, both for his own use and for others to use, and also in order to profess openly his love for Mary." Every one knows that it was his devotion to the Blessed Virgin that cured for him his deliverance from slavery, and that made him the great apostle whose virtues all adore. He was most earnestly recommended to his children devotion to the Holy Mother of God, and enjoined on them to propagate it as much as possible on their missions. (Le Pèrodier Perlogue, Jardin de Marie, 1861, ed. le page 8.)

St. Paul of the Cross, the Founder of the Servant Congregation of the Passionists required of his Religious that "they should recite every evening in all the houses of the Order the Rosary; he himself never let one day pass without saying his chaplet. Towards the close of his life he recited the beads thrice every day. Even in the last illness he continued that pious custom, and when he was urged to give it up from fear of receiving a relapse, he answered: "Let me alone, I can with great difficulty be could celebrate the words, he replied: "I always live as long as I have breath of life, I cannot say it with my lips, I will say it with my heart!" In his last illness, he was seen endeavoring about taking his hour for the perpetual Rosary. (Sa vie par Tosset, Journal Marie Stamale)

The Blessed Margaret Mary Alacoque was according to the testimony of those who wrote her life, perfectly fascinated with the Rosary from her earliest childhood, and from that early period she had the habit of reciting it every day, kneeling on the ground, making a prostration every time she pronounced the name of Mary, and kissing the ground at each Ital Mary. Who can for a single moment doubt that it was not on account of this fervent devotion that the Blessed Virgin obtained from her Son for her loving servant special light to discover the amiable and amorous treasures of His divine Heart? We must not pass over in silence the very celebrated John Olier, a worthy member of the third Order of St. Dominic, and who was the Founder Sulpice, the clergy and people of France owe him and his institution a debt of gratitude which they will never be able to repay him. He recommended most earnestly to all the members of his institution of the Rosary, he himself recited it every day with the greatest fervor, he was devoted to practice and to propagate the devotion by the Holy Mother of God.

TWO PRIESTS FACE A MOB.

Bay Roberts Oranges Will at the Behest of Catholic Fathers. They Have Assaulted the Priests, Threaten to Kill Them, and Draw a Knife on Father Delaney Saved from Violence by a War Ship.

Last week we gave a brief telegram concerning the outrages perpetrated by ex-Orange Orangemen at Bay Roberts, N. Farm and Home.

A HEALTH ALPHABET.

The Ladies' Sanitary Association of London gives the following hygienic rules for keeping health:

As soon as you are up shake blanket and sheet Better be without shoes than at with wet feet; Children, if healthy, are active, and feel cold; Damp bed and damp clothes will both make you ill;

Eat slowly and always chew your food well; Tombs the air is the lungs of the land, you shall; Unwaste should never be made to light;

If you would be healthy, stay not tight;

Let your work be well, as you do I've no doubt; Xmas time is coming, remember that out;

X-ery like room always tidy and airy;

Lest dust on the furniture never be seen;

Mouth illness is caused by the want of some air;

Now, to open the windows in your poor care;

Open rooms and all cupboards and let the sun in;

Physic should see that little Bacteria will win;

Quick movements in children are healthy and right;

Remember the young cannot thrive without light;

Sleep with the sheets to full in the below;

Take care that your drains are all safe and true;

Use your nose to find if there be a bad smell;

Very and see the farm that sure to be true;

Walk as much as you can without feeling fatigue;

X-ercise could walk full many a league,

Your health is your wealth which your children must keep;

It will help a good cause, and the good you will reap.

ELECTRICITY IN MATS.

A New Invention That will Render Every Member Regular-Proof.

Among the latest uses to which electricity is applied with remarkable success is burglar alarms, through means of an invisible matting. Every opening in a large building can have an invisible mat, which upon the least touch will start a bell ringing that will not stop until the occupant awakens and turns it off. If desired the gas can be turned on simultaneously with the alarm, thus fully exposing the burglar. This matting is placed under the carpet, and, by means of a wire attached, sends off the alarm. The very servants in the house do not know where the mats are situated, and can not cut the connecting wires. Any sized mat can be had to fit any opening, or they can be placed near the safe or any place where valuables are kept. Placed under the table or desk, an almost imperceptible pressure of the foot calls the servant or attendant; the waiter in the kitchen, the butler and coachman, respectively, from the pantry and stable. The smoke thief can enter a building or dwelling without starting an alarm immediately. A man coming home late at night steps on the mat; the gas is lit immediately down stairs and upstairs. He goes to his bed-room, presses a mat there and the gas burners goes out, leaving that in his room lit. The surface of the carpet is not uneven, nor does it wear the carpet the least. The system has met with wonderful success, and many large dwellings in New York are supplied with it; nor are difficult to enter undetected as blowing up a safe when the cashier is present. At the dinner table the lady of the house calls a servant by a pressure of the foot, without sounding a gong. It takes only a few hours to fix onto a building. The plant costs from two hundred and fifty dollars to five hundred dollars.

The Over-Eating Cold.

Experienced physicians count with entire confidence upon a great run of colds immediately after each holiday feast. And the fresh and communicative among them say to their patients, as they come coughing and blowing into their offices, or are found shivering and burrowing in their bonnets: "Oh! I know all about it without any examination. Its the regular turkey and mince pie cold." And such it commonly is—the product of the stomach sending its protest to the organs of utterance. "I suffer this cold," said a little lady, very wistfully of her physical condition, "except when my stomach gets empty." In a common experience, although few are thoughtful or intelligent enough to take note of cause and effect in these matters. "Big dinners" and intemperate eating generally are responsible for more of the sicknesses that start with so-called "colds" than all the sweet, cool airs of heaven, blow they ever so fiercely.

Ethics of Sleep.

The ethics of good sleep should form a part of household morality. It is hardly an extravagant assertion to maintain that very few people, after childhood is passed, know by experience what perfect rest of sleep is, and actually themselves with a poor apology for this most perfect refreshment. Rising cool and wary from a disturbed imperfect sleep, they proceed to summon up lost energies by strong tea or coffee, which in its turn again interferes with perfect rest at night; and this process of living more than any mental or physical labor, wear women out and make them prematurely old. "I have been reading myself to sleep after retiring," said a lady the other day; "and when I have done this for two or three nights I can see that I look five years older." It is an experience that any woman can verify, and conversely, the one see that sleeping in a darkened dark and well-ventilated room brings back the contour and the roses of childhood or early youth.

Cinnamon Bark for Toothache.

In the North Carolina Medical Journal, April 1884, Dr. J. Lewis Phillips writes that one of the best and most pleasant things that can be used to relieve this painful state of the dental nerve, is chewing cinnamon bark. It destroys the sensibility of the nerves and suspends the pain immediately, if the bark is good quality. After repeated trials, and in different cases, he is convinced that it is as efficacious as any of the other remedies suggested for odontalgia, and not attended with the unpleasant consequences of creosote, carbolic acid, etc., which relieve the pain, but leave the mouth as sore and painful as the tooth was previously, though these results are usually due to carelessness in using.

Good Advice.

"Keep the boys at home!"—Detroit Free Press.

By all means. But do not confine yourself to holding the door. Keep them at home by making home so cheerful for themselves and their young friends that they will not want to leave it. Begin with the Rosary, and after that, let them amuse themselves. Music and dancing—there is no harm in a friendly—as little card-playing, or any pleasant amusement rather than the street. It is easier to amend a broken chair or table than a life injured by sin.—Freeman's Journal.

To Give Castor Oil.

The French method of administering castor oil to children is to pour the oil into a pan over a moderate fire, break an egg into it and stir it up; when it is done flavor it with a little salt or sugar, or current jelly.

THE WEIGHT OF CHILDREN.

How it Varies from Day to Day—Periods of Increase and Decrease.

Pastor Mailing-Hansen, the director of the Royal Deaf and Dumb Asylum in Copenhagen, has published an interesting pamphlet on "The Periodicity of the Weight of Children. His observations, obtained by his daily weighing of the children under his care, are very interesting. According to his evidence the weight of children does so largely from day to day that no trustworthy result can be obtained from weighing at long intervals. A child may be provided heavier at night than in the morning, and may be one and a half pounds lighter in the morning than the night before. Fitting seems to have more influence on weight than exercise, bathing, or occupation. The ultimate increase is great, from 30 to 40 per cent. in the course of the year. There is a period of stopping in the increase of weight with corresponding loss, from the beginning of May till past the middle of July, in which time the loss of weight may exceed double the average ultimate gain. During August, September and October there is a very steady period of increase in weight, sometimes rising to five times more than the average increase. During the summer holidays the increase in weight is twice the average, and in September and October even thrice. Besides the serious period of loss from May to July, there are at other times frequent sudden stoppages in the increase of weight, sometimes followed by actual loss. These hindrances, lasting from six to fourteen days, are followed up by extra periods of increase, and seem to indicate real damage, so that the actual increase of weight seems to take place during the fifth part of the year, while the remaining time is occupied with loss and its replacement. There is a decided opinion prevailing that between the vacillation of temperature and accompanying vacillations in the weight of the child—increase in weight and of weight and decrease of warmth and of weight go hand in hand. A decrease of two degrees of warmth in the temperature of the five days is accompanied by a threefold decrease in the weight of a child, and three degrees more warmth is followed by a fourfold increase in weight. The hindrance and loss of weight that accompany a decrease in the warmth of the temperature, are so even after the temperature has begun to rise, as if the loss depended on sensitiveness induced by the colder temperature. A year that has had most changes of temperature is far more unfavorable to the normal increase of weight in a child than a more steady year, and a series of such unfavorable years result in less strong children. The weather of the green period of life from May to July, and the rapid increase during the autumn months, do not seem to depend on the conditions of warmth. The increase of weight in the children experimented on was always greater during the period when the moon was receding from the earth, and less during the period when the moon was approaching the earth. During the former period the children increased in weight twice as much as during the latter period. Pastor Mailing-Hansen's inquiries are considered so important that the Danish Government and the "Carlsbergfond" have granted sums of money for the continuance and extension of such experiments.

Teaching the Deaf and Dumb to Speak.

After more than a century of trial of both the "sign" and the "oral" systems, public opinion has decidedly decided in favor of the latter, which may be briefly said to give the deaf mute the means of expressing himself in articulate common speech, so as to be understood by every one, and to understand him in turn, with his eyes—that is, to read speech by the movement of the lips of those who talk to him.

If this can be done successfully, as it is done, it removes at once the barriers which kept the deaf mute from mingling freely with his fellow-creatures, and thus such an education must proves an incalculable blessing to him. An international Congress of Teachers and others interested in deaf mutes was held in 1880 at Milan, and was attended by delegates from all parts of the world. The wonderful results obtained in the Italian schools under such teachers of the oral method as the Abbe Tarra and Balestra and Fathers Marchio and Lanzi, attracted the special attention of the system over that of the "sign," and seemed to be adopted not only in England, America, and other countries, but also in the very home of the opposition method itself—France. An extract from a private letter upon the subject from one of the teachers at Sienna may prove of interest to my readers. She says: "I have taught the deaf for 17 years, 6 by means of signs, and the rest by the spoken word (parole), and I am conscientiously say I would not return to the old method—above all, not for religious instruction. Signs must always be equivocal in their meaning and wanting in precision in random ideas, especially abstract ideas, such as spiritual things. Signs being by their nature sensual, I often found myself embarrassed in trying to convey to my pupils I must certain abstract things. This difficulty is removed by oral instruction. The children themselves are brighter and more intelligent under this system. Their health, too, is better than formerly. They take a great interest in their studies, and when visitors come, the first question they ask is, 'Can they speak?' and if the visitor happens to be a deaf mute who only signs, they are not compassionate, but, the poor deaf and dumb! As to the lip-reading, the children have acquired such a facility in this as to solve hold of the words almost before they have left the lips of the speaker, and when persons who are with them do not wish them to know what they are saying, they are obliged to turn away their heads or keep their hand over the mouth. 'The French,' the good Sister goes on to say, 'who came prepared to oppose this method, are astonished at the results obtained by us, and the 'Dames de Nevers,' (another religious order,) who have an institution at Bordeaux, having adopted the new method, thank the good God now for having given them the courage to try it."

Decline and Fall.

Any thinking man who traces the fall of individuals and of nations will discover the genesis of their gradual decay to arise, first, from some weakness; then, from a habit formed in consequence of indulging in that weakness. After the habit has become a second nature he experiences moral and intellectual blindness to the inevitable consequences—that is, the conscience becomes seared, and the mind comes to prophesy the coordination which has been produced. Indeed, at length it begins to manifest itself the new nature which has been created in a good one; false maxims are formed, falling in with the dictates of this corrupted state of being, and evil takes the place of good, paganism takes the place of Christianity, self-indulgence of restraint, the natural man supplants the supernatural, and the moral principle makes way for moderated sensuality and respectable self-indulgence.—Bishop Vaughn.

CATHOLIC MISSALS.

Wonderful Work Performed by the Monks. Magnificent Specimens of Calligraphic Skill—Books Worth their Weight in Gold.

The term "missal" in general modern parlance, is applied to the ancient books of manuscripts of the Catholic Church service which have been handed down to us from mediaeval or later times, in public or private collections, national museums, monasteries, convents and libraries. They offer valuable examples of the state of the bookmaking art in the different periods to which they belong. They form monuments of art, history and literature, which even kings and human candidism have respected. Modern book-making produces nothing to compare with these magnificent specimens of artistic intelligence, patient skill and industry, and the modern bookmaker, whatever his department, can learn much from these landmarks of the department of the artist, the binder, the calligrapher, the paper-maker, and the designer and worker in precious metals, enamels and such skills. The early flower of the several arts or handicrafts is represented in three jewels of bibliography, for the devout religious spirit of the Middle Ages naturally brought the worthiest results of human handiwork and mental activity to the service of the church.

THE ART OF THE ILLUMINATOR,

too, so early identified with the production of fine missals, has never reached a higher point of excellence than in some of the more celebrated examples of the chiefs-books in Flanders, France and Italy. Students of the art, which modern appreciation is reviving, find their best instruction in copying such ancient models. It should be remembered, also, that illuminating and illumination, meaning this latter term being applied to pictures and portrait compositions introduced into missals or similar works and the former to the ornamental or decorative work, usually called, for the ground-work of modern water-colors, in illuminating, and notably in those of the mediaeval period, are by no means the same or present, either in general style or as regards the materials. We may go back to the time of Charlemagne for the great name and professional revival of the Egyptian art of illumination and its universal application to the ends of religious bookmaking. From that period down to the close of the fifteenth century may be regarded as the golden age of the

ILLUMINATED MISSAL.

The early missals were also called Sacramentaries, or books of the mysteries of the Sacraments. In the fourth century Pope Gelasius first adapted the different Masses, the different days of the year and the spoken festivals. The first liturgical missal was the work of the Sacramentary of Gelasius. Gregory the Great added another to complete the Sacramentary. Later every diocese or religious order had its special missal. The production of these volumes naturally became the work of holy calligraphers, illuminators and binders. Each convent or monastery gave a special place to its patron saint.

There were formerly four, and some writers say five, different books used for the great church festivals of the Middle Ages and of the Renaissance. A knowledge of the classification is indispensable to the collector and interesting to the general student: 1. The Evangelary; 2. The Sacramentary or Missal (the Benedictionary, a later division of the Sacramentary); 3. The Lectionary or Epistolary; 4. The Antiphonary. The plenary missals combined the texts of the gospel, the reader and the choir. Literature and books of hours are not included in the modern use of the term "missal."

Your query about the "Book of Kells" is that of Verrelli, said to have been written by St. Kieran, who died 530 A. D. The most ancient secular illuminated work known to modern critics is the Virgil of the Vatican, which belongs to the period of the close of the fourth century. Ancient Byzantium was celebrated for its professional illuminators of both secular and religious works. St. Augustine introduced the art of illuminating into England and thence into Ireland, and the Irish monastic missals are among the finest examples both of illumination and of the skill of the scribes. Through Charlemagne's protection of the learned Alcuin of York, schools of illumination and calligraphy were established in France and Italy, and in Spain. The effect of these schools upon the missal art of mediaeval times was naturally great. One of the finest productions of that period is the Evangelary of Charlemagne. The Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris contains the best examples of the Carlovingian missals in Europe. The British Library in New York possesses a superb work of this period, valued at $1,000.

NOT UNTIL THE THIRTEENTH CENTURY

were vegetable forms used to any great extent in the ornamentation of missals. Among celebrated missals of the best period may be cited that executed by Jerome de Urains towards 1450, which contains 140 miniatures in borders, ornamental letters in gold with decorative designs of foliage, fruits and armorial bearings to the number of 2,250 and 350 pages enriched with borders, the Bedford Hours, executed by Jan. Thys and the Margarita Van Eyck; that of Cardinal Colonna with miniatures attributed to Hilpbad; the Hours of Anne of Brittany which offers superb examples of the French art of the fifteenth century; the office of the Blessed Virgin and selected prayers executed by Brentel (1547), a quarto in the imperial library of Vienna. The Van Eyckes and Hemling, under the patronage of the Dukes of Burgundy, illuminated many missals and breviaries. The Breviary of Cardinal Grimani in the library of St. Mark in Venice, with its many miniatures by Hemling and other Netherlandish painters, is one of the celebrated missals of the world. Illuminated missals are to-day one of the most important factors in the commerce of bibliography. For those of the best periods thousands of dollars are constantly being paid by collectors. Many fine missals are owned in America, and the public and private collections of New York contain a number of magnificent examples, an exhibition of which would be of great pecuniary and art service at large.

Pay as You Go.

The best of all rules for a successful housekeeping and making both ends of the year meet is, "Pay as you go." Beyond all countries in the world, ours is the one in which this credit system is the most used and abused. Time-books are the bane and pest of domestic economy, a perpetual incubus, and a source of loss. Many servants at the store and house, dispatched constantly by housekeepers and dealers, they are temptations to both parties to disregard "if" never but that. "We never needed to enter this." I forget to brave the book. "Never mind, we'll make a note of it and see it again. But the worst of it is that housekeepers are tempted to order what they have not the means to pay for, and when the time for settlement comes they are strangled. A family can live comfortably on a very moderate income, if they always take the cash in hand and buy where they can buy to the best advantage. Then they will be satisfied first to get what is necessary. Extra comforts will be had if they can afford them. But it is bad policy to buy on credit. No wise dealer sells so cheap on credit as for cash.

FATHER O'REILLY IN IRELAND

demed to return to earth and atone on Christmas day for the neglect of past opportunities.

CHRISTMAS IN FLORENCE.

How different was Christmas in beautiful Florence! Sadly visited and ravaged as her holy plains have been by the French revolutionary spirit, and by that other revolutionist, the spirit of Sans Culottism and Pot Pourri, nothing can be more ridiculous than the spectacle offered by the citizens of Florence on those great festivals which recall the life of Our Lord. What I was during my long stay there has sun-changed me to hope that just as the Florentines have completed, after an interval of more than six centuries, the front of their magnificent cathedral, even so shall Italy some day fitting to perfection the interrupted scheme of true Christian democracy established in mediæval Florence and her sister republics.

Of my early Christmas in Spain, spent in Vigo, I would fain bles out the memory, so naked of all ornament was the simple church in the city, so devoid of all heartfelt sympathy with the celebration throughout the Christian world, was the social aspect of the place. I left the peninsula as one parts from a land shaken to its centre by some sive earthquake, and sinking slowly but surely beneath the avenging waters.

OUR CHRISTMAS EVENT IN NEW YORK

consoled me for the spectacle of scenes I had left behind in Continental Europe. And yet fifty years ago, if we except the few Roman Catholic churches then timidly arising above the ground and chanting on Christmas day the Adeste Fideles, or some other hymn of worship in this great city decked interior or exterior with everything so made of the religious enthusiasm then lay among dogs of the Christian year? It was then, as most of your old readers will remember, chiefly a home festival. Now the spirit has sought all denominations, impelling them to commemorate the birth of Him who came to bring all men brothers, and who desires that nothing but brotherly love should prevail between man and man, between nation and nation. So are we free in America, in the fight of the Gospel truth and of eighteen centuries of European experience, and warned by the fire of Christian charity, to create a new world, and give to future generations the benefit of those virtues preached and practised by Christ, and which, practised by men, can make this earth a Paradise.

Believing that the children of Catholic Ireland have had not a little to do with the happy change that has taken place in our Christmas celebration in the United States, I will more confident, in speaking of how Christmas is spent here. Let your readers indulge—I old man in the fond belief that although the Christendom of the last thousand years is disappointing fast, with its social institutions and its religious manners—like a gradually submerged continent in geological time—yet that little wave-tossed island of Europe, this little Green Isle of our core, shall ever hold her fair head above the triumphant flood of irreligion.

IRISH FIDELITY TO THE TRUE FAITH.

After travelling, and observing carefully, I have looked with care beneath the surface of things here, and, amid the festivities of this Christmastide, my greatest happiness is to learn that the Irish people at home, after all their chastening and grinding, their sorrowful sufferings—after an ordeal perhaps unsurpassed in other race—are, in soul and heart and life, true to the light brought to them fifteen hundred years ago. If England only knew—if English Catholics as well as English Protestants could be brought to know—that glorious material blessing in that Irish character which has kept the Irish people faithful to the Church of the great Egyptian Pyramid survive the rage of man and the utmost force of unremitting fury! If they could know it and profit by the knowledge!

CHRISTMAS CHARITIES IN IRELAND.

I cannot help feeling proud of this unconquerable race whom I see around me here in Ireland, and which I see around me here in America, in the fight of the Gospel truth and of eighteen centuries of European experience, and warned by the fire of Christian charity, to create a new world, and give to future generations the benefit of those virtues preached and practised by Christ, and which, practised by men, can make this earth a Paradise.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Amerin.—The Ulster Winter Assizes concluded on Dec. 19, in Belfast. The trials which took place thereat found in the French revolutionary spirit, and by that other revolutionist, the spirit of Sans Culottism and Pot Pourri, nothing can be more ridiculous than the spectacle offered by the citizens of Florence on those great festivals which recall the life of Our Lord. What I was during my long stay there has sun-changed me to hope that just as the Florentines have completed, after an interval of more than six centuries, the front of their magnificent cathedral, even so shall Italy some day fitting to perfection the interrupted scheme of true Christian democracy established in mediæval Florence and her sister republics.

Of my early Christmas in Spain, spent in Vigo, I would fain bles out the memory, so naked of all ornament was the simple church in the city, so devoid of all heartfelt sympathy with the celebration throughout the Christian world, was the social aspect of the place. I left the peninsula as one parts from a land shaken to its centre by some sive earthquake, and sinking slowly but surely beneath the avenging waters.

consoled me for the spectacle of scenes I had left behind in Continental Europe. And yet fifty years ago, if we except the few Roman Catholic churches then timidly arising above the ground and chanting on Christmas day the Adeste Fideles, or some other hymn of worship in this great city decked interior or exterior with everything so made of the religious enthusiasm then lay among dogs of the Christian year? It was then, as most of your old readers will remember, chiefly a home festival. Now the spirit has sought all denominations, impelling them to commemorate the birth of Him who came to bring all men brothers, and who desires that nothing but brotherly love should prevail between man and man, between nation and nation. So are we free in America, in the fight of the Gospel truth and of eighteen centuries of European experience, and warned by the fire of Christian charity, to create a new world, and give to future generations the benefit of those virtues preached and practised by Christ, and which, practised by men, can make this earth a Paradise.

Believing that the children of Catholic Ireland have had not a little to do with the happy change that has taken place in our Christmas celebration in the United States, I will more confident, in speaking of how Christmas is spent here. Let your readers indulge—I old man in the fond belief that although the Christendom of the last thousand years is disappointing fast, with its social institutions and its religious manners—like a gradually submerged continent in geological time—yet that little wave-tossed island of Europe, this little Green Isle of our core, shall ever hold her fair head above the triumphant flood of irreligion.

IRISH FIDELITY TO THE TRUE FAITH.

After travelling, and observing carefully, I have looked with care beneath the surface of things here, and, amid the festivities of this Christmastide, my greatest happiness is to learn that the Irish people at home, after all their chastening and grinding, their sorrowful sufferings—after an ordeal perhaps unsurpassed in other race—are, in soul and heart and life, true to the light brought to them fifteen hundred years ago. If England only knew—if English Catholics as well as English Protestants could be brought to know—that glorious material blessing in that Irish character which has kept the Irish people faithful to the Church of the great Egyptian Pyramid survive the rage of man and the utmost force of unremitting fury! If they could know it and profit by the knowledge!

AN EVENING THOUGHT.

'Twas eve, and the sun was wanking low,
Bedecking Nature's domes,
Shedding life tinted citizens glow,
O'er the site of ancient Rome.
I stood and gazed from a lofty height,
On the city that lay below,
Whilst the centuries of rotation reflected the light
Of the sinking sun's bright glow.
Like fairies in the land of ever peace
Rise the golden spires
From the assembled palaces, houses and fanes,
Which seemed wrought in a fairy fire.
My eyes were fixed on that beautiful scene,
And my heart was full of joy;
My soul felt a glimpse of the celestial regions,
Of Heaven without an alloy.
But scarce ten minutes had passed away,
When the sun took its leave of Rome,
And that city, but now so bright and gay
Became dark, forsaken and lone;
There remained not a single sunbeam
To make a cheerful impression,
Plant it where it would, radiating light all around,
Save with air and the clouds become blended,
My heart became sad and my spirits low;
With the sun all my pleasures had faded,
Yes, still did I pace on that city below
With now to dark gloom had been shaded,
And I thought what a type of life I had seen
In the sun and his golden splendor;
How the pleasures of life give but a gleam
Of the glories they seem to tender;
The hopes of glory or fortune's bonanza
Seem to shine (or so brightly to-day)
But if grasped like the fabled apple
They fade or are wafted away.

ROSE.

Rome, Italy, Jan. 6th, 1886.

ANOTHER YEAR.

BY E. W. WEYMOUT.

Another year has passed and gone;
Here beamed with hope and joy the new;
This move we on—forever on—
The many and the few.
The many of the children gay
That chased our hours of joy
Till death, in deed with each life,
Has left us forever alone.

Another year. The buried past
Lies in the silent grave;
The stream of life flows over fast
As wave leaps into wave.

Another year. Ah! who can tell
What mean the hours of brief
Of hoary heart and tearful eye,
And hope bereft of wing!

Another year the curtain clings;
Fast events crowd on;
The old year dies, the old year dies;
The bells its requiem toll;
A pilgrim year has reached its shrine,
The air blows chilly and grey;
The spirit of another year
Comes forth from long repose.

Another year, with tears and joy,
To fame and fortune, and hate,
Another year to toil and hope,
And death, and rest above.
Another year winged on its way,
Heedless of human woe;
Another year. Pause to its train,
Pause to sank parting soul.

How Mr. Nicholson Mislaid the Baby.

CHAPTER I.

Mrs. Nicholson was standing in a dubious attitude, with the study door half open, as if she had paused in the act of taking her seat in the armchair by the table to another open door in the passage behind her, through which she could see a flood of sunshine, and the sounds of a cradle.

Mr. Nicholson was standing in a dubious attitude, with the study door half open, and her upon turning from the quiet figure in the armchair by the table to another open door in the passage behind her, through which she could see a flood of sunshine, and the sounds of a cradle.

"I don't feel quite easy," she said; "I don't feel quite easy, Jack."

"Well, don't interrupt me, John, or I shall never get out. What was I saying? Oh, baby is in the morning room, and if she cries—makes one sound—you are to ring your bell—this bell, John—for cook; do you understand?"

"Yes, I believe so. I am to ring the bell—this bell—for cook."

"Oh, I hope you will," after a pause. "Fanny," her eyes filling with tears again, "if she cried, and no one heard her? Oh, John, you will not deceive me? You will try—and—ring?"

"My dear," speaking with some dignity, "surely I am not entirely destitute of humanity or common sense. I have interesting work here," pointing to the manuscript and the books of reference lounged around him; "but I suppose, after all, I am human."

"O, I hope so, I think so," cried Agatha, stopping her hands; "only you might not hear—but what am I about?"

"Then I think," he said, with gentle sarcastic smile, "that you may dismiss your fears; they are quite groundless."

"Very well," said Agatha, moving in a hesitating way to the door. "I am satisfied, I am trying to be satisfied; don't forget."

"No," cheerfully, "I will take a leaf from Charles' book, the best of husbands."

"Oh,"—the grey eyes had dwelled on the handle of the door, but relaxed it again—"the Paynters are coming here to-night, you must not go out star-gazing."

"All right," absentedly, "the good-by."

"Good-by." The weight time was almost disappeared, round the door, came back again, and leaned against the worn mantelpiece of the astronomer's seat; for a minute the lips were pressed to it, then lifted. "Kiss me, John; you are a dear old fellow after all, and I am a fool."

The musician seemed to leave the room with the bright sweet presence and hover over the pretty cradle, among the sounds and scents of the sedentary day. In the library there was only one shaft of light that came through the high window and fell across the old mahogany coat, and the tidy manuscripts, and the open books, and left the handsome, clever, refined face in shadow.

CHAPTER II.

It might have been two hours afterwards—painful after events crowded, a confusion in Mr. Nicholson's mind, and the hours might have been two days—when he became aware of a laugh in the passage by his door. His head had grown tired with writing, but the pen travelled steadily on; and it was a relief to raise them for a moment from the locked door, behind which he had heard the laugh. He rose, with a hand on his gutter face, and paused, struck by a sudden resentment. Something came back to him, as he stood in the dull light of the dull room; was it a dream or a memory, or was it the baby? He threw his papers hurriedly away and walked over to the door and unlocked it, hearing it wide open. There was nothing in the passage but the yellow sunlight now upon the walls and upon the old prints, and Mrs. Nicholson standing in her pretty gray dress, with her slim hand stretched out and the laugh that had disturbed him still upon her lips.

In the room beyond there was more sunlight and the cradle.

"John," cried Mrs Nicholson, laughing again as if she could not help it, "what have you done with her? Give me to me. I am nervous, I am nervous." Her lips were pressed upon the baby's face and the hands were stumbling up towards her in the darkness, over the rugs and the cushions, and the baby was being shown from one to the other, and was pushed into Agatha's arms at last, and there held by a pair of rough, sunburned hands.

"What is it? Oh, Jack, what is it?" but, and that is empty. You can see for yourself."

"Ah," said Agatha, "here is cook," as a heavy breathing became audible in the passage. "Cook," her voice trembling at the sight of the sympathetic face, "my master has set seen the baby—at least he thinks not. He was very busy, and he heard her cry, and he may have taken her up and forgotten. We are looking for her."

"Which you won't nevertheful her, then," said cook, in a broken voice. In my last place, but one, where I was general cleaner, in Mr. Alf's family, there was a child disappeared, as it might be this, and it was never found—gypsies or not, it was never found."

"Don't cry, cook—cried—Agatha—plaintively. "And Kinny coming this evening! Your master thinks he may have put her somewhere and forgotten. He remembers hearing her.

"What he might," said cook, "not being deaf. Which I don't mean no disrespect, sir, but she was roaring awful, and I says to Mary, says I, 'Master'll never know 'im so quiet that child so I'll run up and bring her down a bit;' and I fagged to change my apron, and I ups, as it might be here, and the cradle, as I might be there, and no sound, and the cradle as empty as it is this minute."

Cook turned dramatically, and pointed out one stout arm to the little cradle in the sunlight. Mrs. Nicholson's tearful eyes followed the hand, and her husband stood uneasily in the center of the group, with an amazed expression upon his face.

"Which," said cook, stiffly, "I think a baby—and such a one, bless her! as ever was—and I'ope as I may never see such a sight as I'ave seen this all day long."

"Cook," said Mrs. Nicholson, with dignity, married a little by the queer in her voice, "I am sorry you should be so unfortunate. Your master is very clear, and his writings are of great value. My dear," with a pleading look upward, "baby is our first thought now. There are no wild beasts here, so she cannot be eaten. But she has gone, and before Kinny comes this evening she must be found."

"Of course she must," said her husband, thankful to gain courage from her exceeding gentleness. "We will begin systematically, and go through every room in the house."

So began the search, that ended an hour later in the great hall, with three perplexed faces and a sobbing cook other at the foot of the stairs, in a silence that Mr. Nicholson broke at last. "John, we are a fool; I cannot bear it any longer. She is lost."

"It's no use," her empty hands with a despairing gesture, but her husband caught and held them.

"Don't give up, Agatha; it will come out all right. If I search the world through, I will find her."

"Or her body," said cook.

Mrs. Nicholson shuddered.

The minute's silence was broken by a second burst of laughter and the tramping of feet. For a minute Agatha raised her head, listening intently, and then dropped it with a sob.

"It is only the factory boys, John," she said; "they have been in the hay-field all day, and I asked them to rest. I can't bear them, I am so anxious."

The sound of the tramping ceased. She would have moved away, but the laughter were in the hall already, and the boys were stumbling up towards the door, and Agatha, near the rugs and skins. Something white was being shoved from one to the other, and was pushed into Agatha's arms at last, and there held by a pair of rough, sunburned hands.

"What is it? Oh, Jack, what is it?"

"Well, don't interrupt me, John, or I shall never get out. What was I saying? Oh, baby is in the morning room, and if she cries—makes one sound—you are to ring your bell—this bell, John—for cook; do you understand?"

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

May God bless and direct through the intercession of St. Francis de Sales, under whose patronage this work is placed, the efforts of Catholic Journals who defend the Faith against the sophistries of those who, by a deplorable misuse of reason, do its direction and propagate with devotion and fidelity.

Journalism in the prominent social sense, means to be the chief agent in propagating ideas; and people read what they see, hear and ponder on, and spread among the world. In our view, religious journalism is not only permissible in the worldly sense, but it is a necessity, permissible in the welfare of society, but a sort of angelic duty. What is and what ought to be the object of Catholic journalism, but to combat error and defend the truth, whatever it may be—above all, the Divine truth?—Archbishop Kenrick, Pastoral Address.

The "Malignant Shadow" of the Call's Insult to Catholics.

It is somewhat strange that in almost every instance where the attention of the Catholic readers of non Catholic newspapers is called to some article insulting to their faith or manhood, the publishers of the offending periodical invariably try to squirm out of their "no Popery" position by asserting that "the article was inserted without our knowledge." This style of casting mud at the Catholic Church, and then trying to shift the responsibility upon the shoulders of some person unknown, unhonored and (unfortunately) unhung, has become so common that we were not at all surprised to find in last Friday's Call this lame, halt and blind excuse for its blast of bigotry commented on in our columns last week:

> A few days ago a "clipping" from a contemporary, speaking flippantly and disparagingly of a subject which is sacred to many of our patrons, crept into these columns in some mysterious manner, as yet unexplained. No credit to the journal from which the article was taken was given, and the hasty reader might, not unmaliciously, have supposed it to be an original item. Giving the opinion of this paper on the subject treated, the clipping concluded with a sneer at simply and unexplainedly accompanied by an unusual flamboyancy with the markings of the office sacked him to proceed in his malignant design, or whether the forty-line item, in forty-seven columns of matter contained in the same issue of the paper, was carelessly overlooked, is not yet known.
> The efforts of the Call to present to the public a perfectly clean newspaper which in some instances takes into its family, and one in whose columns the religious faith of no person is attacked, or ridiculed, have been noticeably, and we believe, universally commended. We expected it to be fair to the public and fair to itself that it should make this explanation immediately upon its attention being called to the matter.
> The item was not an original one; it did not reflect the views of this paper and its insertion was accidental, or the work of some evil-disposed person, whose identity has not been discovered.
> Every man or woman connected with the newspaper press will smile audibly when they learn that a low-flung, spiteful and malicious attack upon Christianity in general—and the Catholic Church in particular—could be inserted in a "first-class daily newspaper," and nobody in the office—from the printer's devil to the editorial department—have any knowledge of how it got there? Such things never happen by chance; there is always some deep design in the minds of those monstrous malefactors in the sight of God who blasphemously allude to the "malignant shadow of the Cross." Will the "contemporary" which is so cleanly, even with the squalorous cloak of its convenient charity! We fear even the promise of a pecuniary reward could not coax the issue of that concealed "contemporary" from this "first-class daily newspaper," unless the information was printed in the Call's columns "by some one whose familiarity with the workings of the Call office enabled him to succeed in his malignant design."

The Call claims that the item was not "an original one." We claim that it was, for the reason that its comprimiem of the Seven Hills of Rome with those of San Francisco localized it in this city, and gave it a stamp of genuine originality. Hence the Call tells an untruth when it attempts to wriggle out of its predicament on that plea.

Another very peculiar feature regarding this lame excuse which the Call makes for its bad break in bigotry, is discovered in the fact that the Call has not thought it worth its while to repudiate the ancient idea of the paragraph "slipped from a contemporary" whose name is unknown, "by some evil-disposed person whose identity has not yet been discovered."

Had the Call bravely repudiated the anti-Christian ideas injected into the insulting paragraph printed in its Sunday edition, we could admire its sander even though we condemned its offense. But when it applies no antidote to the anti-Catholic poison disseminated through its columns, we claim that it stands convicted of the crime we charged against it. An error can be atoned for, but a designed insult rarely draws from the offending party any penitential paragraph; hence we are convinced that the Call's "explanation" is a miserable subterfuge which will not satisfy the Catholic public. We suggest, therefore, that just at the present moment,

> Two foolish men are in the same fetch
> Tangled Annanias and—Deacon Fitch.

— The wedding of Miss Eva Mackay and Prince Colonna will be celebrated either in the chapel of the French Nunciature or the Church of the English Passionists in the Avenue Hoche, Paris. The civil ceremony will take place about the 12th of February. Miss Mackay's dowry is said to be a million dollars. Contrary to the rumors prevalent, there is no doubt that the marriage is the result of mutual affection. Prince and Princess Colonna will probably take up their residence in the Eternal City.

— His Holiness Leo XIII. has sent the sum of forty thousand francs($8,000), to the Spanish Government for the relief of those through the earthquake in Andalusia. His Eminence Cardinal McCabe has also forwarded a donation. The public subscription in Spain is rapidly increasing. The King and Queen have given £4,000, and the Cabinet Ministers have subscribed each. King Alfonso recently visited Andalusia, personally to inspect the afflicted districts; and it is said that he has ordered the Controller of the Household to furnish $100,000, which His Majesty proposes to distribute personally.

Bogus Information about Hogue Relics.

A dispatch appeared in one of the city dailies last week—and in the Chronicle only—in which the story teller stated that a sensation had been created in Catholic circles in Montreal, Canada, in consequence of the disc very that certain relics—said to be those of St. Claudius and St. Juliana—were not genuine, Bishop Falize of Montreal having been victimized by a Jewish relic-merchant in Rome, during his visit to that city a few years ago.

This portion of the story is—to say the least—improbable, for the reason that Catholic Bishops are generally prudent and practical men, whose duties are confined to the care of their flocks in Rome or elsewhere, and we never yet heard of a case where a Catholic Bishop was imposed upon in this manner by an Israelite. That there are bogus relics is probable, because the Sacred Congregation issued a Circular Letter last year cautioning the Prelates of the World against purchasing any relics of reputed saints without first ascertaining their genuine character through the proper Congregation of Cardinals. But whether the relics purchased by Bishop Falize in Rome were genuine or not we cannot decide until we receive our Canadian exchanges next week.

The dispatch in question contains so much bogus information about these spurious relics, however, that we are inclined to think the whole story was concocted by one of those malignant enemies of the Church who are ever on the watch to vent their malice against her. Thus, for instance, the dispatch says that "portions of the bones were cremated, the dust added to the faithful, and the Church enriched thereby to the extent of many thousands of dollars." This is as diabolical a fabrication as falsehood ever issued from the foulest sources of falsehood, and is evidently the creation of some malignant mind blighted with the blackest bigotry against the Church. We will wager our life that Bishop Falize never cremated the relics—be they spurious or genuine—of any Saint; that he never added a particle of such dust, or enriched the Church by the fractional part of a Canadian cent from such an unlawful source. People who concoct such calumnies against the Church invariably forget that even Bishops are not left to their own discretion in such matters. Stringent laws were enacted years ago by the Councils of the Church prohibiting relics to be sold or to be exposed outside of their cases and shrines, and forbidding the veneration of new relics until their authenticity had been approved by the Sovereign Pontiff. The Church is not careless concerning the sentiments which she have the world believe. She is the careful, conscientious Mother of all the Christian faithful, who will neither deceive nor be deceived. Imposters may designedly deceive a Bishop, but when the case comes before the Cardinals in Rome, the remedy is swift, sure and certain, and the fraud is exposed forthwith. No Pope, from St. Peter to the present Pontiff, has ever connived at any imposture regarding relics. And we never a discovery has been made wherein even a doubt arose in the mind of any ecclesiastic concerning the genuineness of any relic. Not even the most severe by our Sacred Congregation of Cardinals and a decision rendered which set at rest all doubts as to the character of the relics in question.

The Church correctly teaches her children to venerate the relics of saints—not to adore them as the dispatch we are considering falsely states—and for this reason alone, if for no other, common sense should suggest to any rational individual of ordinary intelligence that the Church is bound to see that not a single shadow of doubt can be cast upon such objects of veneration. And this rule is rigidly enforced in Rome for the apparent reason that if bogus relics are permitted to be imposed upon Prelates and upon Catholic people, it would serve to weaken the faith of the children of the fold and eventually impair a grand Catholic institution in the souls of many of the faithful. Self-preservation is the first law of Divine Truth, even as it is the initial ordinance of Nature. Every doctrine of Catholic faith is firmly founded on the Truth of God, and the Catholic Church—as the earthly mouthpiece of that Truth—is bound by the most supreme and solemn obligations to see that it is kept in that state of pristine purity in which its Divine Founder bequeathed it. The same rule, precisely, applies to the relics of the saints, and those misguided malicious men who imagine that Rome is ever ready to connive at any fraud in order to procure funds from the faithful, only exhibit their own gross ignorance and their possession of minds rendered morbid through the enfeebling influence of an ever-growing hatred of the Catholic Church and of that God who called it into existence. Such evil-minded enemies have existed from the very dawn of Christianity, and their rules of detraction will never cease until that judgment day when the God of Heaven shall say to all such: "Depart from Me you cursed, into everlasting fire which was prepared for the devil and his angels."

— Among the converts recently received into the church in England, we notice the names of Sir Philip and Lady Rose, of Bayaux, County Banks, and Cromwell-road, South Kensington, London, who, together with their family, were received into the Church, at the Oratory, Brompton. Sir Philip is a son of D'Israelli, and Father Rowden, in a few remarks he made at the baptism of the whole family, said:—"This is a great episode in the drama of England's conversions." The Baronet married the daughter of a Protestant viear, and was one of the Tichborne family's solicitors.

— People who take little interest in international geography miss a treat. The gems of imperial grab going on in Africa and the East is one of the funniest performance possible. Take the Bay of Tajiurah, for instance. It was grabbed by the ex-Khedive, and bestagain by the recent crusaders of the Egyptian garrison. Then England thought of taking it, changed her mind and asked Turkey to do so. Turkey was reluctant, and so the boy was declared in possession. France immediately stepped down and Turkey protested. England backs up Turkey; and there they are.

The Latest Religious Craze.

Protestantism is responsible for all the vagaries which men have introduced into the world under the name of "Religion." From the time when Luther let loose his passions and preached the license of lust as an improvement upon the Sacrament of Matrimony, down to the present day, there has hardly passed a decade of years that did not witness a "novel invention" of some self-conceived sectarian sensation. Luther had scarcely departed to that eternal bourne from which no Lutheran returns, before the other so called Reformers all commenced the religion-making business on their own account, by asserting that their own peculiar methods for opening the gates of Paradise were infinitely superior to those patented by Luther and the old gentleman scriptually designated as "The Father of Lies." These creed-makers all had their own regular customers, and each had a monopoly of his particular line of goods. Each had his own trade mark on the wrapper, being plainly portrayed in the words and actions of each inventor.

When the "Reformers" died save the mark! past also to where Luther legitimately belonged, they were succeeded by a new race of religion-makers, who again improved upon the original style of Protestantism, putting in an opinion here, and pulling out a doctrine there, until they had transformed Luther's design into a kind of rotating religion, with as many wings as a wind mill and as many colors as the rainbow! This generation of gospel bull dozers in time went "the way of all flesh," and in turn were followed by a new set of sect-makers who still kept alive rating or enlarging, altering and repairing—the half-built religious fortress which Luther had erected on a sandy foundation, and which has ever since been crumbling to decay each century bringing it nearer to total dissolution.

Well, these modern creed-makers invented such forms of fanatical Protestant worship as "Baptcrians," "Necessarians," "Trinitarians," "Pusapites," "Dunkers," "Quakers," "Shakers," "Sandemanians," "Campbellites," "Sandemarians," "Dalcists," "Come Outers," "Hutchinsonians," "Millerites," "Shakbloomians," "Whippers," "Whoppers," "Wilkinsonians," "Mystics," "Mormons," "Sandarians," "Perceived Religionists," "Hemsters," "Peculiar People," "Inghamites," "Hallelujah Band," "Glassites," "Glassites," "Christadelphians," "Salvation Army," and a score or so of just such curious cognomens used in order that the "Reformed" sectarians might be distinguished from the "goats" of gospel religion.

The fun of the joke is that each inventor of these peculiar Protestant religious additions, claimed his own religious theory to be the Simon-pure product of gospel inspiration, and thereby plainly implied that "all those other fellows are frauds."

True Religion came from God. It would assume only from the origin and source of Eternal Truth. But God's religion did not suit the rebellious nature of fallen man, hence Lucifer, the rebellious angel, and his followers that they had just a good right to alter, expand or abbreviate God's religion as they had to change the course of rivers, to rate mountains, or to fill up precipices. Inspired from this infernal source of pride, Protestantism was the growth of man's "improvement" upon God's religion, and when once the gates thus fled set as the boundary of Heaven's religion on earth were left ajar, the Seven Deadly Sins took possession of men's souls and they made religions just as they make railroads—in order to supply the convenience of every community.

It is somewhat singular that Paine—the avowed enemy of the Seven Deadly Sins—is the corner stone of Protestantism. It was pride that caused the angels to be cast out of heaven; it was pride that led Adam to commit the crime which entailed punishment upon his race. And no person can read the life of Luther without becoming convinced that pride was the besetting sin in his character which led his soul subsequently to be the receptacle of the other deadly sins that follow in its train, viz. Covetousness, Lust, Anger, Gluttony, Envy and Sloth. Add to what prominence has been given to these six sinful sisters stained in the Protestant ruled world? The very names of the Seven Deadly Sins bring up before us the history of Protestantism in a not shade! But as it was the pride of Luther that made Protestantism, so it is fitting that all the other sins that naturally flow from that source, should be substituted in the service of sectarianism. Hence we find; in this peculiarly "enlightened" nineteenth century, Pride as the mouth-piece of Protestantism, preaching to Covetousness, Lust, Anger, Gluttony, Envy and Sloth—assisted by the self-confessed pews of Protestant conventicles.

Do Protestant preachers ever rebuke any of their members for perpetrating their hidden transgressions against God? Do they tell their people how enormous these sins are which the Church has designated as deadly? Far from it! The river cannot be purer than the spring at its source, hence, religious error can never have a pure source, nor can it rebuke those upon whom it has left the brand of Belzebub!

Now let us see how far the line follows left to the Protestant model—the Luther's legacy under the Predicant title of "religious liberty," has carried mankind in the wrong direction. We all know that Luther broke ancient history by a great number of interviews with the devil, in contradistinction to those saints of the Catholic Church whose apparitions generally came from heaven and not from hell. But the most curious religious craze into which the non-Catholic community has fallen is its fearful deportment in woman worship.

It is now nearly a century since a wicked woman named Johanna Southcott announced herself in England under the like phenomena title of "the Mother of the Messiah," and she had thousands of fanatical sectarians who succumbed their reasoning faculties at once, and fell down in adoration before her! Those people were all sturdy sectarians who stoutly repudiated such Popish "superstition" as a belief in the Communion of Saints! The unfortunate creature died in 1841, but even in England—which boasts of its Protestant progress—the followers of this fanatical fraud are actually expecting her resurrection from the dead! Some Southcott days a dozen women like her have led Protestants on similar wild goose chases after them, and we may be sure of it that it does not take long to have secured all its victims, as we read in a recent issue of the Philadelphia Press that now another female religion maker had appeared in Pennsylvania, and had hundreds of Protestants who actually gave her idolatrous worship! Here is the singular phenomena of this recurring species of sectarian religion consistently constituted upon what its adherents call "the Lutheran notion."

The "J. Elmar Miya Mita theorganization of the Divine," composed of people whose form of religious belief is most remarkable, has applied for a charter. The application is resisted by the friends of the woman who founded the church, and exception to the application for the charter was made on Saturday.

The sect was invented about two years ago by a woman, who claimed that she had had a revelation from the Lord to the effect that she was the third person of the Holy Trinity. The woman came to San Mateo, and her claim was alleged revelation she assumed that of J. Elmar Miya Mita. Her followers, of course, believed her to be a god, and formed a church for the advancement of her cult. The woman died some time in South Dakota, and her followers, instead of interfering with the sect, continued to worship the woman, and in this they congregated with Miss Mother, who is the daughter of the late Miss Mother. It is claimed by those resisting the application for the charter, that the woman is wearing a crown and a tinsel dress, and of going through wonderful incantations, while the members of the congregation paid her homage upon their knees. The woman claims that the spirit of her dead sister has entered into her body, and the spirit is guiding her in her incantations. The woman claims that

Farm and Home.

THE "SMT HAND ON THE FARM."

Up with the birds in the morning—
The dewdrop glows like a precious gem!
Beautiful flies in the skies are dawning,
But she has no leisure to look at them.
The men are waiting their breakfast early!
She must not linger, she must not wait!
For warm that sun shines and birds that are early
Are what the men give when the meal are late.

Oh, glorious colors the clouds are tinting,
If she would look, she would see and hear;
But here are dishes, and here is the churning,
And the milk must be skimmed and put by for beast.
The world is filled with the wine of beauty,
If she could but pause and drink it in;
But pioneers, she says, must wait for duty—
Duty's work is monotonous sin.

The day grows hot, and her hands grow weary,
Oh, for an hour to rest her head,
Out with the birds and winds so cheery!
But she must get dinner and wash her bread.
The busy man is hungry, and it is winter,
Well, she can be happy and sew and knit;
Wood chop, and bring in water, and fill a kettle,
And she never could make them understand.

But after the strife and weary toils,
When life is done, and she lies at rest,
The nation's brain and heart and muscle
Her sons and daughters shall call her blest,
And I think the sweetest joy of heaven,
The truest bliss of eternal life,
And the fairest crown of all will be given
Unto the weary farmer's wife.

Education of Austrian Girls.

The education of girls in Vienna is somewhat peculiar, and perhaps worthy of note, writes a correspondent from that city. Up to fifteen years of age they are kept at their studies. After they leave school they go through a year's or two years' teaching in the pastry and in the kitchen, under some member of the family, or even in some mess in another family, under trained cooks. They may never be required to cook a dinner, but they are thus rendered independent of cooks and servants, as they learn how to do everything themselves long before they begin housekeeping on their own account. When married they are more affectionate wives and mothers. An Austrian lady, in fact, is as accomplished and learned as an English governess, as good a housekeeper and cook as a German, as witty in society as a Parisian, as passionate as an Italian, and as handsome as an American—some of the most beautiful women in Europe being in Vienna.

How to Recover Health.

To retain and recover health, persons should be relieved from any anxiety concerning disease. The mind has power over the body—for a person to think he has disease will often produce that disease. This is effected when the mind is intensely concentrated upon the disease of another. We have seen a person seized in anticipation of a voyage, both vomiting the usual. We have known persons to die of cancer in the stomach, and other mortal diseases. A blindfolded man slightly pricked in the arm has fainted and died from believing he was bleeding to death. Therefore, persons to remain well, should be cheerful and happy; the sick persons should have their minds diverted as much as possible. It is by their bad faith that they die. As a man thinketh so he is. If he wills not to die, he can often live in spite of disease; and, if he has little or no attachments as a rule, he will slip away as easily as a child will take a nap. Men live by their minds as well as their bodies. Their bodies have no life of themselves; they are only conveyances of the intelligent, or the lower minds, and the will has power to do as continuing the physical occupancy or giving it up.

Dangers of Tobacco Smoking.

Medical journal has recently given a summary of experiments made by him both upon human beings and animals with a view of verifying the physiological effects of tobacco smoke. He found in the first place that it is a distinct poison even in small doses. Upon men its action is very slight when not inhaled in large quantities, but it would soon become powerful if the smoker got into the habit of "swallowing the smoke," and Dr. Gilliland ascertained that this toxical property is not due exclusively to the nicotine, but that a cigarette made from tobacco disengaged from the nicotine, contains a second toxical principle called collidine, and also oxide of carbon and hydrocyanic acid. The effects produced by tobacco, Hegrand, he says, to a great extent upon the nature of the tobacco and the way in which it is smoked. The cigar smoker absorbs more poison than the cigarette smoker, and the latter in turn than those who smoke pipes, while the smoker who takes the precaution of using a meerschaum, or any other apparatus which condenses the smoke through water, reduces the deleterious effects of tobacco to a minimum. As a rule, the light-colored tobacco was supposed to be the mildest, but Dr. Zoltinski says that a great many of the tobaccos are artificially lightened by the aid of chemical agents, which are not always free from danger.

Vapor of Glycerine for Coughs.

According to an account in the Gazette Medicale de Nantes, M. Trastour has employed with great advantage the vapor of glycerine whenever a distressing or frequent cough has had to be alleviated. The remedy is very simple in application. About fifty to sixty grammes of glycerine are heated in a porcelain capsule by means of a spirit lamp; a large volume of vapor is thereby disengaged, and should be breathed by the sufferer. Glycerine in which carbolic acid has been dissolved may also be employed. The cough of phthisis and the irritation in the throat of many complaints afford proper trials for these remedies.

When to Clean the Teeth.

Of all the people who clean their teeth regularly, it is certain that a very large proportion only do so once a day, and that generally at the time of their morning ablutions. A most smaller number also do so at rising, but the number of those who make a practice of regularly brushing their teeth after eating, the most important time of all, is indeed very small. It is while eating that all little entrios or interstices between the teeth become the repositories of fragments of food, or traces of some acids in the food are left on the teeth, to cause incipient decay, and hasten it where it has already commenced. It is of course desirable to brush the teeth on rising in the morning and before retiring at night, but it is of infinite more importance that they should be thoroughly cleaned after eating.

How to Wash Silk Articles.

Silk articles should be washed in tepid water with a suds of white Castile soap; do not rub or wring them. Handle them as you would skin lace in washing. Rinse in clean cold water and press the water out by placing them in a towel and rolling it up, or cloth, and clapping between the hands until almost dry, then lay in shape and place in a dry cloth under a heavy weight. When entirely dry rub lightly with a piece of flannel or fine silk cloth. Of course some delicate shades are not intended to be washed any more than a daintily colored silk dress.

MY BOYS.

Let me crown what my boys will become when I know and Charley, calm Harry, sweet Willie, have been this.
Let me crown, as I look in each bright, youthful eye
Who my boys will their boys—what they likely by and by.

With hearts pure
Destiny largely in fabrics the world's skill has made
Or trudge in cotton, or in wool, or in wool,
Guiding mules—and by stealth—let us hope to do good.

Calm Harry, to science will devote his clear head
And search for the hidden among living or dead
Or perhaps half invent, or make wonderful delight,
Making a name, and a fame above kings.

Sweet Willie, my darling! fit that far away look
I read of your destiny, out of life's book
That my boy was a poet born, nicely to true.
Though here in this home, you grace work with a song.

And the last it bears live, with a round, lusty ring of
That is rather as ocean, and blue as the sky.
Ah, Her, my poor fellow, I know how it will
You will have to, and grave us, and go off to war.

But listen, my dear ones—don't forget what I say
Though you linger at home, or should wander away,
Be a business or handwork that calls for your care,
With your might do what might, both at home and elsewhere.

On the Sign of the Cross.

Dear Children—Before you pray make the sign of the Cross. That is, you touch your forehead with your right hand and say, "In the name of the Father," then you bring your hand down to your breast and say, "and of the Son," and then touching the left and then the right shoulder, say, "and of the Holy Ghost, Amen." Some of these words require an explanation. Do not say as many do: "In the name of the Father, the Son, the Holy Ghost, Amen;" but say, "In the name of the Father" and of the Son" and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

The use of the sign of the Cross is very old, for St. Augustine tells us that it was from the Apostles themselves. Into any important sign; for by it we express our belief in the principal doctrines of the Catholic religion. The principal truths which every Catholic must believe are: That there is one God in three persons, the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, and that Jesus Christ, the Son of God was man, and saved us from sin and hell by His death on the Cross. The sign of the Cross explains these truths very clearly. You say, "In the name" not names, by which you express your belief in one God. You say "of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost," by which you express your belief in three divine Persons. The sign of the Cross itself, you express that you believe that Jesus Christ died on the Cross for you, and saved you from sin and hell.

See, dear children, what a great and holy thing the sign of the Cross is. It seems to be very careless, therefore, to make this holy sign, hurriedly, and without any thought. Make it slowly, and with attention, and with a good intention.

In making the sign of the Cross, let your left shoulder first, and then the right. This has a great meaning. It tells that, if Jesus Christ, the Son of God, was such as to die on the Cross for us, we, the lost lower—we, the lost lower—we, the lower, and judgment—that is, to be lost in Cross, we'll bear the Cross, and carry to get on the sign of the cross never and never.

Reverse, also, what's called—

This is made by forming a cross, across the left of our right hand. It is done by the lips and breast. Signing the forehead, you say, "O God, enlighten my mind, that I may understand the truths which thou hast revealed." or, "To Thee, O Lord, give my thoughts." Signing the lips, you say "O God, give me strength to speak my holy faith." or "To Thee, O Lord, I consecrate my words." Signing the breast, we say "O God, give me strength to live Thee with my whole heart," or, "To Thee, O God, I offer my heart, and the affections of my heart."

Now, dear children, I hope that you will read several times what I have told you on the meaning of the sign of the Cross, and never forget it. A Catholic should never make the sign of the Cross with great deliberation, or that our Lord may be pleased with you. Yours very truly in Christ,

F. K.

A Gander and the Pickerel.

A boy owned a large gander, and he (illegible) it would be a good joke to fasten a fishline to the leg of the gander, with a hook properly baited, and then he would be fastened the gander with a line on one end of the pickerel, and then he would see a pickerel hook and a frog for bait. The gander was driven into the mill-pond, where the pickerel lay in the shade under the big flume and diving for food. Suddenly the gander felt a pull at his leg, and he looked as surprised as the "Little Fisher-man" when he caught a whale. The gander seemed to think there was something the matter with him and he looked down at his feet under the water to try to see into the big pickerel begun to pack, and the gander made up his mind that he was dead and wanted to go home. He started for the shore, but the pickerel on the hook wanted to go the other way and it was up and took the gander, and so doing as the boy who were watching, seemed frightened and at times would act as though, asking for mercy, and then he would get mad and try and fly to shore, when the pickerel would pull him back. They say it was five only to watch the expression of the features of the gander. It seemed to realize that a change was about to come over him, and he looked pleadingly at the boys who prepared for the worst. After half an hour the boys had worn his back over from the pulling canes ashore and dragged a pickerel out on the bank, and the boys sons and tool off the pickerel and put on another frog, and tried to induce the gander to take another swim; but he couldn't have it. They couldn't drive him in. He looked at them, as he ran through between their legs, as though saying "Boys the way he fun for you, but you have crushed a noble spirit. Not say more to you." The gander ran home and ran towards the barn squeaking as though his heart would break.

This was several months ago, but since then the gander has never gone into the water. The rest of the flock of geese will go down to the pond, and he will go with them as far as the bank, seeming to be arguing with them about the danger they are in, but they go in and have him on the bank.

HOW TIME IS COINTED IN NAPLES.

Half an Hour After Sunset is 21 O'Clock.

A correspondent writes from Naples to the London Times: The mode of reckoning time is a question of no much interest to all Englishmen, whether at home or in foreign lands, that I venture to hope a few words on the subject may not be unacceptable. Several letters have appeared in the Times stating objections to the change proposed to be made in the hours of England. I am so accustomed, from a long residence in southern Italy, to the counting of time from one to twenty-four, that I am most likely to be equally sensible to the difficulties which some may feel; and there is a little, at the same time, which might be made of reckoning suggested for England much easier than it can be in these northern lands. Midnight is invariable, wherever it arises from sunset, or by day, making a considerable difference in the course of a fortnight, and creating the necessity of altering the clocks for that extent. Half an hour after sunset is 24 o'clock, and from that point we begin to open a fresh account with time. On this day on which I am writing the sun sets from 4 to 7 and 4 o'clock afterwards 5.30 o'clock, while I o'clock will be 6.30 o'clock. The manifest advantage of counting from midnight or sunset, I think, is self-evident. It is apprehended by some that the change from 12 to 24 hours, or 12 might occasion a considerable disturbance in services and habits of life. This is a difficulty which is easily obviated, as it is in fact, the system which is now in operation for parts or at hours each, so that our carts are never discharged by more than one hour, and the clocks of the public quarters. But how to distinguish between morning and evening? It may be, I apprehend, settle the question in a very simple manner. At the commencement of the morning or afternoon of our hours they announce the hour, and the minutes are added. The second minute will not course announce that twelve hours have elapsed, and so on till 24 hours, or 12 hours,

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:—

Dear Sir—The last trace of the Christmas season and New Year festivities have vanished for once more, and with the Nightingale the last of the festive time through which we have so recently passed, marks a great chapter in our political existence and opens a brighter page in our long darkened history—the chapter of our country's deliverance—the record of the first mighty step towards her anti-coal emancipation, when the Irish nation with the hearts of valiancy in her breast—the sons Fonadhin, marches across the shattered barriers of Saxon tyranny, and falls down in the battle field of suffering, sacrifice and sorrow to enter with the New Year of Eighty five upon the path of

A NATION'S PEACEFUL PROGRESS.

A path on which the children of Ireland will undoubtedly gather shrine unparalleled renown under name and nation. Yes, Ireland's hopes for future free of social enslavement, rights of the world, as she did in the past, are brighter than ever before. Your readers may ourselves—Heaven's divine light. Your readers may ourselves, but I fancy believe that my anticipations for our regard, will be fully realized are the close of the present century. For Ireland, with the strong religious feelings of her people, their valed patriotism, and high moral gifts, rightly accounts higher than lands not only to freedom, but to the throne of religion and intellectual enlightenment. And the future achievements of Ireland will, and I firmly believe, be recognized by their grand heritage of memory of sacrifices made, of long years of suffering, of unexampled patriotism and bravery, directed by the peculiar and stirring events that marked the course of our latest struggles—struggles in which the men of to day have achieved success. Times they are in a rightness now, without ever denying a balm or cool of sound.

the near bright future, through the darkness of recent years—the glorious gleam of yesterday, to foreshadow in my own feeble way the light of today, as I do now, as my country, more or less unanimously to enter their new position, fit a lingering pain upon the yet unstained crown of Erin. I have hailed the present springtime of my country's National growth and self faith in the warm sunshine of her summer freedom, and I trust and hope this adjoin event may pass after to work but earnest service through the years of prosperity and of joy, and of hope, and of peace, and by down the path of through grave dissatisfaction prevailed amongst the members of the Irish Parliamentary party, and perhaps, I shall not say whether Mr. Tuohy, or Parnell, or the United, acquire, or even, if the means he has adopted; but there is one certainly that in the begin and health of Ireland there does not breathe a word, bitter or more self or the patriots, Mr. Justin McCarthy, Mr. Sexton, Mr. Dillon, Mr. Healy, Mr. Sheehy, and Mr. Tuohy, I believe, I think, I hope, and I trust, the more of harmony and harmony. Mr. Dodd's has made grave accusations against T. P. O'Connor, which that gentleman has not as yet contradicted. If so, I should, to should at once refute these charges and if well-founded, be course to be the admiral representative of the Irish people of Ireland. One of the charges against Mr. O'Connor is that he voted for the Tory Mr. Gorst against a Liberal. Mr. Dodd's friends are denies the conduct of Mr. Wagner, M.

NEW YEAR'S DAY WAS MARKED

in Dublin by the most imposing pomp and ceremony of the installation of Lord Mayor O'Connor. The city presented a scene of bustle and grandeur, such as I have seldom witnessed. The thronged streets were crowded with people, who evidently had assembled in great numbers for the opportunity of admiring the pomp and pageantry of the ceremony. The Lord Mayor's carriage, with its four horses, and the attendant cavalcade, was greeted with cheers, and the entire journey of the procession was a triumphal one. The ceremony of the installation was performed in the city, and the great interest displayed by the citizens of Dublin in the proceedings showed that the new Lord Mayor is popular in his city. The installation of the Lord Mayor of Cork was also a cause in that city on New Year's Day. A few minutes after one o'clock the Mayor-elect, accompanied by Dr. Wyndham Quaid, the Town Clerk and the Mayor's Sergeant-at-Arms, left the City Hall in great splendor. A very stagging episode then occurred. The Sandon people are indignant at the fact that a gentleman who was not even the Mayor-elect, and who had not received the Mayor's invitation to be present at the ceremony, was allowed to take the place of the Mayor-elect, and to be the first to shake hands with the Lord Mayor. MEMORIES OF DEAR OLD MOTHER-LAND.

Sublimely grand, the scenes surrounding
Montana's canyons and Columbia's tide!
Of distant scenes they well remind me
Far o'er the ocean blank and wild.
Fair, holy island, in dates of childhood
My young heart laughed with boyish glee,
At the traveller's praise of our Connaught wilderness.
Its mountains, vales and its spreading lea.

How plain fond memory holds before me
Its ancient landmarks, on Ireland's isle,
Of dear old Galway, what tales they to tell me,
And Lever's exalted version of Daly Dhas.
The distant sound of the rushing fountains
In glen descending to the mighty ocean
Our Clough Patrick and Nephin's mountains
Ever in memory, I hear and see.

In ancient fane I've heard with wonder,
The million echoes of Adelaide's Nun,
Resounding forth like distant thunder
From north to south, from east to west.
The weary pilgrim has found rest returning,
Lady Dacre's Daw has taught gentle glide,
Rolle's tale of the Banshee's mourning,
In old Murrish's Abbey found for and wide.

Those noble monuments of long past age
Is ruined grandeur their presence tell
Of warlike chieftains and learned sages,
Who for faith and freedom, like heroes fell.
Those noble gentlemen—fain as strangers
And oft relished by Connaughtmen rude,
Who for love of country preserve a id old,
Those famous legends of the days of old.

Long absent from my native country,
I'm fondly, fondly, in memory grow,
Ye green ones with wholesome rural air,
And my native hills of dear, old Mayo.
Once more I hear those sounds of childhood,
To stand a stranger in my native land,
Yet lay me down near Ulick's ancient Castle,
Near Murrisk and Kilgeever's abbey grand.

Mid whose ruins stand alone by the wild Atlantic
And rank weeds hide their primely tombs.
The brier, shamrock and holly flourish,
And verdant ivy surrounds those ruins.
Mid all these scenes of memory dear
Thy former glory is now forgot,
There piety reigned, there is desolation,
In blackened ruins stands the peasant's cot.

Ye western mountains, ye ancient romantic
Brought home 'mid strangers on a foreign shore,
To the United States o'er the great Atlantic,
Their faith and freedom in triumph bore,
For their mother Ireland their sons still burning,
The exile's hope is still to see
Ancient Erin from every land returning
To scourge John Bull, and then Erin free.

FORGIVENESS OF INJURIES.

Oh, do you hear that voice from HEAVEN:
"Forgive and you shall be forgiven."
No angel hath a sweeter lyre than this!
Not even Mary's song of bliss!

Again the music comes from heaven:—
"Forgive and you shall be forgiven.
Daily or every trial that blows,
Through the wide earth the promise goes,
Answering sin and opening heaven,
For every sin and every forgiven.

Yes, we can forgive, Thy voice we hear,
Thy gentle voice, we know it well.
Ye never was in sweet and clear
As now, when we this promise hear:
Your sins, which are many, are hereby forgiven,
Forgive, and you shall be forgiven.

Sweet Faith! and on this pledge to you,
And is this duty hard to do?
No one, dear Lord, has done to Thee,
Why should not all men go to heaven?
They who forgive shall be forgiven.

Thou silent, earth, to this are dull!
Full money to the merciful!
Oh, joy to every soul that lives
Such beautiful, bright words He gives,
Whose royal promise is this sweet—
Forgive, and you shall be forgiven.

Then listen to me Jesus, Lord!
Ye have to pray for my soul;
Oh, as we hope with Thee to live,
Thus, unto others, we will be forgiven.

How easily, how sweetly was
The gospel of peace and eternal heaven!
For we forgive and are forgiven.

Temptation; or, the Merchant's Story.

BY LADY HERBERT.

CHAPTER I.

One cold winter night, Mr. Nicholas Woolcomb was sitting alone in his snug little study. A bright fire blazed in the grate, his toes nestled on the thickest possible carpet, in the softest possible easy-chair, heavy crimson curtains sheltered him from every breath of the cutting east wind that was almost maddening miscreants of the pedestrians outside. Truly, Mr. Woolcomb was an enviable man. Books of all shapes and sizes loaded his tables and decorated his shelves. Newspapers and magazines awaited his attention, while from the silver tankpot at his elbow there issued a perfume that would have sent a very Chinaman into ecstasies. Anyone, understanding all this comfort and coziness, the bright smiles that usually lighted up Mr. Woolcomb's countenance were wanting. He looked into five books in succession, as I pshawed over each. Edgeted about the room, then walked to the windows and fastened the shutters; but the very sight of the snow outside was enough for him, and, closing them with a shiver, he returned to his seat and poured out his tea.

Now, I would not for the world have my readers suppose that Mr. Nicholas Woolcomb belonged to that most miserable class, discontented people. Quite the contrary; a merrier, jollier, more sunny-hearted little man never wielded a pen in a London counting house. But it was so now a thing for Mr. Woolcomb to be left alone to keep himself company, that he did not know how to manage the business on his hands. Though he and his wife had been married twenty years, I refuse to say they had never spent so many evenings apart during the whole of that period.

But this night was an exception to every rule, for it was the night of the grand ball at which Miss Jessie, their only child and the pet and darling of their hearts, was to make her entrance into the fashionable world, "to be launched," as her father phrased it, on the great sea of society. Such affairs as these were just what Mr. and Mrs. Woolcomb, good quiet souls, most thoroughly detested. But Jessie was "dreamy," that was certain. The days of dolls and pinafores, dear old days, had passed forever, and it would not do to keep her any longer the exclusive treasure of the home she had so long brightened. So joyously, too, had the little innocent heart looked forward to this ball, that, not for worlds would they have had her suspect the trouble it would cost them to deprive her of the quiet habits that had almost grown into a second nature. No, resolutely had mamma undergone the fitting and fashioning of her evening toilette, and dolefully hearingly had papa endured the squeezing of his gouty toes into a pair of glossy pumps. But there are bosoms on which, and sleepless in one silence, and this very afternoon, just as Mr. Jessie was on the very tiptoe of worldly

* From "Fabiola, Journey, and other poems," published by the Catholic Publication Society.

Mr. Woolcomb had returned from town with a violent cold in his head. Was he sorry? Alas! for human nature, although it will learn to make sacrifices, it will be human nature still, and we have to confess that something very like a thrill of delight had pervaded Mr. Woolcomb from top to toe at the prospect of such a legitimate excuse for stopping at home. In vain did poor Jessie reasure herself that he would be better after dinner. Never did man scowl and sneeze so terribly before. So at last a family council was held, and a hackney coach dressed upon papa's cheeks with his cold, and down Jessie's with disappointment, it was decided that the former should stay at home. So at seven o'clock precisely the hackney coach, and dream off for the ball, and of London, containing Miss Jessie, all sentiment, duster, and white tulle, looking more like a fairy than the plump, substantial little maiden that she was, and poor Mrs. Woolcomb, with her long heart divided, desiring to promote the happiness of her child, yet regretting that she could not stay to comfort her husband. Of course he insisted on coming into the hall to see them off, where, with his head picturesquely adorned with a spy handanna, he changed for the last time his home, to the no small detriment of the tulle, and assured his wife that she looked quite as young and pretty as the day he had married her. But when the carriage had fairly driven off, and the great street door had closed with a bang, the poor little gentleman—fain as strangely as lonesome and so sadly missed the sunny smiles of his home treasure that he almost wished he had screwed up his courage and gone too.

He had just finished his second cup of tea, when a double knock resounded through the quiet house, and a few minutes later he saw him comfy seated, with a certain Mr. Thorpe. This gentleman was a congenitally recent acquaintance, but he had so win Mr. Woolcomb's heart by his urbanity and high sense of duty, that could the latter have had his choice at that moment, as to who should pop in, he would have chosen Mr. Thorpe out of the whole circle of his friends and acquaintance. So long and long chat they had upon every possible topic of the day. First about their families and friends, then the state of the money market; then about politics (upon which subject of course they disagreed), then drifted on, all grave thankfulness, just on into the and, serious subject of labor and wages, trade-unions and strikers. Then they talked of the glum old city, with its successful speculations and sudden crashes, its mushroom princes and fairy fortunes, its broken banks, its ruined firms, and blighted reputations. Both were people of business, keen thinkers, and shrewd workers in the world of commerce. What their verdict on the subject was they coolly and calmly looked down on the vast panorama of city life!

"That honesty is the best policy, after all," said Mr. Woolcomb throat his pipe into the ocean as though he was going to impale the originator of some "smart swindle" then and there.

But Mr. Thorpe was obliged to take his leave to give a long promised lesson on chess to the numbers of St. Joseph's Club. So he tore himself away from the bright friends and the pleasant chat of his friend, and gladdened his way through the cold air and driving wind to the Institute. And what a welcome he had. What a hurrah ran through the room as he entered, shaking the snow from his cloak and hat, and a good-natured Newfoundland dog, and then doing his best to shake a dozen hearty rough hands at once.

CHAPTER II.

Mr. Woolcomb's fidgeting fit was over for good. Mr. Thorpe had the happy knack of pressing every man, woman, and child he came in contact with, into his service, to give a lecture for him that night week. It was to be on "Social Progress; what it is and what it is not," and, as the subject was rather a comprehensive one, and one upon which Mr. Woolcomb had many strong opinions and serious thoughts, he was soon deeply engaged in pulling down the lecture of his intended address.

So engrossed was he, indeed, in his task, that an old servant had entered the room, and had addressed him twice before he became aware of her presence.

"Is that you, Bridget? he exclaimed when she had at last succeeded in attracting his attention. "Well, what is it? he asked, smiling kindly, for the old woman had been Jessie's nurse, and was a person of no small importance in the household. "Not a case of great and sudden illness, I hope."

"Not yet, though that'll be for you by-and-by. Lor' bless you, sir, if we spent one doctor fee a bit with that child of yours, we should have you in the doctor's hands every day."

Mr. Woolcomb heaved a sigh of resignation, for if there was one thing he hated more than another, it was gruel, or, as he unscrupulously termed it "slop."

"Well, Bridget, if it isn't gruel yet a while, what is it?" he asked touching up the dot of an i.

"Why, sir, that young Mr. Taunton, that fine-looking young gentleman, sir, the one as came last into the office, has been here above an hour waiting to speak to you. He came in just after Mr. Thorpe, and I was so taken aback at seeing him away, behind the door, that I quite forgot all about the poor young man, and I ask your pardon, sir, but I told him to mind his own business, and to dictate to me, as had been to the family before he was born. So I took Mr. Taunton into the dining-room, sir, and poked up the fire a bit, and told him I'd do my best for him. I thought as missis and Miss Jessie was out, may be you'd see him."

"I wish he could have waited till to-morrow evening, I must say. I know now that he has anything of any immediate importance to say to me, but show him in, I'll see him."

"Bless your kind heart; didn't I know that you would."

Old Bridget trotted out of the room, well pleased with the success of her mission, which was no small amount of triumph, seeing how strictly, as a rule, Mr. Woolcomb dawdled the evening to his family and friends. She soon returned ushering in her charge, and then retired to the servant's parlor, looking highly important, and growing at least half an inch taller as she passed the offending James.

The visitor that Bridget had thus introduced was a tall, slight lad, about eighteen years of age. His appearance was prepossessing, though his features could hardly be called regular, and his manners those of a gentleman. His voice was musical, and powerful emotions seemed almost to overpower him, while an double-blue a paler overspread his countenance as he approached the table, and Mr. Woolcomb rose to meet him.

"I think evening, Mr. Taunton, take a seat. Come nearer the fire. Are you ill, my boy? you don't look very bright.

"No, sir, thank you. I am quite well, replied the boy, shrinking into himself, "I only wish I could speak to you for a minute, if I may?

"Well, what is it?

The tone was not kind, but it was one cise and business like, and transformed the glowing parlor, in a minute, into the dingy counting house, with the leathern chairs and formal ruling, at least so it seemed to Edgar Taunton, who, frightened at his own temerity, Mr. Macferren called us into his room, sir, about an hour year left."

"Well, my boy, what of it?

"He had been looking over my books, sir, while I was out, and he talk me you will dismiss me."

"Dismiss you! what have you been doing?

"Taking money, sir."

"What money?

"Yours, sir. Mr. Macferren thought it was only thirty shillings, but I have taken two pounds in all.

"Well, my boy, and what have you come to me for?

The boy hung his head.

"What have you come to me for? repeated Mr. Woolcomb, in the cutting tone.

"Because, replied Edgar at length, "because, though Mr. Macferren is just, he is very, very stern. I knew all he would say to you to-morrow, for he told me every word, and I thought there was just a chance if I saw you to-night, and told you truthfully how much I have taken, and how I was led away, and how truly, truly I meant to have returned it, that perhaps you would let me stay on, if only as office-boy for a time, sir, till I have recovered my character, for oh! Mr. Woolcomb, it would break my poor mother's heart if I were to be turned away like this. I have been very wicked, I know that, and ever since I took the money six months ago, I have been unhappy day and night, but I never told mind will not punish me by taking away my mother. O! Mr. Woolcomb, I know I have no right to ask, but let me have another chance."

There was a long silence, broken only by the hissing of the gas and the stifled sobs of the boy, while Mr. Woolcomb shaded his face with his hand, and gazed earnestly into the fire; but as he gazed he said many a silent prayer, for he felt that the life-history of the boy before him hung on the decision of the moment.

"Does Mr. Macferren know that you have come to me?

"No, sir."

"Well, Taunton, before I can say whether I can forgive you, you must tell me freely and frankly how you spent that money, then we shall see.

The boy hesitated for a moment, but a kind, mild voice bade him speak, and the gentle tones of the speaker, as he listened to his story. Story, alas—too common—of the false shame that one not endure to be surpassed by richer companions. Alone in London, fifty miles away from his mother and her restraining influence, his sprightliness and intelligence had attracted the attention of two young men of a rank in life as far superior to his, in wealth and moral training had been superior to theirs. Reckless in their assumed superiority, unscrupulous in their conduct, flat in their habits, they had at first caused Edgar's disdain, but their noisy and admiration had tickled his vanity, acquaintanship had ripened into intimacy, and the poor boy had ended by admiring and doing his best to imitate what, at first, he had disliked and despised. During the summer a boating excursion had been planned by these young men, consisting of about a dozen of the wildest youths and the giddiest girls they could muster. An evening at the theatre, and a supper afterwards, had closed the day, which had been full of disagreeables to poor Edgar, and when new expenses he had been called upon to share of the reckoning, he had found himself cleared of his wh in stock of pocket money, and a sovereign in debt to host. Son of a widow, he had known privations from his youth up upwards, but never had bright had been his mother's dear little drawing-room to make both ends meet, that he had been actually afraid of her to a deed, to which, perhaps, no amount of money could have tempted him. A little mistake in the rough cash-book suggested the idea, the evil spirit was conquered at first, and in an evil hour, Edgar Taunton had appropriated two pounds from his master to be re-paid next pay-day. But he has reckoned without his host. The human repaid with evil and sorrow his to appear poor before his friends would not allow him to appreciability or behind the fashion, and the next quarter day saw a "cut-away coat" on his back, but it did not see any money refunded. Next time probably he might have done better, for the thought of the deficiency was fast taking the light from his eye and the spring from his step, but his mother had been taken suddenly ill, and he had even been obliged to ask for his salary in advance to go and see her. Her pleasantly Mr. Macferren had given it to him, and how kindly Mr. Woolcomb had called him into his private room, and told him to be sure to call round at his house before starting. Of course he had gone, and there good, kind Mrs. Woolcomb had had some wine and fruit, and other little nonsense ready packed for the poor invalid, while Miss Jessie herself had come and spoken to him so kindly, that her smile had been almost as good as the present.

His mother had recovered, but Edgar had felt it almost a relief to be obliged to leave her, when she was capable of much exertion, so much did he dread her surprise at his disappointed hopes, and consequent sorrow. But a deep and earnest desire of the heart, seldom fails to answer a fervent whispered words from the mother to a dearly loved, and when he had so nearly lost, brought forth good fruit, and Edgar returned to his duties with many good resolutions. His master's kiddiness seemed to have heaped coals of fire on his head that burned into his very soul. Day and night his one thought was to restore the money the one dread, detection. As the next quarter day approached an almost frenzied anxiety seized him, a kind of hope that in the very refunding of the money he might betray his secret. He no longer dreamed his old dreams, nor sought the society of his bad counsellors, but sat alone in his lodgings, sharp as the tortures of the damned, and yet, in the very excitement of his manner that had attracted Mr. Macferren's suspicions. Certain it is, that on this very day the manager had sent Taunton on an errand, and then, fetching the rough cash-book to the latter into his private office, had carefully compared the items entered with those in the ledger. He soon discovered the deficiency, and the result was the scene above.

Calmly and quietly the youth told his story, and when it was finished, he looked into Mr. Woolcomb's face with somewhat of the old clear, candid look, that had once so charmed him, coming into his eyes.

For some minutes there was another silence. At last it was broken.

"Shall you send me away, sir?

"There was no answer.

"If you could really read my heart, sir, and see how I repented of my sin, long before it was detected, you would not, I hope, be hard, but hearing into tears he sobbed like a child.

Mr. Woolcomb rose from his seat, and, laying his hand on the boy's shoulder, gently said, "Edgar, I feel that you have sinned like the tertiu, and I forgive you, by and gently. Come, drink this glass of wine, and when you are calm we will have a little talk about the future.

"I can't, sir.

"Nonsense, try, there, just a little—now get upset."

He took up the paper as he spoke, and all in the room, saw that time-worn, but the noble cause before his eyes that were so full of tears, that poor

HOW GOOD MEN DIE.

The Last Days of Bishop Bagnaret of Montreal, Canada. Reconciled to Die and Obtains Receive his Eternal Reward.

Most Rev. Ignatius Bourget, D. D., was consecrated Bishop of Telmessus in 1857 and died in his 70 years of Rome-pals, the third oldest prelate in the world. As already announced in these columns, the venerable prelate is gradually passing away, and his following publication of the last rites of the Church, he died with great serenity, in the presence of his weeping flock. The following is the Montreal Gazette, Gazette, Herald.

We read in L'Evenement a touching notice of this illustrious Prelate. Archbishop Bourget. "Profound emotion, says our esteemed contemporary, "prevails among our Catholic population." Behold how the mortals have stricken all hearts like a thunder bolt. A man among the most eminent of our times, a man who was charity for half a century been the object of the varying judgment of men, but which, after some inevitable mobility, never failed to win universal admiration; a man whose reputation for sanctity neither envies nor calumnies have limited, towards whom daily for many years has been the cry of joy and of the unhappy among men to seek relief from sufferings of body and mind, and which at the moment has come when the venerable and saintly Archbishop of Montreal, Bishop elsewhere, reached the term of his illustrious career. MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

May God bless and direct through the intermediate Bishops, the Pastors of the Church, the Catholic Press, the organ of Catholic opinion, which, under the guidance of religion, the rights and dues of the Holy Apostolic See, and advocate in the spirit and principle of the Gospel, Science and Society.—Pius IX.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the vital agent in popular government; and yet it is a power which is wielded by irresponsible persons who control it. In our view, conducted as it is, it is not only a useful and serious occupation, not only a work, highly profitable to the welfare of society, but it is the work of heroes. What is and what might be the power of a Catholic journal, conducted by men who have the spirit, whatever it may be, to advocate, in the Catholic Union."—BISHOP, THEODORE MCGEAR (ST. PAUL).

Resignation of Most Rev. J. S. Alemany, O. P.

It has long been an open secret that Archbishop Alemany, O. P., was desirous of resigning the Episcopal dignity as soon as he could procure a Coadjutor. In answer to his Grace's request, a letter was received from the Sovereign Pontiff last week consenting to the venerable Archbishop's prayer and returning him from the heavy burden he has so long borne. In a few months, therefore, or as soon as all the multifarious business connected with the Archdiocese has been completed, his Grace will retire, but to what locality is not at present known.

In this connection it may prove interesting to briefly glance at the condition of the Church in California when Archbishop Alemany, O. P., first came to its shores, and to trace the life labors of this modern Apostle of the Catholic Church.

In October, 1840, Very Rev. Garcia Moreno, of the Franciscan Order, was consecrated Bishop of Upper and Lower California. On the death of this Prelate at Santa Barbara, in 1846, Father Gonzales, the Superior of the Franciscan Order, became Administrator of the vast Diocese until the appointment of Most Rev. Joseph Sadoc Alemany, O. P., who was consecrated Bishop of Monterey, June 30, 1850, and translated July 29th, 1853, to the Metropolitan See of San Francisco. Our venerable Archbishop was born at Vich, in Catalonia—a province of Spain, in 1814, consequently he is at present in the seventy-first year of his age; he was ordained in Viterbo, in the Roman States, in 1837, hence—if Almighty God whose faithful servant he has been, spares him—he will celebrate, in two years, the golden jubilee of his priesthood. Shortly after his ordination he was published, principal in the important post of assistant rector in the Church of the Minerva, in Rome, then under the control of the Dominican order, but which has since been stolen from them by the secular power.

Forty-five years ago our beloved Prelate arrived in the United States, having volunteered to leave his ecclesiastical position in the Eternal City in order to carry the Glad Tidings of Salvation to the Catholics where the Catholic of St. Peter's parish still bear him in grateful memory. In 1850 the eminent subject of our brief memoir was selected as Provincial of the Dominican Order in the United States, and as such was summoned to Rome in 1850 to take part in a General Chapter of the Order, and whilst in the Eternal City he was elevated to the Episcopate which he has adorned by his virtues and embellished by the sanctity of his long and laborious life.

For more than a third of a century Archbishop Alemany has been the spiritual father, the friend, and the God-given guide of the Catholics of California. His works proclaim his zeal; the love that burns in every Catholic heart is his best history; and the deep reverence felt that the tie, which bound him in the bonds of filial love and affection to his extensive flock, is far better enlogy than any that the cold words which fall from our pen could pronounce.

Our venerable Archbishop has not—in his long life—labored for a single hour for himself. He has spent his years in God's service, and spent his strength in laboring zealously for the salvation of souls. It is only thirty-six years since a small wooden shanty on Vallejo street sufficed to hold the Catholics of San Francisco whenever they desired to worship Almighty God. The churches in the other portions of the vast diocese were merely the ruined adobe buildings left by the Missionary Fathers. The native congregations were scattered and rapidly disappearing; but our venerable Metropolitan has lived to see this spiritual wilderness blossom as a rose, and he has been the husbandman of heaven who has labored to bring about this state of Christian cultivation in the Lord's Vineyard.

More than one hundred and fifty churches and chapels erected to the glory of God attest the zeal of the Pastor and the generosity of the flock. Nearly two hundred priests, the majority of whom were educated and ordained for this diocese, fill up their voices to the throne of God and ask Him who send them such a beloved Bishop to bless his last days even as his whole life has been blessed. A Theological seminary, six colleges, eighteen academies, five asylums, and four hospitals—are all living monuments of the wateful care of this prudent Pastor for his people. The orphan has been provided for; the sick are nursed and nourished; the aged and infirm are cared for; the Christian education of youth has gone on apace; the higher education of ecclesiastics is provided for so that none need be called to their reward, has been instituted. And this the Rock which has grown up from a few hundreds to two hundred thousand, finds itself surrounded by churches, schools and institutions wherein they can find salvation for their souls, solace for their afflictions, mental strength to serve God in religion, or to preserve their faith whilst fighting the battle of life.

We would not dare to offend the well-known humility of our holy Archbishop by any reference to his corporal works of mercy. The recording angel will reveal them on the last day, and as they were all performed beneath the sanctifying shadow of the sacred Cross, there let them rest until our beloved Archbishop hears the joyful mandate: "Enter thou into the joy of the Lord."

Anti-Catholic Mush Manufactured by Methodists.

The few people who read through the columns of the "organs" of the different sects, cannot be blamed if their minds are muddled or misinformed upon many matters appertaining to the doctrine of the Church or the customary religious devotions of Catholics. Protestant preachers seem to have been born for the purpose of sowing the seed of Satan throughout the world, and—with a third of a century's experience of their unscrupulous willings—we must acknowledge that they accomplish the work of their Belzebubian Sire in a manner to leave that deceitful spirit no cause for despair!

There is no story too silly or too sickening for Protestant preachers to print whenever they wish to make "Roman bowl." They stop at no absurdity; they falter at no falsehood; they give loose rein to all their inventive faculties—whatever they set out to feed the lambs of the fanatical fold upon the husks of their hatred of the Catholic Church.

For the truth of this charge against preachers and other prejudiced pensmen who pose in the columns of Protestant papers as the calumniators of the Catholic Church, we need only refer our readers to the numerous examples we have already printed in these columns, and if any more evidence is required we have it on hand in the shape of an extract from the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, which a subscriber in Seattle has sent us in order that Catholics might realize the ridiculous rich which Methodist malignant invent in order to deceive their dupes and to keep alive their false prejudices against "Romish" priests and "Romish" practices.

The story told by this slander-spreading sectarian sheet is to the effect that a little Mexican girl—who was old enough to help her mother in her household duties—first heard of the Son of God from a Methodist preacher who was exhorting a corbonicro congregation. The story goes on to say how this female victim of priestly indiscretion and neglect "eagerly followed the missionary and heard him preach until she, too, believed the Gospel and became a Christian."

Now this it appears that there are Methodist writers who actually believe that Catholics are not Christians! And yet it is on such rot published, prejudiced preachers that furnish the mental pabulum for most Protestant papers! Talk about ignorance! Why, a Catholic would weep tears of blood if the demoniacal spirit of bigotry could so far possess his soul as to lead him to say that Protestants were not Christians. Yet these Phariasical pundits who profess Christianity which is not all from Christ, and before the community as the judges of those who possess the test great evidences of Christianity, are continually fabricating shams given out to inflame the readers that the next time this miraculously-converted girl behold her darling preacher—"in the cemetery on the first of November, on which day the Roman Catholics go to the graves of their dead friends and place on them dishes of meat, bread, fruit and wine, believing that in some way the dead will be benefited by it." (!!!)

Patience almost ceases to be a virtue when we read such ridiculous rant and falsehood in the columns of a Protestant paper professing a Christianity denied to Christians! The Wesleyan writer evidently alludes to "All-Souls" day, although the date is wrong, and the ridiculous rite he alludes to as furnishing food to the dead, is the custom of Chinese pagans, which this Monchanson Methodist meligner has purposely placed upon the shoulders of Catholics in order to prejudice his deceived readers against them, and to prove his former falsehood—that Catholics are not Christians!

Could the force of the malignant spirit of bigotry—of Satanic hatred—go no further! The wilful ignorance, the standard spleen, the deliberate falsehood injected into the lines we have quoted, show that the spirit of Satan guided the pen that so perversely distorted truth in order to crush Catholicity with an avalanche of detraction.

The secularism sterile brings his fanatical rules narration to a climax by telling his dupes that the brave little Mexican girl—the result saved from the burning—while walking through the cemetery, heard her sweet scented swaddling preacher exhorting those idolatrous and paganized Mexican Catholics that "Christians did not follow such customs." In return for this information that Mexican Catholics commenced to feed manna at the aforesaid preaching, using which the brave little girl sashed forward to save her charming colporteur whose blood was streaming from a thousand wounds, and whom she finally rescued from the Roman Mexicans at the risk of her precious life! Curtain falls amidst a blaze of blue lights and the lugubrious wailing of the Wesleyan audience over the horrible superstition sustained by the "Romish" Church!

When we reflect that the people who invent these infernal inspired falsehoods against Catholics are a Christian sect, we can forthwith see the force of God's wisdom in having an infallible guide for men in religious matters. The Methodists are lighter who wrote the story we have quoted could open his bible any day and print his prevaricated yarn to the command of God: "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor," yet he would very likely plead in his excuse that it was the "spirit of the" Methodist Church!

Farm and Home.

WHAT HE SAID.

Oh, yes, I'll tell you the story—
The very words that were said
You see the supper was cooking,
And I was sitting the table,
And Michael came into the pantry;
His love was unreasoning red.

He opened his half-shut fingers,
And gave me the glimpse of a ring;
And then—oh yes, I remember,
The kettle began to sing;
And Fanny came in with her baby—
The smartest bit of a thing.

And the kettle were out in a minute—
"Well, what come next?" I ask me my-self—
Fanny sat down close with the baby,
And we all sat down to tea.
And grandma looked over her glasses
To cover at Michael and me.

But it wasn't till after milking
That he said what he had to say.
How was it? Oh, Fanny had taken
The baby and gone away
The fourth of November, I believe—
He had a new bonnet that day.

We were standing under the plum tree,
And Michael said something low,
But I was shy and flustered,
And trembled, I almost know.
For old fine as he looked at milkers,
And Reuben's no worthly slow.

And that—let me see—where was I?
Oh, he said he was lonesome and cold,
He was true and he would be true always
Till the chickens flew up to bed.
Well, he loved me, and wave to be married—
And he—about what he said.

Sun Flowers as Fuel.

The Dakota Farmer says: "A correspondent, after having tried 'turf,' coal, wood and cowflowers, has settled upon the last named as the cheapest and best fuel for treeless Dakota or any prairie country. He says: "I grow one acre of them every year, and have plenty of fuel for one stove the whole year around, and use some in another stove besides. I plant them in hills the same as corn (only three seeds to a hill), and cultivate the same as corn. I cut them when the leader or top flower is ripe, let them lay on the ground two or three days; in that time I cut off all the seed heads, which make good feed for chickens. The stalks are then hauled home and packed in a compact shed with a good roof on. When cut in the right time the stalks when dry are as hard as oak, and make a good hot fire, while the seed heads with the seed in make a better fire than the best hard coal. The seed being very rich in oil, it will warm better and burn longer, bushel for bushel, than hard coal. The sunflower is very hard on land, the piece of land selected to plant on should be highly enriched by manures. In the great steppes (prairie) regions in the interior of Russia and in Tartary, where the winters are more severe than here in Dakota, the sunflowers are, and have been for centuries past, the only kind of fuel used."

Bleeding at the Nose.

The best remedy for bleeding at the nose, as given by Dr. Gleason, is one of his lectures, is in the vigorous motion of the jaws, as if in the act of mastication. In case of a child, a wad of paper should be placed in the mouth, and the child instructed to chew it hard. It is the motion of the jaws that stops the flow of blood. This remedy is so very simple that many will be inclined to laugh at it, but it has never been known to fail, even in severe cases.

Another way is to shut off the arterial flow, supposing your nose bleeds by the right temple; with the end of the forefinger feel along the outer end of the right jaw until you feel the beating of the artery directly under your finger, the same as the pulse in your wrist, then press the finger hard upon it, thus getting the little fellow in a tight place between your finger and the jaw-bone; the result will be that not one drop of blood will go into that side of your face while the pressure continues; hence the nose instantly stops bleeding for want of blood to flow; continue the pressure for five to ten minutes and the ruptured vessels in the nose will by that time, probably, contract so that when you let the blood into them they will not bleed.

Regarding the Sign of the Cross.

A young gentleman of Boston asks, among other things

"Dutch a Catholic to insist on "blessing himself," that is, making the Sign of the Cross, at a Protestant table, when he is the only Catholic present? Would it not look as if he was forcing the evidence of his religion upon the non-associates?

It might—yes, it probably would. And, if the young Boston gentleman's associates smiled, shrugged their shoulders or even laughed, it would be forcing evidence of their ill breeding on him. If he, dunder creature, could endure that, they ought to be able to stand as soft on his part almost as natural to a Catholic as to walk, an act which he learns to perform, in fact, before he can talk.

If a Mohammedan should at the proper time spread out his prayer-cloth in a Boston hotel and perform his minaikan devotions, nobody but an Englishman of a certain class would hurst into loud guffaws. The cultured Bostonian would accept the act as a testimony of the spreading fame of the Centre of Culture, and respect the Turk for the courage of his opinions. If the Catholic makes the Sign of the Cross, the cultured Bostonian, who prides himself on the and the crescent together in a collection of bric-a-brac, will respect his motive, or smile at it. If he smiles, the Catholic will know at once that he is not a Brahmin, but one of those outside barbarians who infest the classic city without being acknowledged by her.

We have accepted that the Protestant host who, at his dinner table, would invite an allusion to the Blessed Virgin, or put a prayer for the dead into his "grace." We do not think our Boston young friend has ever met one who, not to force the evidence of his religious opinions on his Catholic guest, would not make his grace as Christian as possible. This being so, why should our young friend be so delicate after forcing his "" religious opinions" on his non-Catholic associates! Why should he endeavor to effect humility, and, by inflicting the Sign of the Cross, do it with the gas lowered and the shutters closed, for fear that somebody might see him? Would it be an act of humility to offend a fellow-man of the Puritans by "blessing" oneself in his presence? Our young friend does his non-Catholic associates injustice. The least nearly of these respects manly courage.—N. Y. Freeman's Journal.

Why We Call the Cat "Puss."

Do you ever think why we call the cat puss? A great many years ago the people of Egypt worshipped the cat. They thought the sun was like the moon, because she was more active at night and because her eyes change just as the moon changes, which is sometimes full and sometimes bright, little crescent, or half moon, as we say. Did you ever notice puss's eyes to see how they change? So these people made an idol with a cat's head and named it Pasht, the same name they gave to the moon; for the word means the face of the moon. That word has been changed to pas or puss, the name which almost every one gives to the cat. Puss and pussy-cat are pet-names for kitty everywhere. But few people know that it was given to her thousands of years ago.

St. Peter and the Cherries.

In the happy, holy long ago, when our Lord walked about amongst men, it chanced that He took a journey with St. Peter. They started about the middle of July, at noon, and the sun shed its most burning rays upon the earth. As they walked along very slowly and painfully, they saw on the roadside an old horse-shoe. The gentle Saviour slackened His pace, in order to let his companion pass. He wished to see a blacksmith would stop and pick it up. St. Peter looked at the horse-shoe, and passed on. Our Lord said nothing, stopped, picked up the piece of iron and put it in His pocket. Very soon they passed out of the door of a farmer, and to him the Saviour sold the horse-shoe and with the money which He received purchased a pilgrim of cherries from a woman who asked him to buy some of her fruit.

The heat was so excessive that St. Peter was overcome with thirst; and then the thought came to his mind that his divine Master might very well give him some of the cherries. Our Lord, who reads the hearts of men, let fall a single cherry; the Apostle stooped, picked it up, and ate it. After a few moments another cherry fell. Again St. Peter stooped, picked it up, and ate it. And during the journey the cherries fell one by one; so that he who was destined to be the Prince of the Apostles bent down at least a hundred times.

At last, the last cherry had been taken, our Blessed Lord, laying His sacred hand kindly on St. Peter's shoulder, said "If thou had been once to pick up the horse-shoe, there would not have been charged to stoop a hundred times to pick up the cherries. Learn of Me, for I am meek and humble of heart.

Priest, Rabbi and Minister.

A venerable priest, while traveling to a distant mission found himself in company with a Jewish Rabbi and a Protestant minister. The latter sought to ingratiate himself with the Rabbi by a free indulgence in contemptuous remarks about the Catholic priesthood. At last he broke out: "Here we are three representatives of three religions, as apostolic missionary, and a minister of religion which of us is right?" The old priest, as if to rebuke the arrogance and indiscreetness of the question, arose to change his seat. The rabbi took him by the hand and said, with a smile "Please remain still and wait for you." Then, turning to the minister, he said, "Listen! If Christ has come, then the priest here is right. If He has not come, then I am right; but rabbi and minister you are completely wrong."

The rebuffed minister, turning to a little dog which was lying at the feet of the rabbi, "Maybe you, too, are a rabbi?"

"Oh, no!" replied his master. "He eats pork, and therefore is no Jew. Then, too, he eats meat on Friday, and for that reason can be no Catholic. He must therefore be a Protestant."

The minister, after that, relapsed into silence.

office, not to the persons who held it, and would not be alienated without the consent of the tribe. So were the lands distributed to religion, to education, to hospitality. The plough lands, pasture lands, and wasteлands were also well marked, and distributed yearly to the husbandmen and herdsman. I have satisfied myself by close and conscientious research that the Ireland of the age of Charlemagne was a land of abundance, where Christian civilization was daily elevating the people. Unfortunately there was no unity of government. The lack of national cohesion exposed a simple, peaceful, pastoral, intellectual people to the power of the warlike Dane and Anglo-Norman. If it were possible, by hoeing out the hardheds, to revert to something like this national or district tenure of property, it would be preferable. Do you know that Bishop has turned out the landlord in more than one locality, and that they hold the land after this fashion?

And now comes up in Ireland the no less agitating question of the land in cities. It is growing in practical interest every day as soon must be ripe for some solution. Ah, happy America! I wonder if her people are thankful enough to Him who made both the land and the sea.

Catholic and Protestant Missions Compared.

FRAUDS IN FOREIGN PROTESTANT MISSIONS.

HUMBUGGERY CONCERNING CONVERTED HEATHENS.

Fanatical Preachers Living in Luxury.

The following contrast—says the St. Joseph Advocate—is credited to the noted George Train in a lecture at Cincinnati, where we ourselves, as well as "M. R." (whose version is here given), heard him more than once. It has all the interest of a romance, with all the internal evidence of fact. The eccentric George Franco is not a Catholic, as everybody knows. Brought up to sympathize with the "poor" Protestant missionaries in China, whose wonderful "sacrifices" and "hard lot" among the "Heathen Chinese," he had heard so much about at his Massachusetts Sunday-school, he not only contributed his pocket-money, but, when a lad, picked blackberries and turned an honest penny by selling them, to keep square on the twenty-five cent contribution list for the "poor starving missionaries" so far away! Grown to be a man, he actually visits the Celestial Empire, and

HERE IS WHAT HE SAW ON LANDING:

"A short walk brought me to the interiors of the missionary's house; a well kept walk of shell led to the mansion, which was ornamented by a large silver door-knob.

"Well, I looked closely at that door-knob, and what do you think I saw. I imagined at least, that I saw in this big lump of silver a great many of the twenty-five cent pieces that I contributed when a boy. It was some minutes after ringing the bell that I was admitted by a full fledged English lackey, puffed, powdered and shaved, who, in a half sniffy manner, demanded my business. I told him I wished to speak to his employer, perhaps flashed into my mind, that he wished to forget. But in a moment his face brightened, and with a smiling countenance he answered

"'I AM A PHYSICIAN.'

"Thus the Christian Missionary, and have some skill in applying roots and herbs, and cooling potions to the cure of human infirmities, but my principal, my only sure, is the soul of men. I am here in obedience to my Divine Master, to teach and instruct those poor benighted creatures in the faith of Christ. I am a Catholic missionary priest, so-lasovering to do my duty as best I may. He bowed the girdle around his waist, and produced a crucifix from his breast, which he devoutly kissed.

"His indignant sin that he had assumed a complete mastery of the Chinese language, and had been fifteen years on the mission, in order to do all the good possible, he had studied the medical qualities of plants, and by his knowledge was enabled to cure many diseases, if not of too malignant a type, and by such acts he had gained the gratitude and esteem of the natives, and he had made many converts to the Christian religion. Four or five miles back he had built a little church and school, and hospital, where he treated the sick.

"'And are you content to wear out your life in this way,' I asked—'away from home, society and friends—lacking some of the world's joys and pleasures? Surely this is more than man should be asked to do.'

"'Sons, my dear friend,' said the good missioner, 'that I am as happy as it is possible for mortal to be. I live in the divine contamplation, and I endeavor to follow in the footsteps of my dear Lord. My highest ambition is to bring three poor benighted children of the desert to a knowledge of the true faith, and make them children and followers of Christ; and if, in the pursuit of this calling, I am thought worthy of the crown of martyrdom, I will most gladly welcome it indeed. But you must come into my sir, as many poor people await my coming; and may blessing as few yet, and that conscious myself and compassion innovated in the old man gave me his blessing. Those said eyes, that pale, emaciated countenance, that travel-stained garb, and those wrinkled angles, which were the only protection from the sharp sand; that cheerfulness of manner, that sublime, noble expression of sentiment, all impressed me with the conviction that there must be something divine in a religion which will lead men's breasts with so much order and zeal, and teach such self-abnegation and heroism of soul.

"I sent a polite note back to my friend, the Protestant missioner, excusing myself for not attending the lunch to which I was invited, and I thought, as I slowly wended my way back to where our ship was making ready to start, that if I was once more a little boy, in Massachusetts, and had twenty-five cents to spare every week, I would know better what missionary society to give it to."

Armagh.—The Very Rev. T. McCrystal, P. P., Cooley, and the Very Rev. T. P. McCullough, P. P., Darver, county Louth, have been appointed by his Grace the Primate to the dignity and office of Canon.

A convention of delegates, from National Leagues branches in this county, was held, in Armagh, on January 5, when a committee was appointed to attend at the Boneilary Demonstration, and a public meeting was held, at which resolutions of confidence in Messrs. Parnell and the Irish Party, and the establishment of further branches of the League, were adopted.

Dublin.—The Gaelic Athletic Association is bound to go ahead, having got a vigorous start in the south of Ireland, and

Dublin, one hundred miles south, a Dublin gentleman, met with his death in the river on Jan. 5th, under most painful circumstances. He was seen by Richard Rafferty, struggling in the water. Rafferty at once threw him a rope, but the unfortunate man, who, it appears, was at this time labouring under the influence of drink, failed to seize it, and sank.

A few days ago, one of the workmen in putting up an electrical conductor on the Phœnix Park Monument, fell a distance of 60 feet, and fractured his skull. It was necessary to go to the Phœnix Park, on the following day, with a stretcher to carry the poor unfortunate fellow, who, it was thought, would not live long enough to reach the hospital. He died in a few days, and, judging the Nationalists to do their duty, return a candidate for the Southern division of County Dublin at the next election.

Tipperary.—Charles Hogan, of Golden, sold his stock in an outlying farm at Thurles, on Jan. 5, and divided a holding of 26 acres into four parts, giving one part, at the old rent, to each of the four evicted tenants.

At the usual weekly meeting of the Tipperary Board of Guardians, on Jan 11, the Board's Treasurer wrote stating that his attention had been directed to the fact that a number of tenants of the Guardians at present in Ballinahinch Workhouse, Ballinrobe, County Mayo, had, on Tuesday, 7 p. m., Gortakeagh Manor, leased Mill-hill, accidentally shot a boy fourteen years old, named Lally, who happened at the time to be passing through Cordangan Woods. The Treasurer was directed to forward the coroner's duty.

Waterford.—On Jan. 4, in Waterford, a sailor named Finnegan, was drowned in the river. Deceased was a native of Greenock, and would swim well.

At the Waterford Police Court, on Jan. 5, John and Thomas Morrissey were brought up on remand charged with having attempted, on St. Stephen's Day to set fire to a new mill and cross-shore, in which, at the time, there were 40 tons of cotton, and 1,000 barrels of flour. The prisoners were discharged, the Bench being satisfied that they were not guilty of the offence with which they were charged.

Westmeath.—The Lord Lieutenant has replied to the letter of Rev. Father Duffy, the minister, Collinglow, a thing for an inquiry into the circumstances of the Ballykelly affair, because not only of the outlawing of the inquiry, but of the false statements put forward by the Protestant witnesses which have since been sworn to be false. The Lord Lieutenant in Spencer's reply to the effect that he sees no reason to grant the inquiry.

THE SONGS OF OUR LAND.

BY HERBERT.

Roses where you will thro' the civilized nations
From the prim lanes of Wales to summer's bright isles,
And I still hi will greet you in sweet intonations—
The last roses of summer left blooming alone.
Ye sons of the Muse that illumine our page,
Moore, Mahoney, Davis and Goldsmith the Maid,
Your notes shall go down thro' eternity's ages
Sanctified in the beautiful songs of our land.

Yet children of nature, sweet poets of our island,
Your songs like blossoms may perish or wither,
Your songs like the seasons that glean from the highland,
Lilts skare shall give light thro' the vistas of time.
I've roamed through the universe, mixed with its throngs,
From the Orient sky to the Occident strand,
Yet heard them recited and sung in all places—
The soul-thrilling beautiful songs of our land.

GRA GRAN-D-AIL.

BY P. DOMEST.

'Neath woods of Malin—'neath Mercie rea,
Or where green pines grow Cyder's grey,
When toilsome day was pass'd and done
And evening's sweet shades of stars came—
In God's harmonious mystery—
Its voice the human heart spoke
Like some spirit fraught of guile
Prayer was offered—sweet incense—
My Motherland—my source, my wile—
My Ireland.

Where pauper's power lower'd aloft
Of Malin, mosque and sculptured stone,
Where vespers voiced by monks of
An incense loaded sweet and soft—
I raved in the jewel's eyes,
But still, for me, what could alone
For the land I love—the sacred ground,
The land, whose soil is Catholic, and sacred
Sweet Ireland,
Where only roses climbed, round
My mem'ry's zone—its light and sweet,
My Ireland.

I saw the Danube proudly sweep
Where empires glitter'd and where thrones
Bow'd in the thrall of time still weep
The Tempiled nev'r and dolphin keep;
I saw the heaven dazed in scenes,
And when I heard poor Poland's songs
My soul at last swell'd to see
Others sweeping scenes, for me
Sweet—sweet—Ireland.
And wreathed in smiles, for thee,
My own emblem 'neath shadows
Gra Gran-a-il.

Sing, German, sing—thy Fatherland;
Poland, Poland, mourn—thy glories gone,
Rome, Mantle, boast—thy lazy strand;
Thy all the world in peace yield
Its myriad beauties wave in one,
Yet, Ireland, I will sing—when the song—
My Irish boast still yearning bear
The beauties of Ireland, my dove-as-one
Sweet Ireland,
For round my heart your vow and wrong—
Green as the shady woods sling and throne,
Gra Gran-a-il.

Thy Child has smiled upon me
Ere I may assist would have,
Robed in a lost Hell Mary,
Also! in long ago.

Yet, stay, also—I thank thee
And bless my gracious God
That I live for to-day
Along life's pathway pled.
The path is the journey
I almost come to fear,
Queen of Perpetual Succour!
Show thee art always near.

Such Pill with sweet wisdom
New' hell to-day of deptime,
New to the night of death,
I'm now, my children dying,
Ye rain, in hallow, Mary!
In that dread hour be near me,
To succour and to save.

When life and death are over,
And when the chasmby fazes
Has wrought its works of mercy,
May Jesus name my name,
And bid me pass in peace,
Is triumph in Hell Mary!
Queen of Perpetual Succour,
Till then, sit I stand my part.

Temptation; or, the Merchant's Story.

BY LADY HERBERT.

CHAPTER III.

(Into Christmas Eve, many, many years ago, a certain merchant's clerk, whom we will call Smith turned out of his master's office. He was a neat, brisk, tidily made little fellow, good-looking enough in these days—neat, prim, somewhat bright, not too far everybody, and a sort of "begone dull care" expression in his face. But on this occasion he was decidedly out of sorts. Something in everybody's gayer, and ringing in his ears, Smith had put the question plainly to the managing clerk, and, to his utter astonishment, he had been told that the principal intended the post for his nephew, a young man just returning from foreign parts, who would be able to neither the business, whom he remembered. Instead of thinking of the Angels' Song, or the Virgin Mother, or the Divine Child, Smith contemplated his toes; and instead of admiring the brightly-decorated shops, or answering the Christmas greetings that every now and then assailed him, he let his mind dwell on his wrongs.

Now, one of these wrongs of which we have seen, the fact that his master presumed to prefer his orphan nephew to him, and the chance was, if possible, more aggravating still. Smith, of course, like all poor clerks, was engaged to be married, and the object of his affections was fortunately blessed with a very prepossessing uncle, and the old lady positively refused to even send to the marriage until Smith should have a little home of his own, and some little family money, at least, to begin with. As long as promotion had loomed up in the distance, Smith had agreed readily enough to this adjournment, but now that his hopes were dashed in that quarter, his fiancée was darker, and that poor lady, his mother-in-law elect had offered him in her autocratic fashion.

It was a bitter walk for the poor fellow, though he have understood its bitterness, you must have stood in his position, and have realized as he did, the sudden dashing down of the one darling wish of his life. Smith's heart was crushed, and Mary Smith's heart was crushed, and Mary Smith's heart was crushed, and Mary

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

May God bless and direct through the labors of St. Francis de Sales, under whose protection they wish to be placed, the writers of Catholic journals who defend the claims of religion, the rights and those of the Holy Apostolic See, and adhere in his spirit and principle with devotedness to the Holy Father.

"Journalism is the chronicle of every period, because it is the chief agent in producing it. Into any important idea consciousness rejoices, and spreads throughout the world. In our view, religious journalism is not only a useful and serious occupation, but only a work intelligible and practicable in the present state of Christendom. What is and what ought to be the object of Catholic journalism but to combat error and defend the truth, whatever it may be—sacred or, let Divine truth."—RATISBON, THEOLOGISCHE REVUE, UNTRUM.

The Jesuits and the Gunpowder Plot.

One of the most notable means adopted by the English government to keep alive in the breasts of the people of Great Britain a hatred of the Catholic Church, was by means of annual celebrations in memory of some mythical "massacre," some "Popish plot," or other catastrophe from which the English Protestant people were saved from utter annihilation at the hands of a few Catholics who were then in proportion of about one in a thousand to the whole population. The reason which induced Parliament to pursue this policy is found in the fact that Protestantism was the established religion of the kingdom, while "Popery" was condemned by public law and punishable by Parliamentary enactments. The aim, therefore, of all English opposition to the Catholic Church was to entirely root out "Romanism" from English soil, so that England could say to the world:

Behold! In one company at least,
There is no sign of "The Beast!"

In order to carry out this programme successfully, every element of the English population was regularly schooled in bigotry, and the natural result was that the vast majority of them came to look upon a "Papist" as a kind of vermin which it was a British virtue to heartily hate—for the glory of God and the supremacy of British monarchy.

The several anniversaries by which this national anti-Catholic spirit was to be kept perpetually burning in each British breast were carefully noted in English calendars and almanacs, and they were generally considered as national days to be religiously kept by all classes who were "true Britons," and worthy recipients of the blessings of the Royal favor which was always reserved to their forefathers from the vast dead hands of Popish conspirators comprised of Cardinals, Jesuits, priests and Catholic laymen—few of whom had been hanged drawn and quartered at Tyburn.

In the face of this fearful British "bugaboo," it is hardly to be wondered at that priests were few in England, that "Mass Houses" were built in back alleys, and that Catholics should be few and far between. In fact up to the year 1829, the entire Catholic portions of England where neither a priest nor Sister of Charity could venture without danger of personal violence at the hands of an infuriated people who had been educated to believe that such monsters were the sworn enemies of the British government, and that it would be a beneficent deed to destroy Popes, Popery, priests and papists from off every foot of soil over which the British flag floated.

With such sentiments of animosity against the Church bred into the bigoted minds of the British people, our readers can readily conceive with what enthusiasm all England celebrated each recurring festival of "Guy Fawkes' Day," in consequence of the Gunpowder Plot which that individual—aided by certain Jesuits (so claimed by the British government), concocted for the purpose of blowing up the British Houses of Parliament, killing the King, consuming the members, and then handing over the whole British people to be mercilessly butchered by the murderous minions of the Pope of Rome!

This was the English view of the question, the lesson they had learned from English books and based from English lips. Accordingly, when "Guy Fawkes' Day" came round, there was a general holiday for the populace—effigies of Guy Fawkes were made, and the Pope was burned in effigy in numerous places throughout England, amidst the booming of cannon, the fusillading of fireworks, and the jeers and jibes of a people who had been taught to believe that the prosperity and the prosperity of their country, their King, Lords and Commons, depended entirely upon Protestant ascendency!

Falsehood travels with the speed of the lightning's flash; it can put a girdle of prejudice around the world in forty minutes, so we need not wonder if the show but new Nemesis of historical Truth lagged far behind bigotry, falsehood and fanatical hate, in England. As centuries rolled by, however, the people of England began to discover that Catholic citizens were congregating in their midst; that priests and Catholic churches were multiplying; that Sisters of Orders with strange names and clad in costumes that attracted attention—were in charge of numerous schools, hospitals, and institutions of charity and mercy. They met their Catholic neighbors in their daily avocations and they found them far different from the dangerous fire brands they had been depicted. And this it began to dawn upon the English mind that "Guy Fawkes' Day" was "a blasted fraud, go hang!" and that it has gradually fallen into disrepute, until it is only heard of among the gutter-snipes of some English cities. The props of prejudice have then been knocked from under at least one of those anniversaries which had no foundation in fact, but which was purposely kept alive so as to fire the English heart with a holy horror of all things pertaining to the Catholic Church.

The English Protestant version of the "Gunpowder Plot" in which they Fawkes was instigated, was purposely kept before the British public for centuries in order to create in them a national hatred of Catholicity, and it would require the courage of a Christian martyr to dare to publish any religious or historical truth in defense of Catholicity in England, down to the dawn of this century. The author, printer, and publisher of any such "Popish" literature would very soon find themselves victims of English vengeance, and be condemned to banishment or death as treasonable foes of the English government.

It is for this reason, also, that many otherwise intelligent, and non-Catholic people in America know nothing about the "Gunpowder Plot" except—as they will tell you—"that it was invented by the Roman Catholics to blow up the King and Parliament." Such is the fearful effect of a false education, that that might be expected of the Catholic Church—has been transplanted into the minds of the American people, who thus imbibe their prejudices against "Popery" through the nasty nurses of the malignant spirit of bigotry stroked in England during the dead past.

The Gunpowder Plot was concocted by a few discontented Englishmen, at the head of whom were William Catesby, a gentleman of family who happened to be a Catholic, Guy Fawkes, a soldier of fortune, and a few others whom they induced to join them in the conspiracy. That it was a plot of Catholics, is just as true as that "Treason" treason did not cast censure on the Protestant body of Christians, as it was published in England in 1621, entitled the "Protestant's Plea," in which the author thus alludes to those engaged in the Gunpowder Plot, their laxity of religious principles, and their non recognition by the great body of English Catholics:

"They were a few wicked and desperately addicted men, whom many Protestants termed papists, although the true papists and Catholics of England know them not to be such; nor can any Protestant truly say that any one of them was really such a one. . . . If any of them were Catholics, or so died, they were known as Protestants not long before, and never frequenters of Catholic assemblies with our priest, as I could learn."—Quoted by Dr. Berrington's Challoner in his review of the English Martyrs.

From the above sterling facts, written and published by a Protestant at so short a period as sixteen years after the occurrence of the Gunpowder Plot, it is very evident that the men engaged in that scheme were but bad Catholics at best, and no more represented the Catholic people of England than did John Wilkes Booth represent the American people when he assassinated President Lincoln. Calesby—the moving spirit of the secret conspiracy, was generally considered as merely the tool of a certain minister of State who was desirous of drawing the Jesuits into a snare by which they could be suppressed in England. With this object in view, Catesby revealed to Jesuit Father named Greenway, under seal of Confession, the plot of the concocted conspiracy. The Jesuit Father tried by every art in his power to persuade Catesby from carrying on his dreadful design. But it was all useless. Finding all his plans frustrated, and not being willing to break his conscience with a catastrophe at such fearful import, without applying some remedy, he at last—for the purpose of preventing such diabolical counting, Father Greenway extracted Catesby's consent to permit him to reveal the secret—under the seal of confession—to Father Henry Garnet, the Superior of the Jesuit Order in England. And Catesby also gave the Father permission that in case the plot was discovered he was at liberty to reveal the knowledge he possessed to the general public. Father Garnet was horrified when he heard the proposal, and he tried to turn the conspirators from their contemplated crime. But, heedless of all advice, the conspirators were determined to prosecute their deadly project, and this they did until the plot was discovered, some of the conspirators killed and others arrested.

Amongst those who were engaged in the conspiracy was Bates, a servant of Catesby, who, in the hope of saving his own life, informed that the Jesuits—particularly Fathers Greenway and Garnet—were deeply implicated in the plot. This information coming to the ears of officials who only wanted a word in order to hang, draw and quarter every Jesuit in the land, two months after the discovery of the plot a proclamation was issued offering a reward for the capture of the Jesuits named. Pursuit was hot and keen. Greenway and Garnet were both apprehended in Worcestershire, where they were engaged in missionary work. Father Garnet was condemned to less than twenty-three times, without sufficient evidence being brought forward to convict him. Even Bates—the servant of Catesby—when asked to swear that the accusation he previously brought against Fathers Greenway and Garnet was true, retracted his former falsehood and flatly refused to perjure himself. Now, it stands to reason that if Father Garnet was guilty of any participation whatever in the gunpowder plot, it would certainly not require him to be examined twenty-three times in order to procure it. But what could not be accomplished by fair means was afterwards brought about by trickery so as to have even a thread of apparent guilt in order to hang a Catholic priest on purpose to placate Protestant passion against Popery. Cecil, Earl of Salisbury, was a Protestant bigot of the blackest hue, and he was determined that some Jesuits should die in order to satisfy his spleen against them. Greenway he instructed the jailors of the Jesuits to lodge them in adjoining apartments, to place two witnesses in ambuscade within earshot of them, and then to arrange a small spertrum in the hall dividing the two apartments through which they could converse loud enough to be overheard by the spies or the watch. This plot as carried out. Father Garnet's prisoner informed him on a secret given to his agent that he could converse with Father Oldcorne. The Jesuits made their spiritual exercises together, they made their peace with God, and gradually drifted into conversation concerning the cause of their origin imprisonment. At length Father Oldcorne asked Father Garnet whether he was willing to be examined about Catesby's plot? In reply Father Garnet said that there was only one man in the world—meaning Father Greenway—who could say that he had any knowledge of the criminal conspiracy. Three words were heard by the concealed spies and were carried forthwith to the government officials, who immediately ordered Father Greenway to be placed upon the rack where he was most brutally tortured to make him admit his guilt. Finally his trial was ordered, and although he was prepared to give no admission of a knowledge of the plot under the seal of confession—could not be brought against him, he was convicted and condemned to die on May 6th, 1606.

Let us now see how calmly an innocent man can meet death when he has the strength of his faith which is the fortitude of the soul in its hour of affliction. Here is Bishop Challoner's concluding words concerning this Jesuit martyr to English malice against the Catholic Church:

Then being stripped of his shirt, he kneeled down and prayed a while to himself at the foot of the ladder; then going up some steps, he prayed aloud for the King, the queen, the peace, and all the council, and begged the blessing of God for all the speculators, that God might make them all Roman Catholics, as the only way to secure their temporal welfare; declaring that for his own part, he died a Catholic, and desired all those who were by to be witnesses of his making the sign of the cross, he said: Adoramus te Christe et benedicimus tibi, O Christ, we adore and bless thee, because by thy cross Thou hast redeemed the world. The rope being then put about his neck, he said: Sancta Maria, ora pro me, Holy Mary, pray for me! and some ejaculations. Then calling to the executioner, three times at intervals, he desired him to stay a little, for he was hard, that he might be lengthened alive according to ancient custom; but the executioner, cut down, "Hold, hold, hold," so much were they moved at the sight of his patience, some favorably of him than they had done, and to compassionate his case, the rest when he was alive, so that the executioner, instead of hoisse, usual on this occasion, the people went off in silence.

Father Garnet suffered in the 63d year of his age, and died after some time in the society, or head house, of the Jesuits in Holborn, and it was generally observed that the Catholics, for many days, the same forty odor which it had during life, which drew all London to the martyr, and was interpreted as a testimony of his innocence; as was also an image of him wonderfully formed on the ear of a straw, on which a drop of his blood had fallen. His extract, taken by the order of the Society commonly called Father Garnet's straw, is now in the hands of his dear son after he was taken off the torture.

No person who—even at this distance of time—reads the foregoing simple and straightforward account of the last hours of Father Garnet, can harbor the thought for an instant that the saintly soul of that great son of St. Ignatius was sullied in the slightest with the sin of those criminals who concocted the conspiracy known as the Gunpowder Plot. His companion in prison was equally as guiltless, as the eminent ecclesiastic whose biography of Father Garnet we have already quoted, thus portrays the death scene of Father Oldcorne in a manner calculated to convince the most skeptical that the sweet soul of this Jesuit martyr also went before its Maker and Judge uncontaminated by any sin of a grave nature as that conspired by Catesby and his co-conspirators. Bishop Challoner, in alluding to Father Oldcorne's death, says:

After the discovery of the powder plot, Father Garnet, as we have seen already, being caught in the snare, and condemned for it in the same place, the same day, and the latter was also apprehended and condemned, and underwent the same death, the same day, and in the same place, in the Tower, and concurrently with the martyrdom of his superior, suffered, and underwent martyrdom in the same manner, and in the same place, and at the same time, and in the same place, and at the same time, and in the same place, and at the same time

Farm and Home.

JOHN'S WIFE.

BY ERNA BARNETT.

A young wife stood with her hand on her broom,
And looking around the little room,
"Nothing but toil forever," she said,
"From early morn till the light has fled,
If you only were a merchant now,
We need not live by the sweat of our brow."
Tapping away, spoke drowsier John:
"Why so or we will what we're standing on."

A lady stood by her husband's chair,
And quietly passed her hand o'er his hair;
"You never have time for me now," she said,
And a tear drop fell on the low bent head.
"If we were only rich, my dear,
We might be happier than we are,
But among such other, oh, dear me!
What a happy woman I should be."
Tapping away, spoke drowsier merchant John
"We're or we will what we're standing on."

A stately form, in velvet dressed—
A diamond gleaming on her breast:
"Nothing but toil for fashion," she said,
"I'll sometimes wish that I were dead.
If I might cast this wealth aside,
And be once more the poor man's bride."
From his easy chair, spoke gentlemanly John,
"We're or we will what we're standing on."

Homely Truths.

There are a few things it will to know in this world, without having to consult the books or the doctors. See that the following are indelibly engraved upon the tablets of memory, and you will have a few homely facts on call, which make up the largest sum of human wisdom.

THINGS WORTH REMEMBERING.

That salt should be eaten with nute to aid digestion.

That a cup of strong coffee will remove the odor of onions from the breath.

That stale meats may be made fresh and wholesome by washing in soda water.

That boiled cabbage is much sweeter when the water is changed in boiling.

That fried onions should be boiled first in milk to be mild and odorless.

That a little soda water will relieve sick headaches caused by indigestion.

That a cup of hot water drank before meals will relieve nausea and dyspepsia.

That you can take out spots from wash goods by rubbing them with the yolk of an egg before washing.

That white spots upon varnished furniture will disappear if you hold a hot plate from the stove over them.

That you may hasten the top to your kerosene lamp by using a little plaster of Paris cut with water.

That a fever patient is cooled and comforted by frequent sponging of with soda water.

That the hair may be kept from falling out after illness by a frequent application to the scalp, of sage tea.

That it rests you in sewing to change your position frequently.

That cold tea should be saved for your vinegar barrel. It sours easily and gives color and flavor.

That tough meat may be made tender by laying a few minutes in vinegar water.

That to scale fish easily dip them in boiling water.

That a beat the white of eggs quickly add a pinch of salt. Salt cools, and cold eggs froth rapidly.

That rusty flat irons should be rubbed over with beeswax and lard.

That boiling liquids, jellies, or fruits may be turned into glass if you press the bowl of a spoon on the bottom while filling.

That pickles will not keep well in a jar that has held lard, unless well scalded.

That fresh milk heated to the boiling point will keep sweet twice as long as but rather as cold milk.

That disinfected tea and coffee pots may which two or three spoonfuls of wood ashes have been placed, and letting the water come to the boiling point. Then wash thoroughly in hot soda and rinse.

That wall-ventilated bedrooms will prevent morning headaches and lassitude.

That milk which stands too long makes bitter butter.

That the juice of the red onion is a perfect antidote for the sting of bees, wasps, hornets, etc. Its sting of the honey bee, which is always left in the wound, should be first removed.

That warm mustard water should be given to one who has accidentally swallowed poison. It will cause vomiting, after, which a cup of strong coffee should be given to counteract the remaining effects.

That cream, lemon juice, or water will relieve severe sunburn, according to the habits or skin condition of the sufferer.

That a bag of hot sand relieves earaches.

That you should breathe through your nose instead of your mouth, especially on coming from a warm room, or hall, into the damp night air.

That a hot, strong lemonade taken at bedtime breaks up a cold.

That milk pans should be immersed some minutes in boiling water, as it has been demonstrated that when not so treated they breed a host of fungus germs which poison the milk.

That consumptive night sweats may be arrested by sponging the body nightly in salt water.

That mustard seed is excellent for cleansing the hands after handling odorous substances.

That a mixture of rain water, cologne, and glycerine should be kept by those who are troubled with roughness of the skin. Apply to the face or hands after washing.

That warm boric water will remove dandruff.

That bread is good for a rough complexion. Put a handful in a rag, dip it in tepid water and wash with it.

That to remove dust from a carpet, especially in a sick-room, fasten a wet cloth over the broom.

That a nervous headache, when the pain is frontal and the blood vessels are full and throbbing, may be relieved by putting cold cloths on the head and hot water to the feet.

That one in a faint should be laid flat on his back; then loosen his clothes and let him alone.

That teething children may be relieved of convulsions by being immersed in a warm bath with cold slobs on their heads.

That polverized camphor and lard stirred to a thick paste is excellent for crup or colds, applied to the throat, chest and nose. After which cover with soft flannels.

The Beloved Wife.

Only let a woman be sure that she is precious to her husband—more useful, and valuable, not convenient, simply, but lovely and beloved. Let her be the recipient of his public and hearty attentions; let her feel that her care and love are noticed, appreciated, and returned; let her opinion be asked, her approval sought, and her judgment respected in matters of which she is competent—in short, let her only be loved, honored, and cherished, in fulfillment of the marriage vow, and she will be to her husband, and her children, and society, a well spring of pleasure. She will bear pain, and toil, and anxiety, for her husband's love is to her a tower and fortress. Shield and shelterred therein, adversity will have lost meaning. She may suffer, but sympathy may deal the edge of sorrow. A house with love in it—and, by love, I mean love expressed in words, and looks, and deeds, for I have not one spark of faith in the love that never crops out—is to a home without love, as a person to a machine; The one is life, the other mechanism.

Around the House.

Counterpanes and pillow shams are now made of paper.

Have plenty of flowers upon your table, but mass them low.

A handsome sofa pillow cover is made of crimson tartan, with a large half square embroidery in a lighter shade of crimson upon the upper side.

Do not hang colored pictures in hallways or on staircases unless there is plenty of light for them. Strong drawings, engravings and drawings in black and white go best in such places.

Pretty which have grown yellow with age can be given a rich effect by being frained in white mats. The contrast of the white mat gives an ordinary print, which is a trifle darkened by time, some of the beauty of an impression on India paper.

Pretty table mats are made of a kind of scenic cloth which is quite heavy and is glazed; that with a white ground and with pink rose-buds is particularly suitable. The mats should be of various sizes, and oblong, not round, and the edges are bordered with white cotton fringe.

A decorative catch-all, or receptacle for burnt matches, to hang in a corner is made by taking the rivet out of a Japanese fan and running a cord in place of it, to tie the sticks together over a tin or pasteboard cornucopia. Bright ribbons are sewn in and out of the sticks, which should be black, and bow with long loops hangs from the point, which is made of cardboard or quilted satin gift box finishes the top.

Fighting Sleep with Tea.

students, in order to work at night, in hour night madness, especially when preparing for an examination. More than half the cases of break down, loss of memory, fainting, etc., which occur during years examinations, and far more frequently than is commonly known, are due to this.

I frequently hear of promising students who have thus failed; and, on inquiry, have learned—in almost every instance—that the victim has previously dragged himself with tea or coffee. Sleep is the rest of the brain; to rob the hard worked brain of its necessary rest is cerebral suicide.

My old friend, the late Thomas Wright, was a victim of this terrible folly. He introduced the translation of the "Life of Julius Cesar," by Napoleon III., and so did in an cruelly short time. He fulfilled his contract by sitting up several nights successively by the aid of strong tea or coffee (I forget which). I saw him shortly afterwards. In a few weeks he had aged alarmingly, and became quite bald, his brain gave way and never recovered. There was but little difference between his age and mine, and but for the dreadful cerebral stroke, rendered possible only by the alkaloid (for otherwise he would have fallen asleep over his work, and thereby saved his life), he might still be amusing and instructing thousands of readers by fresh volumes of popularized archeological research.—Popular Science Monthly.

Remedy for Communicating Whooping Cough.

In a case recently tried in the United States Circuit Court at New York, damages were asked against a person because he had taken his children to a brooding house, when they were sick with the whooping cough. The object of the proprietor took the disease in this way, and some of the boarders left the house and went elsewhere. The court held that damages must be awarded for whatever loss resulted from the bringing of the disease to the house. The opinion of the judge is in part as follows: "The defendant took his children when they had whooping cough, a contagious disease, to the boarding house of the plaintiff to board other boarders to it, who took it.

"The jury have found that this disease without exercising due care to prevent taking the disease into the boarding house. She was put to expense, care, and trouble in consequence of her child having it, and boarders were kept away by the presence of the disease from the house. Words which import the charge of having a contagious disease are in themselves actionable, because product people will avoid the company of persons thus charged therewith. The carrying of persons infected with contagious disease along public conveyances so as to endanger the health of other travelers, is indictable as a nuisance."

Coffee in Typhoid Fever.

Dr. Guillaume, of the French army, in a recent paper on typhoid fever, says:

"Coffee has given us satisfactory satisfaction; after having dispensed it, we find, to our great surprise, that its action is as prompt as it is decisive. No sooner have our patients taken a few tablespoonfuls of it than their features become relaxed and they come to their senses. The next day the improvement is such that we are tempted to look upon coffee as a specific against typhoid fever. I defer to it whenever its stupor is dispelled, and the patient rouses from the state of somnolency in which he has been since the invasion of the disease. Soon all the functions take their natural course, and he enters upon convalescence. Dr. Guillaume gives to an adult two or three tablespoonfuls of strong black coffee every two hours, alternated with one or two tablespoonfuls of claret or Burgundy wine. A little lemonade or citrate of magnesia should be taken daily, and after a while, quinine. From the fact that malaise and cerebral fever appears first, the doctor reports typhoid fever as a nervous disease, and the coffee acting on the nerve centers, proves indicated in the early stages before local complications arise.

Give Water to Infants.

A physician of the New York Nursery and Child's Hospital believes, from his experience, that infants generally, whether brought up on breast milk or artificially, are not supplied with sufficient water, the fluid portion of their food being quickly taken up, and leaving the solid too thick to be easily digested. In warm, dry weather, he believes infants should take every hour with advantage, and their frequent restlessness and rise of temperature is often directly due to their not having it. A free supply of water, and restricting the frequency of nursing, has been found at the nursery to be a most efficient check in cases of incipient fever, a diminished rate of mortality and marked reduction in the number of patients and time their complaints being attributed to this cause. In teeth-cutting water soothes the pains, and frequently stops the fretting and restlessness universal in children at this period.

A Rich Woman's Wretched Death.

There has lived for many years at Lake Mahopac a woman named Eliza Baldwin, well known in that vicinity for her eccentricities and stinginess. She was the wife of "Uncle Henry" Baldwin and the sister of the late Reuben W. Baldwin, who for years kept the Baldwin Hotel, at Lake Mahopac. All her relatives are well to do, her husband is wealthy, and she was estimated to be worth $200,000. Yet she lived alone, apart from her husband, who was unable to endure her temper and arrogance. She had two sons, who she kept away from her. Lately one of them returned to see his mother, but was refused admittance by her, she claiming that he came after her money. Her husband at intervals for years, has offered to sell some property and received her signature to the deeds. She refused to sign until he had transferred to her one-third of all his property. Mr. Baldwin indulged her in many ways, and built for her, on a farm of thirty acres, a $10,000 house, and handsomely furnished it. She took possession, but little by little sold for cash the furniture and household articles. She lived most wretchedly, denying herself enough to eat and using in winter the basest possible fuel. The people of the vicinity had grown accustomed to her oddities, and therefore paid no attention to the fact that lately no signs of life or activity were manifest in her house. One of the neighbors, however, had some business to transact with her. She went to her house, and after repeated knockings was unable to gain admittance. The door was then broken in. Mrs Baldwin was found sitting in a chair in an empty room, her head resting on a table and a pipe containing a few grains scrap, the only articles in the house. After the funeral the Rev. Mr. Tuttle and the Hon. Sanford Smith, the only persons in whom Mrs Baldwin placed confidence, made a search of the house and $75,000 in cash was found, and it is supposed as much more remains hidden in undiscovered nooks.—Albany Argus.

A NEW SHRINE TO THE MOTHER OF GOD.

OUR LADY OF PELLEVOISIN.

The Scapular of the Sacred Heart.

In recent times La Salette and Lourdes have been rendered famous by the visible appearances of the Blessed Virgin in our own days Pellevoisin, Indre, diocese of Bourges, a small and unknown village in the centre of France, has all at once sprung into celebrity by the repeated visits of the Blessed Virgin, who, in a series of fifteen apparitions, several of which were attested by witnesses of unimpeachable integrity, declared her wish to be there honored, and revealed to a poor servant whom she suddenly and miraculously restored to health, the Scapular of the Sacred Heart of her Divine Son, as a shield and preservative against all the assaults of the devil.

ESTELLE PAGNETTE,

lady's maid to the Countess Arthur de la Rochefoucauld, had been long suffered at intervals during twelve years from a most excruciating internal disease, at last length attacked by pulmonary consumption which, after a period of six months, reduced her to extremity. Given over by the doctors, she received the last sacraments administered to her who is the "Health of the Weak" and implored her patroness to cure her if not in vain. After a death agony of eleven days she is suddenly and miraculously cured for the express purpose of declaring to the whole world that the Blessed Virgin wished the Scapular of the Sacred Heart to be worn in expiation of the outrages complicited against the Holy Evoharist. "Nothing shall be more pleasing to me than to see this livery on each one of my children, and that they most all endeavor to repair the outrages received by my Son in the Sacrament of His love."

IN OBEDIENCE TO THE ORDER

of the Blessed Virgin, Estelle goes to the Archbishop of the diocese, Monseigneur de La Tour d'Auvergne, and reveals to him the mission entrusted her. Prelate, one of the greatest dignitaries of the Church, immediately institutes a most minute and careful Canonical investigation into all the facts of the case, enters into communication with Rome on the subject, and then, with all the authority vested in him by the Holy See, solemnly establishes in his diocese a Confraternity in honor of Our Lady of Pellevoisin under the invocation of "Mother All Merciful," blesses the scapular seen by Estelle, enriches it with Indulgences, and finally sends his Vicar-General to take possession of the room hallowed by the presence of the Queen of Heaven, which is rapidly converted into a shrine. The few pilgrimages presided over by the Vicar-General took place on Sept. 8, 1877, exactly one year after the revelation of the Scapular, and eighteen months after the miraculous cure of Estelle.

EIGHT YEARS HAVE SCARCELY ELAPSED since these marvellous events took place, and the truth of the promises of the immaculate Virgin become every day more and more manifest. Priests and laymen, rich and poor flock from all parts to this shrine, and on the anniversary of the revelation of the Scapular the pilgrims may be counted by thousands. This miraculous Scapular too, bearing on one side the representation of the Sacred Heart of Jesus and on the other the image of Our Lady of Pellevoisin has become known even in the most remote regions, invested with it a power of extraordinary grace and blessings. It is already worn by more than one hundred thousand associates all over the Christian world, and its marvelous propagation is only an inferior to the at open of times proves that it must be evidently the work of God. Innumerable conversions of the most obdurate and hardened sinners have been obtained through the efficacy of this wonderful Scapular. Nor need we be astonished at this for what can be more capable of exposing God's anger than the sight of His creatures clothed with the precious livery of the SACRED HEART OF HIS SON.

In 1857 Father A Sibaen, Cure of Pellevoisin, in the diocese of Bourges, undertook place, upon which a communion of inquity, reported spoken to the Archbishop of Bourges, and found a Confraternity in honor of Our Lady of Pellevoisin, under the invocation of "Mother All Merciful," (2) to permit the members of this Confraternity, to wear a distinctive scapular, and (3) to authorize the publication of a special prayer to the Scapular attached, in honor of Our Lady of Pellevoisin. On the 28th of July, 1877, the Archiepiscopal church gave his three requests as was issued by Charles Amable de La Tour d'Auvergne Lauraguais, Archbishop of Bourges, Primate Primate of Aquitaine, and assistant at the Pontifical throne, so that full canonical sanction was attached to this devotion. Perpetual adoration of the Most Holy Sacrament is so constantly kept up at this shrine, so that all the associates are prayed for at the altar of the "All Merciful Mother," night and day, living and dead forever.

For all information about the Scapular apply to Monsieur l'Abbe Salmon, Cure de Pellevoisin, Department de l'Indre, France.

METHODISM NOT MUCH ACCOUNT.

What a Protestant Paper Says Concerning that Sect.

The Chicago Living Church an Episcopalian organ not yet disposed to unite in the Catholic Church, has the following editorial under heading of "The Loaves Scattered—the Essen Plenary Council and the Methodist Centennial Conference":

Methodism lacks the cohesive power of creation, it seems, but the power of force operates as well. It lacks the element of adaptation, but it has its compensation in the faithful work insight into subtler the things of daily life so into the things of the Spirit. In an of strength is the wonderful activity of its clergy and people, but there and is merely great in scattering the corkscrew, not in building up other little people of the society in which they grow upon the basis of fundamental truth. The Methodists are less hampered by the traditions of the social order than the Church of Christ, except in the matter of the Episcopate. They have had no idea, the idea of gathering people into the fold

Poetry.

THE IRISH MOTHER.

BY A. M. B. PIATT.

"Good mother, from your wayside hut,
Was with your ninety years,
Tall as a fairy day—but
Friend of distress and fear
For I am lost beyond the sill
Of hell, hurt with a knife!
That smile, is only to allow to kill!
Good mother, hurt with life!"

"My lady, save you kiss but sad,
Yet, it's a merry day.
I'm not too wrinkled to be glad
[And you are not pregnant].
Good lady, time goes!
For God is good, I'm told,
And life's the best He has to give;
I'm thankful to be old.

"Yes, time is good, I'm told. You see,
I can not read. But, then,
I can believe. He's good to me,
He is, and good to men.
They say He made us corrupt, too,
The world would be too sweet
To leave, if this should not be true."
["The world the moth can eat."]

"He keeps my little cabin there
Safe when the storm is fierce and wild.
When I was young He let me wear
My mother's silver shawl
And then I was His young, young
The handsomest, you'd own,
As all the Irish count.
It's much I've lived alone.

"My lady, stare that long black night
Like falling boat wind blows,
My boy that kept my heart so light
Is dead with the rest of his.
A lonely boy, such gold like hair,
All smile." [He [illegible] dim.]
"Dear hope him. Yet, I'm quiet there
Where I can't see him.

She bashed and turned to go inside
As carelessly as I,
A heap of straw (the door was wide)
Was all that I could see.
Yet, on the little window, low,
A bright geranium grew;
That's for my boy, he loved them so,
He loved them fondest, too."

"Good mother—" "Sure but things go ill
In our poor country. Yet,
He gives me bread and shelter still,
It is not He that forgets.
We parted, for the light was low;
I turned and looked around;
Lord of us all, our heart's-ease grew
A bush a plot of ground."

O MOTHER, BABY, SAVE OUR BABE.

BY MRS. W. M. STEWDOLON.

The night is stormy, bitter, dark,
O Mother Mary, save our bark!
Around us the crested waves,
O Mother, for Thy Son's sake save!
The mile crash in the shrieking blast,
O guide us safe to port at last!
The lightning's flash, the thunder's roar,
Mother, to Thee we loudly cry.
The mast is gone, the timbers strain,
Ah! is our prayer to Thee in vain!
We hear the breakers on the shore,
Without Thy aid all hope is o'er;
The thunder peals along the sky,
O Mother, hear thy children's cry!
Thy children! in the darkness of the night
To be to us a beacon light!
O lead us, leader, guiding hand,
O letter us safely to the land!
What though my bark is strain'd and torn,
What though it of its gallant crew be shorn?
Then—Thou can'st guide us safely back
Across the stormy, restless track.

Literary Miscellany.

On Eviction Duty.

BY ONE OF THE ROYAL IRISH CONSTABULARY.

In the years of which I write the life of our county was wretched enough. Famine had turned the land, supplying us in innumerable risks, and rendered our life uncertain in the extreme. Though, personally, we used to be on the best of terms with the peasantry, yet the unpopularity of our office, and that feeling of resistance to the law which in those days was so widely diffused, made life in the place resemble one incessant round of lost and adventure. Yet this life had many charms for me. To a person not too fond of ease, who loved the thrilling excitement of danger, and was fond of many fastidious; and, in the wild and buoyant exuberance of youth, I lived its free and easy life, its rapid changes of scene, and last, but not least, its dashing features of adventure. True, we had many duties to perform from which any good minded man would shrink—duties upon which we could only look with horror and loathing; but, fortunately, during my time in the police I had only few of such detestable duties to perform. I add that one of those duties was to attend at evictions to protect the sheriff in the execution of his duty, where some of the most heartrending scenes of misery and woe were enacted! To be present on an occasion like this fell to my lot; but I can never will death can Time, with his effacing hand, erase from my mind the remembrance of that scene, the agony and horror which marked the faces of the unfortunate people, as, turned adrift from their homes to face the rude battle of the wide, wide world, they took their last look at their desolate cabins, and new sought around them but woe and desolation.

In the southeastern part of Mayo, beyond the town of Claremorris and Castlebar, lies a wide and lonely district of country, fertile in its soil, and capable of producing in the greatest abundance everything necessary for the support of human life. But no sign of human life is to be seen in this wide tract, save where the smoke from a hard-hit cottage up to Heaven, making the surrounding desolation still more desolate; or well-thatched cottages peer out from the clusters of trees; the hum of busy life is not heard; no laborers work in the fields, and the hoot of owls as one wave brings in the passing traveller's ear the merry sounds of the fiddle or the pleasant cry of child hood's glee. Yet upon this wide plain was the abode of a brave, happy and contented peasantry; now herds of cattle roam through the fields, and the sheep graze upon the site of the cotter's home. The brave, and merry hearts that once peopled these valleys have long since wandered far away, and the bones of some are tossed restlessly about the waters of the ever moving Atlantic, while others have laid them down to rest beneath the shadows of America's primeval forests. Forth they went from their native land in sorrow and in gloom, and though, perhaps, in their land of adoption, they earned for themselves richesand honor, who can tell the hard disconsolate feelings that filled the hearts of Erin's exiled children for the land that they have left behind, those unutilled longings for that land to them—

"Of every land the pride, Beloved by heaven o'er all the world beside."

America might be great, and free and prosperous, and might offer to the emigrant every advantage to be derived from a fertile soil and immense though undeveloped resources, but still it was not Ireland; and often has the heart grown heavy and the eyes dim with tears, as at morning or at eve the thoughts of the lonely dwellers by the shores of the western ocean wandered back to that green and sea-girt isle which they shall never see again, and to those once happy cottages which once made up the peasantry, and no matter where he may be thrown by the vicissitudes of life, his heart is to the last in Ireland, and with his last sigh he breathes a wish for the welfare of his native land.

It was just daybreak of a cold, raw morning in spring, that earning force of police dashed along the narrow road leading to the crowded villages of the district to which I have just alluded, accompanied by the sheriff and his necessary assistants, the "crowbar brigade." We were upon the errand of driving several hundred families were to be ejected from their homes, and we were there to protect the sheriff, the representative of the law, in the execution of his duty. The faces of the men around me showed their feelings, and than they felt the disagreeable nature of the errand upon which they were engaged. In contrast of the careless and happy glances which usually marked their countenances, a sad gloomy shadow seemed to have fallen over all, as if in anticipating they saw the melancholy and heart-rending scenes they were about to witness. The village was hushed in silence as we approached. No sound save our measured and uncertain tramp, could be heard; and it seemed as if the poor villagers slept on in their humble homes, not knowing or not caring for the fate so near at hand

But soon the news spread that we had arrived, and a scene of grief and lamentation arose, upon the like of which I trust that I may never look again. The wild and disheveled appearance of the poor weak women, as, wringing their hands, they rushed to and fro; the terror-stricken looks of the children, and the stern, gloomy features of the men, as, from beneath their dark eyebrows, they gazed sympathetically upon us, made up a dark and gloomy picture.

The sheriff and his men were expeditious to work, and soon had taken possession of several houses, while the wretched inhabitants, standing upon the road in the midst of their scanty and broken furniture, watched the deeds of their ruing shown the once happy home, as the crowbar, plied by vigorous and practised hands, was soon heard by brought down the weak walls, all crumbling to the earth with a crash, leaving nought but a mass of ruins where a few short moments before had been the homes of a happy people.

Still the work of destruction went on, and gradually the people began to feel the cold cold for shelter, grew more and more numerous—the sound of the crowbar and the crash of the falling timbers mingling in a hideous chorus with the cries and lamentations of the wretched people. Larger and larger grew the crowd around us, darker and darker grew the frown of the men; and the sheriff's face grew pale with fear and apprehension as he saw the fierce looks of the stalwart peasants who looked gloomily on, raging in an impotent desire for vengeance, but deterred by the fear inspired by the flashing of the arms and the countenance of the dark-clad and compact mass of men that were standing in their midst. Fierce and bitter imprecations were heard on every side, but the work of demolition still went on, and they had to seem inclined to dare the consequences of resistance.

At length the sheriff and his party proceeded to the house of a widow woman; named O'Byrne, whose only son was lying on a sick-bed almost in the last stages of consumption. In vain the poor young man begged and groaned in his pain; they opposed to hard and relentless hearts. Her furniture was pitched into the road, and the hard hands of the sheriff's assistants were best to lift out the pallet upon which the sick man lay. But the excitement outside had become almost maddening. Shouts and yells of execration filled the air, and even veteran policeman, old and hardened in many a harrowing scene, turned for a moment to hide the tell-tale tears—no shame to their manhood—that they rushed to their eyes. But when they appeared, lour rolled, though silent, yet terrible, over the crowd. The sheriff's party fled, leaving their bounds. They rushed upon the sheriff and his men, torc O'Byrne from their grasp; and were proceeding to extremities, but quick as lightning they were encircled by a row of glittering bayonets, the sheriff and his man were rescued from them, while a circle of shining bayonets surrounded the house, and the work of demolition went on as before.

But the intense excitement which had been gathering, been fomenting in their minds, having once found vent, could not easily be repressed, and their attitude became very threatening towards us. We were, however, too strong in force to be attacked by any demonstration they could make; but the sheriff was a coward of the most abject type, and his knees were shaking beneath him, as, crouching within the armed ring, he gazed fearfully upon the threatening faces outside. Soon stones and sticks from the extreme limits of the crowd began to be hurled upon us, and vengeful shouts and yells filled the air. Again and again the officer in command called on them to disperse; he appealed to men too angry to be determined to be influenced by words. At length the Riot Act was read. The sheriff then assumed the command, called upon the officer to command us to fire; but he, looking with contempt upon the craven and arrest wretch at his side, and striking with horror from the consequences likely to ensue from such an order, when, perhaps, the helpless women and children, standing mingled with the crowd, would be left cold and dying upon the road, promptly refused. Again and again the sheriff ordered him to fire; and again and again he refused.

"Order your men to fire, or I will report you on my return to Castlebar."

"I am ready to bear the responsibility, there is no present necessity for firing."

"Do you know that you are here under my command? I call upon you again to fire your men the order to fire."

"I am here to afford you protection. You are not in a fit state to take the command."

"You will report this" said the sheriff, in a rage.

"All right" was the taunting response. "Do, remember, my men are not used to obey the orders of a coward."

At this direct insult the cuttiness of the sheriff became almost lived. But fear had completely over-mastered him, and he stood there cowed and trembling beneath the scornful glance of his subordinate. But, in the meantime, the crowd around us had reams more and more violent, and at length the order was given to charge.

Forward we went with levelled bayonets, the crowd slowly and sullenly retreating before us, and more than one received severe bayonet thrusts in the onset; but they were cool and determined, and the resistance they had to meet with gradually gave way before the steady push and steady stream of stones had its group of stalwart peasants with gloom upon their brows, and anger and revenge in their hearts, giving to forced quest while the work of demolition went on.

From the ruins of the cabins they had scattered the sticks of the road in search of lists where the evicted families could for the time being take refuge from the cold and biting blast, while those who were of fortunate as to have friends or relatives on other properties were led away by the hand to distant villages, where a temporary shelter was afforded them from the penalty and injustice of their landlord.

The sun had gone far down in his course, and the shadows of evening were beginning to fall as we approached the last cabin of which possession was to be taken that day. It belonged to an old and venerable man, who, with his two sons and a daughter, lived upon it, in the heritage of a failure, the plot of ground, which though small, had belonged to his family from time immemorial. It was a melancholy sight to see the old man, as, bent down with years, his white hair floating wild in the breeze, the tears streaming from his eyes, and clasping his little daughter to his breast, kneeled upon that small cabin endeared to him by a thousand recollections—the remembrance of childhood and of youth, of manhood and of age. Turned, through figuring generations, the eyes of his fathers been closed in death; there had he engaged the hand of his dead wife, and watched with a proud eye the growing beauty of his children. But the happy days of his youth he should wander homeless forever on the earth. Never again might he expect to hear the merry voices of his children—never might he expect to show his eye beneath the shadow of the old roof, and never might he expect to lay himself down to rest in that long but sleep amid the bones of his kindred in the lonely graveyard of his parish. Ah, no! Rapidly the crowbar had been plied; and a rush, a crash, a fall told him that he was homeless. Above the site of his home arose a cloud of dust to tell him where it had once been. But he heeded it not; his eyes became stony in their glance; then exhausted nature gave way, and he sank down in a fit. Quickly he was borne away by friendly hands, but what an awakening was his! Better, far better, had it been for him if in that awful moment of nature's agony the soul had taken wing to the last home of the brave. There he might expect mercy; but in this world to man, cruel men, he could look for none.

But he was not destined to bear the affliction this quietly. During the whole time of the eviction a distant hill had been stood gazing on, dark and silent, nothing seen of the scenes of ruin and the tightly drawn lip telling of the intense struggle that raged in their breast. But, when all was over, when the house was completely demolished, and when the sheriff and his party had retired to the town, one of them, springing forward, caught him by the throat, and shouting, "Come down, you old rebel!" instantly all was commotion. The efforts of several policemen were at vain to separate them, and they rolled upon the ground, the young man still retaining his grasp upon the throat of the other, who with staring eyes and quick, gasping breath told of his agonizing condition.

At length they were torn asunder, and the young man being made a prisoner was placed in the centre of our column, as, amidst our cheers we took our leave of the place. But the sight of the struggle seemed to have roused the crowd to actual frenzy and they seemed determined to gain possession of our prisoner. A cloud of sticks, stones, and every species of missiles fell over our heads, as the crowd closed in upon us; but, with levelled bayonets, we soon opened a passage through their midst. We were not destined to escape so easily. They crowded around us again, and standing every at the bayonets' points, they made strike us even in the ranks. Pitying the condition of the unfortunate people, the officer in command of us was unwilling to proceed to extremities; but when entreaties, and even threats failed to disperse them, and of no avail, when our situation admitted of no further forbearance, and when the angry clamors of his own men told him that he could not restrain them, he reluctantly gave the command to charge.

Just as the last sound of the last word was heard, a shower of flame ran along our front rank, followed by a rattling discharge, and the stones whizzed away, several wounded men lay moaning on the ground, and the crowd fled in terror before us.

But the warning served its purpose, and we arrived at Castlebar safely, without further molested.

That night our prisoner disappeared out of the lock up in Castlebar barrack; but by the exertions of the sheriff he was soon after afterwards accustomed, nor was he ever seen in that country again.

Such was the first and last day's eviction duty that I ever performed. When the sheriff had recovered from the affect the fright, and was well enough to proceed with the remaining eviction at Castlebar we as I look back upon the retrospect of my life, I trust that I may never witness such a scene again.

The Adventures of a Statue.

For the past 40 years and more, people have laughed at the cold air and naked form of George Washington as his stay in marble at the east front of the Capitol. He has been the target of all the jokes of Senators, Representatives, strangers, and guides for the past four decades, and even women like E. Dickinson had added to his ridicule. Still this statue has a longer history than any other at the Capitol. It was ordered by Congress at the end of Andrew Jackson's first term, and it took eight years for Horatio Greenough to make it. He did work in Florence, Italy, and he made the statue in a sitting posture instead of pedestrian, as the act of Congress demanded. It was designed, you know, to stand in the centre of the rotunda, inside the Capitol. Well, when it was completed, in 1840, the next question was how to get it from Italy to America. Congress bought over it for some time and finally sent a man-of-war to bring it from Genoa to Washington. In the meanwhile Mr. Greenough had started it on to Genoa. It weighed 12 tons, and it took 22 yoke of oxen to haul it. When it got to Genoa it was found that it was so large that it could not be pitted through the hatchway of the man-of-war, which was to carry it to Washington, and a merchant vessel had to be chartered. At last it arrived at the Washington navy yard, and Congress was horrified to see that their pedestrian statue was sitting in a chair, and that it was nearly 20 feet high. Henry A. Wise then said, "The man Jones, I know, and never did love, who sat Washington without his shirt," and the country applauded the sentiment. But the navy yard is not the Capitol, and it cost $6,000 to bring the statue from it to the rotunda. When it was gotten to the Capitol down it was found that the statue, like the painting of the Voice of Windsor's family, was too large to go through. The passage had to be cut away, and the door enlarged. When it was finally put in, it was found that the statue was too heavy, and it had to be built under it to support it. It was then found, however, that the rotunda was no place for it, and finally, after a number of removals, it was taken to where it stands by the lower east door, in front of the Capitol plateau, where the winds can blow and the people can laugh to get relearing by, and where Jim nakedness has been boldness arch of the sky" for a canopy. Originally the statue was to have cost $5,000. It has already cost $40,000, and the sum is considerably increased at every removal."

AN INGENIOUS BLIND MAN.

He Writes Poetry and Practises Philosophy at the Same Time.

For several days past persons reaching Jersey City by ferry have seen a crowd gathered in front of a blind man who sits whitting fans out of rough pine sticks against the base of the Pennsylvania Railroad ferry, about half a block from the ferry slip on a wooden box. At his feet there is a small pile of pieces of pitch pine, about twelve inches long and two inches wide. At his right is a bucket of water. He begins each by smoothed off a rough piece. Then pressing one end of the stick against his body, he cuts a notch in the stick at a point where the thumb and first finger of his fingers over the stick, he marks out a fan from the end, and notches that. The next process is to whittle the other end to the shape of a handle. Again reversing the stick, he takes from his pocket a small wooden wedge, with which he is able to chip the end that he now holds until his fingers tell him that it is smooth and of the right bulge. Resting the stick to a perpendicular he runs his knife quickly into it to the part that he has redperviously marked out as the place where the handle should begin. Then he reversing rides the upper half of the stick into splints, which are perhaps six inches long, an inch wide, and about an eighth of an inch thick. The end of the stick is not more than two inches in diameter, and he splits it into twelve or thirty splints. When the splinting is finished the blind man takes one of the fans into three sides of a hexagon. After the fan is made it looks like a fan.

When the exhibition has gone thus far he takes the stick in the left hand, the fan in the right, and with a few quick strokes of the knife he cuts the fan into a fan. Then he takes up another stick and shapes and cuts it in the same way, sometimes he has a story to throw gathered about him. His hands are so adapted to difficulties, that his speech so simple that few who hear it can avoid being interested in the story he has to tell. He says he was born in Ireland, but he has been in this country so long that he calls himself "only from Jersey." Twenty four years I have been blind. I was born blind, I believe, but I can see sight. People often ask me how it feels to be blind, and I always tell them that it is the way the feelings of people who see differ from my feelings. I have not been able to study it out. As for me, while I have wished sometimes that I could see, I never cared for sight but three times. The first time was when I married my girl wife. I thought she must be a beauty, for I felt it. I guess my boy, who is here, thinks that I was indeed taking my chances blindly. The next time was when our baby was born; born with eyes, and with a body, and with feelings, the other day, when I went home I was prepared with a shock, but my boy, poor fellow, I said nothing at home, but I wanted to see it. I knew sight has its blessings. Those who have sight do much more than I can without it. I notice that people with sight have their own pleasures, and they make life, and are subject to more annoyances, perhaps, than those who are blind. Probably most of you would rather have sight and troubles than to be sightless and free from all troubles. But, after all, those that see may take a lesson from the blind—the lesson of patience.

By the time this little speech is over, the crowd has been prepared for the fan and the one that he put in the water before the sticks, and he has a few cents in his hand, asked to come out. He makes the exchange and moves with the naked stick in his hand, the splint and sawyer. His fingers fly from one to the other, and he cuts them outward, catching the end of the sectors, and with a few quick strokes of the knife, first splint, and so on. The splints are arranged and shaped, and he begins from about half of them in one direction, he performs a process of twisting, and he produces shaping the sector into a perfect fan. He asks for the fans 10 cents each, but he gives one to a sympathetic listener, who unscrews, no doubt, his receipts from sales. He is so quick that he is gone before the crowd by threading a needle with his teeth and sewing the fan with a strong thread on the tip of his tongue, with rapid proficiency sightly, and the needle a quarter of an inch off. He tongue works the end of the thread through the needle's eye as fast as quickly as a person with sight could do it.

Death of English kings.

William the Conqueror died from enormous fat, which was the cause of the death of his passions.

William Rufus died the death of the poor stags which he hunted.

Henry I. died of gluttony.

Henry II. died of a broken heart; consumed by the bad conduct of his children.

Richard Coeur de Lion, like the animal from which his heart was named, died by an arrow from an archer.

John died, nobody knows how; but it is said from poison, which he intended for others.

Henry III. died of old age, and left the crown of England to his son Edward I.

Edward I. likewise said to have died a "natural sickness"—a sickness which would prevail with the College of Physicians of domestic.

Edward II. was most barbarously and indecently murdered by assassins in his own mother and her paramour.

Edward III. died of dotage, and Richard II. of Starvation—the very reverse of Henry V.

Henry IV. is said to have died of "this and that" disorders; and uneasiness in palaces in those times was very common complaint.

Henry V. is said to have died of a "painful affection, presumably." This is a courtly way of putting it, but it is true.

Henry VI. died in prison, by means known then only to his jailer, and now known only to Heaven.

Edward V. was strangled in the Tower by his uncle, Richard III.

Richard III. was killed in battle.

Henry VII. died easily, as a miser ought to.

Henry VIII. died of carbuncles, fat and fury.

Edward VI. died of a decline.

Queen Mary is said to have died of a broken heart.

Old Queen Bess is said to have died of melancholy from having sacrificed Essex to her jealousy.

James I. died of drinking and the effects of his sins.

Charles I. died on the scaffold.

Charles II. died unfairly—it is said of apoplexy.

William III. died from consumption induced by body, and from the stumbling of his horses.

Queen Anne died from dropsy.

George I. died of drunkenness, which his physicians politely called an apoplectic fit.

George II. died of a rupture of the heart, which the professionals of that day termed a "disruption of the aorta."

George III. died as he had lived—a madman. Throughout life he was at least a consistent monarch.

George IV. died of gluttony and drunkenness.

William IV. died from consumption induced by body, and from the stumbling of his horses.

Queen Anne died from dropsy.

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the chief agent in popularizing ideas, and popularizing ideas constitutes opinion, and opinion governs the world. In our time, religious journalism is not only a powerful and serious vocation, but only a week intervenes between the pulpit and the people, and the pulpit speaks. What is said was ought to be the object of Catholic journalism but to combat error and defend the truth, whether it may be—across all, the Divine truth."—BISHOP TEBRACH'S MANUAL UNITARIA.

The New Archbishop of Oregon.

Should the rumor prove true which we published last week relative to the appointment of Right Rev. William H. Gross, C. SS. R., of Savannah, Georgia, as Archbishop of Oregon, the Catholic people of that extensive Diocese will have reason to rejoice that Rome has made such a splendid selection for them. Bishop Gross is born in the Catholic city of Baltimore, of German parents; he received his ecclesiastical education in the college of St. Charles, Maryland, and after many years of arduous labors as curate and rector, he was consecrated Bishop of Savannah, by Archbishop Bayley, in the cathedral of Baltimore, on Sunday, April 27th, 1873.

Since his connection with the See of Savannah, Bishop Gross has accomplished a great deal of good not only in his own immediate diocese but also throughout a great portion of the South, in consequence of the interest he has manifested in propagating the faith among the colored population and establishing schools for their instruction. He has also greatly increased the number of churches and charitable institutions in his diocese, and left behind him the mark of prosperity upon every portion of the State where Catholic interests are concentrated.

Bishop Gross is a man of fine personal appearance, about fifty years of age, of medium height, and very prepossessing. He is blessed with a very amiable disposition and is most zealous in the cause of Catholic education. All these traits in his character will help to develop the religious interests of the great Northwest, and promote the interests of the Church in the Archdiocese of Oregon, which is destined at no distant day to contain a very large number of Catholic citizens.

A dispatch from Savannah, received yesterday, says that Bishop Gross has been officially informed of his promotion to the Archbishopric of Oregon. The Bishop was tendered a reception by the Catholic section of Savannah, at which many were present from other cities. His spoke of the late Plenary Council, stating as the result of that body's deliberations that Catholicity would double in this country in a short time.

Who is Saint Blase?

A "Catholic reader" writes to enquire who is St. Blase, whose name he was mentioned in the MONITOR a couple of weeks ago in connection with throat diseases. St. Blase was a bishop and martyr in the first persecution of Diocles, in the year 316. He is frequently mentioned in the ancient western martyrologies which have come to one's name. In the holy wars his relics were dispersed over the West, and his veneration was propagated by many miraculous cures, especially of sore throat.

In Europe and in this country, since such diseases as diphtheria, scarlet fever, pneumonia, bronchitis and throat diseases, have added so largely to the death list, the invocation of St. Blase has become revived, and thousands of people annually visit the churches where the ceremony is performed on February 3rd—the festival of the Saint.

The ceremony itself is very simple, and for the instruction of those who may never have witnessed it we copy the following from a Hartford, Conn., paper:

At the early Mass the pastor blessed two candles, which were to be subsequently used. These candles were by no means the most unimportant feature of the ceremony.

The note struck for the administration was struck, but long before that how hundreds of devoted Catholics, connected with all parishes in the city, were assembled in the Church. Each of the prompt were candidates for the application of the blessed candles and the benedictions of the Father Saint. Although no announcement, other than that contained in the calendar had been given, yet the church was crowded.

The Pastor, Very Rev. Father Mullaney, was assisted by his curates, Rev. Corcoran and Dutchard. At the appointed hour the three priests arrayed in the garb prescribed by the Catholic Church, appeared at the altar and the ceremonies commenced. After a silent prayer the candles were prepared to be opened, the altar rail, which they did. Then the priests repeated two Latin prayers, the Pater Noster and the two Latin prayers, the Pater Noster and the two Latin prayers, the Pater Noster and the

Farm and Home.

THE OLD ATTIC ROOM.

I remember the dear old attic room,
Where I slept when a little boy,
In the farm-house over beside the hill,
When life was a perfect joy.
I remember the shelves so old and quaint,
And the bed where I used to sleep,
And the chest of drawers beside the door,
Where the apples were always kept.

I remember well how the early sun
Through the window small would stray,
And how the birds in the tree outside
Would warble their merriest lay,
And how my mother's "Time to get up!"
In my heedless ear would fall,
And the unpretentious print that hung
In mysterious use on the wall.

I remember the rolling, crashed and low,
Where branches of pepper hung
And the musty smell—now that wouldn't roll up,
But in every sense and sensation was real.
I remember the harvels with stovepipes filled,
And various other things,
And the memory of the dear old room
Remembrances also brings.

Of the nights I had of lazeiness rest!
What wouldn't I give to be
Again, in the cozy, high-bed dream,
A wanderer happy and free?
And on the carpetless floor to tramp,
A merry and boisterous boy,
Not the sedate and dignified man
With her latest painted toy!

The room was not fair to look upon,
But to me 'twas a jolly nest,
As I blew on the bellows I would lay on down
In steed and willing quest,
And dream the dreams that then I dreamt,
In the slight so cool and still,
Or the lonely bed in the attic room
In the farmhouse by the hill.

DO.

The girls who have pored over the pages of the little book called "Duck's," are now reading the anagrams to accept advice in regard to things that they should do.

Do get up in time for breakfast.

Do sign your full name to your letters.

Do, when you talk, keep your hands still.

Do attach as much importance to your mind as to your body.

Do be natural; a poor diamond is better than a good imitation.

Do be resistent; the world at large has no interest in your private affairs.

Do try to be sensible; it is not a particular sign to superiority to talk like a fool.

Do observe; the family of observation, well cultivated, makes practical men and women.

Do try to remember where you put your gloves and card-case; keep the former mended and the latter filled.

Do put your hair pins in so they will stay; it looks shrewdly, to say the least, to see them half dropping out.

Do avoid causes of irritation in family circle; do reflect that home is the place in which to be agreeable.

Do, sometimes at least, allow your mother or lover better than you do; she was educated before you were born.

Do be exact in money matters; every dale you incur means loss, probably to some one less able than you to bear it.

Do be ready in time for church; if you do not respect yourself sufficiently to be punctual, respect the feelings of other people.

Do recollect that your health is more important than your amusement; you can live without one, but you'll die early without the other.

Do be truthful; do avoid exaggeration; if you mean a mile, say a mile, and not a mile and a half; if you mean one, say one, and not a dozen.

Do answer your letters soon after they are received, and do try to reply to them with relation to their contents; a rambling ill-considered letter is a satire upon your education.

Do try to be accurate, not only for your own sake, but for the sake of your neighbor; the habit of being careless is the antipathy of the female mind for accurate and reasonable argument against the equality of the sexes.

Do cultivate the habit of listening to others: it will make you an invaluable member of society, to say nothing of the advantage it will give you when you are yourself a talker.

Do be contented; "misery" are listeners; a cheerful, happy spirit is infectious; you can carry it about with you like a sunny atmosphere. Do avoid whispering; it is as bad as gossiping; both are to be condemned; there is no excuse for either one or them; if you have anything to say, say it, if you have not, do hold your tongue altogether; silence is golden.

Mistakes of Farmers.

1. To think that any one can farm: that a man who has started as a contractor for a patent toothpick or bed been unsuccessful as a carpenter, can jump into a tobacco-raising high intelligent and preserving efforts, and, being utterly unfamiliar with details, be able to be a money.

2. The idea that a large farm, half stocked, and poorly cultivated, pays better than a few acres well and carefully tilled.

3. What is in but the worst kind of a mistake to pay hundreds of dollars for good farm machinery, and allow it for want of proper shelter to rot and become useless a year or so sooner than it should.

4. It is a mistake to let year after year pass by with no attempt to improve the quality of the farm stock. Blooded cattle pay. They make beef quicker, the sows give more and richer milk. Better blood in horses pays.

5. To let British pride or narrow minded prejudice prevent the adoption of new methods when they have been proved by practical use.

6. To get up after the sun, lean on a hoe handle, speculate for an hour or two upon what the weather is going to be, let the weeds get a start, and then wonder why farming don't pay.

7. To have a lot of unchopped wood wet or half split at the pile, a lot of old harness hanging in the kitchen, and muddy tracks in the dining room, and expect to see the women folk good natured.

8. To have a lot of half-fed, emaciated, lonesome looking fowls, roosting depletedly in some old outstrewed tree when a few good, healthy chickens, properly housed, would make the poultry yard an honor, instead of a disgrace.—Practical Farmer.

Mothers—Their Great Influence.

It is hard for a young mother who has not yet overcome the waywardness and tendencies of her own youthful nature, to realize the influence she exerts over her little one. She is constantly surrounded by critical relatives, who, if her morals and her manners. As the mother is, so are her sons and daughters. If a family of children are blessed with an intelligent mother who is dainty and refined in her manners, and who is one that considers it necessary to be one woman in the drawing-room and an entirely different person in her every-day life, her who is a true mother and who is always a tender, charming woman, you will invariably see her habits of speech and her perfect manners repeated in her children. Great, rough, romping, noisy, busy boys, will always tone down their voices, and stand quietly, and try to move manfully when she stops to give them a kind word and a pleasant smile—for a true woman will never fail to say and do all the kind, pleasant things she can that will in any way help to lift up and cheer those whose lives are shaded with care and toil. The mother of to-day rules the world of tomorrow. Think of it, dear mothers, and guard well your home treasures.

THE CRAZY QUILT.

My darling wife, pray tell to me,
When it was time for crazy quilt was?
And the lady told (an genuively
Sew, sisters, sew, sew with one;
Sew on the work of the ten inch square.
A blue silk bit for the upper side,
And a pink silk bit not quite so wide;
A bit of plush of an olive green,
And smallish piece of velvetine;
A scarlet piece to the corner there
And a scraps of white and here's your square.

My darling wife, pray, pardon me
For what I said of the crazy quilt;
And I'll sew on the ten inch square,
Sew, sisters, sew, sew with care.
Send by the post and go by the car,
And have your friends look near and far;
The attic search, and search the chest
For grandma's dress and grandma's vest.
Bits, sisters, cut, cut with care,
Straight or diagonal, bias or square,

But, darling wife, do promise me
To be in time for our supper tea,
And still the answered passively
Stitch, sisters, stitch, stitch with care,
Stitch on the work of the ten inch square.
A horse-race is a very good thing,
And a splendid "find" is a honest string;
Most anything serve to fill
For the bit and nine, and nine and bit.
The leather stitch or the herring-bone,
Or "set up" a stitch that all your own;
The tricksy stitch or the button hole,
And sew away by the perch or pole.
Out, sisters, out, sew with care,
Stitch ahead on the ten inch square.
Stitch, sisters, stitch, stitch with care,
Stitch on the work of the ten inch square.
A pansy there with an old-fashioned rose;
And a lemon-orange reddish glare,
You're sure to have your ten inch square.

Bill Nye on Butter-Milk.

Butter is the nature fruit of the full blown cow, writes Bill Nye in the Louisville Courier-Journal. It is the greatest effort of her life. The cow toils not, neither does she spin, yet I say unto you Solomon in all his glory could not beat her on the hand-made, or rather milk made, butter. This suitable joke I have repeated and newly adulterated for use during the winter.

Butter comes from the cow in a liquid state. It is quite a trick to win her confidence so that she will yield it up to a fellow stranger. I once sought to woo the latent fluid from the milk rotor of a large speckled cow, to whom I was a comparative stranger. She was not one of those bloodied cows that look as though they have been cut out of a sheet of paper with a pair of scissors. She was a low cow, with coarse instincts, born in obscurity.

Her brow was low, but she wore her tail high, and she was haughty—oh, so haughty. The young man who had hitherto acquired the milk from this cow deserved one day to his home away to a neighboring village, where he might trip the light bomblate too till the was sent home against the two. (Quotation from a poet who was a poor speller.) He wanted me to milk his large speckled, plebian cow, and I said I would. The movement was certainly all mine. I undertook to do as I had agreed, but failed. From the moment I entered her stall and made a commonplace remark to her, I knew our acquaintance would not lead to a warm attachment. Somehow I felt constrained and uneasy in her society from the moment we met until loving friends pulled me out through the stable window and brought me back to consciousness. I shall ever remember to milk a strange cow again until the sign is right. So far the sign has not been right.

I might be sent on a polar expedition and get stranded on an iceberg, with no other alternative but to milk a cow or eat an old friend, but I should fain to milk the cow unless the friend was a very old friend indeed.

Butter is produced by rapunging the juice from a rare and costly chemical known as cream. Cream is boat in the milk. Milk is known as dry and extra dry. A good milkman will always ask you if you want your milk wet or otherwise.

An old well-digger named Grady told me about going over into southern Indiana at one time to dig a well for a man named Wilson. Wilson wanted to be very close. He was the most cootigious man in Indiana. He sold water to a man on the other side and then turn it over and earn the bubble. It was a constant struggle between Wilson and his wife to see which would be the master.

The first day that Grady was there they had a round ball of butter about as big as a lemon and as hard as Plancksbrook's law. The butter-knife had a handle that would turn every time anyone tried to get a lick at the butter, and the little round ball would dog over on the other side and smile. Now and then a hired man would reach over with his own knife and make a shash at it; but the better, confident of its own strength, would up over with a dull thud, and the man would heave a sigh and give it up. Then another farm hand would make a dash at it, but burst into tears and quit. Finally Grady, who had watched the performance several days, jabbed his fork down through the middle of the yellow chuck and succeeded in carrying it to you to the centre was a small, solid wooden top. "There," says Grady, "I've found out what the blamed thing is worked on, anyhow."

Sat Down in the Pudding.

A story comes from rock-ribbed Windham county, Connecticut. The use of names would be unkind. It concerns a spruce young city lawyer who had a blushing damsel as a bride from her rural New England home and returned with her to the hospitable mansion of his father-in law to enjoy the Thanksgiving festival. He was giving the pot of honor at the table and called upon to carve—according to the old time custom. The turkey was baked pretty hard and was somewhat tough with age. The spruce young lawyer struggled. The baked bird would not yield. An enormous plum pudding stood beside the carver's platter, and was somewhat in the lawyer's way. Finally he picked up the pudding dish and placed it on the chair behind him, and then renewed his attack on the turkey with redoubled vigor. His face was red with effort and embarrassment, his glasses somewhat awry, perspiration—but still he struggled. At last he made a tremendous effort and succeeded—in landing the imperious bird on the other side of the table. "There," he said in despair, "now I've done it," and sat down in the pudding!

Technically Told.

"Yes," said the Widow Brown, "Deacon Blank is one of the pillars of our church."

"Well," snapped Miss Lily Turtle, "I'm glad I don't belong to a church that has to be holstered up by such a man as he is."

"He hasn't a feather's weight of influence," observed Sister Harding, threading the point of her needle.

"I have always regarded him as a show, and the other deacon's a rule.

"I know he's always a wet blanket at our parties," pouted Miss Lily.

The demon coming in just then, all the ladies and a chorus—

"Oh, dear! you're just the one we want to select texts."

Gloom Ahead.

"What makes you look so gloomy, Josey? In trouble?"

"Yes, my mother-in-law died last night—"

"Ah, excuse me, I hadn't heard of the sad—"

"And I promised my wife that I couldn't drink anything for a week. Over the days yet!"

THIS ACADEMY, PLEASANTLY SITUATED on Golden Gate Avenue,

PASTORAL LETTER OF BISHOP MANOGUE.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

long ago, Christianity had lost its fascinating attraction in England. A government that could take advantage of a devastating famine, and rob its starving of their faith for a mess of pottage, while its founders were busily employed in moulding Sikhs for the Punjaub and Bundelkunds of India, is capable of anything in the moral order.

We could, beloved brethren, in the short compass of a letter, only glance at certain important matters. If we have referred to other religions, peoples and systems, it is because our own people are surrounded by them, and sometimes exposed to be swayed by their empty, astartal displays. It is because we, a great community, are composed of our own unthinking people, who scandalize their neighbors, by entering other churches, and causing ill marriages, funerals, and even lectures. No penalty should be spared to put a stop to this evil custom, which so greatly leads to religious indifference. Our great desire is to encourage a spirit of inquiry and investigation; to induce our people to study their religion, as I be always prepared to render account of the faith that is within them. The Catholic Church does not fear the light; her history is the history of Christian civilization. Often during life and even of recent date, have we heard of alarm cries upon our people and religion by self-styled Christians, who had never been represented in the waters of baptism. Is it not, then, desirable, as well as necessary, to be able to distinguish the wheat from the chaff, the genuine from the counterfeit? For this, every Catholic family should be provided with select Catholic works and a healthy Catholic literature.

It behoves all the faithful, to be on our guard against all occasions and tendencies leading to religious indifference, desertion and corruption in morals. It behoves the family to defend its own dignity; parents to watch over their children, and pastors over their flocks. If we desire dignity in society, authority in government, respect for our country and durability for the union, we must preserve, and continue to ennoble and elevate the family. The house may stand in natural beauty and sublimity; parks, lawns and gardens may present a fairy perspective; every entrance and avenue may be adorned with delicate roses and exhale the sweet fragrance of Eden; rich trappings, hangings, carpets and valuables of every description, may deck with ease, but if the flowers of piety, and the fragrance of virtue, be wanting, all is blank. Who is our and what do we find? Forgetful not of God and of His holy worship; no good example from parents, no respect or obedience from children; no exercise of obedience from children; no exercise of prayer, no sign of religion or devotion, no peace, no union of hearts, no fidelity. The desire of gold, the dread of losing riches, predominates. The absence of the family library, now especially, when Catholic books and literatures are so accessible, the absence of the monthly Catholic magazine; the Catholic periodical; the absence of Catholic family journals, exists a sadness on our vitalation, and tells us, a sad decay is near some disastrous shipwreck. But the news of the day is inexpressible. The pastoral and daily papers have full control. There all the crimes of the calendar are established in captivating colors, more glowing than the rainbow. Crimes which should not be even suspected, are published in the family circle, at the family hearth, and by family circle, at the family hearth, and by family friends. What is the consequence? Immoral, perhaps, parents, imperceptibly become confiant, gaie, the spoiled child, the full-fledged "Punk's bad boy," waiting for the death of the old fossil, and enjoying behind parents.

Next come mixed marriages, a sort of unavoidable evil, but whose blighting effects are one of the most blasting curses of modern society. How often have we been mortified at the expression, rather, the exultation of ofrontery, of the young man or woman: "Mother is a Catholic, father Methodist, but I think for myself; I belong to no religion." Such monstrous expressions are a curse from the beginning. Nurtured in the bosom of both parties religions, would one be so, the answer and so-ff, or the other soon banish every impulse of religion from the family. From an inability to serve two masters, there is a fidelity to one at the expense of the other, generally ending in an unsatisfactory to both. We have to remember the hasty and improper contracted marriage, and its baneful influence. Children, considering themselves more wise than their parents, despise their advice, as well as the control of their parents, run into an unholy alliance, and on the first pretence seek an unholy divorce and absent separation. We have seen the rich and opulent families, who, pass away their time without any reference to their obligations to charity, and even at the hour of death, never give a charitable thought to the cries and appeals of our poor, our orphans, our struggling institutions, our schools and colleges, our Seminaries and religious communities, who have abandoned their homes, their parents, their brothers and sisters, their friends and companions for the glory of God and well-being of man; for the preservation of virtue in the family, and religion in society.

Establishing this, already too long, letter, we earnestly exhort you, beloved brethren, to warn the people entrusted to your charge, not only during the Lenten season, but from time to time during the year, against the dangers by which they are surrounded; to remind them of their duties and obligations; to focus upon good example from parents; respect and obedience from children; to watch over the training and education of the youth, and rising generation; to provide for instruction in the Christian doctrine in churches and distant places, where churches and schools cannot be established; to organize sodalities and Catholic societies to keep Catholics away from pernicious associations and societies; to encourage sound Catholic literature in the family, so that the beauties of the Church may shine forth in all their splendor, that the services she has rendered to the family, society and civilization, be properly understood and acknowledged, and the preservation of the priceless treasure of faith, duty and worship appreciated.

THE BATTLE OF THERMOPYLÆ

WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY "SCHOLASTIC."

Leonidas, the Spartan King, with his noble Lacedæmonians,
Had taken his Thermopylæ three times before they stayed,
Determined that the Persian foe, never shall be led,
Through that pass that leads to Greece, never to be their dead.
Never shall they suffer a Spartan tongue to say
"Our soldiers with Leonidas, have fled but the day."

Meanwhile the Persian leader, found Xerxes with his host
The greatest one in numbers, "will could ever boast"
Arrived close to the "Hot Gates," and with unbelieving ear,
Of Leonidas, the Spartan, "said he, he cannot standing near
But being convinced, said he, to a contrary standing near
"He, bring these Grecian mutineers to our royal pleasure here."

Soon did the cowardly messengers, return across the sea
"The Spartan King and leader back on make not a much delay.
But to your gracious majesty, hear from him the message thus,
That, By Jove, it seems well great to him, to yield you the passage,
Till the multitude of Persians will have fled home and make them,
Or, with the ease your royal needs bequeath, he go and take them."

"We told these of this countries, and wonderful array,
Whose spears and shields almost obscured the sunlight at midday,
The word," then said Leonidas, high standing his blade,
"Are the better shall we fight the Persians in the shade.
Xerxes looked scornful at him, his features marked with pride,
And coloring, he stamped his foot, and from his eye flashed fire.

"Go, bid our Median warriors, said he, "Darkness and land
Than to surrender to a land, that shall our way impede,
Their home within our royal camp, with the brands of red hot iron
We may burn those counting the spears, and our sight,
With impious and defiant words, "Leonidas, the Spartan,
Go, show them now, leader's soldiers, how the Median can fight."

Forthwith the Median charge hurried, against the lonely foe,
Xerxes stood amazed in battle line, with shield and sword raised low;
But their superior numbers could nothing much avail,
Where, in a narrow passage, the Spartan, in an iron coil
The Spartan stoutly held their spears and bent their fighting ground,
Till Xerxes from a lofty throne, saw his warriors fly all round.

Then the ten thousand immortals, advance with three loud cheers,
Proudly they dash forward, and, cross the Grecian spears
But as a step a lightning ground, would a Spartan soldier yield,
Ere he rather leave a his body dead, upon the battle field.
Thebes Leonidas' aid Xerxes leap up from his marble throne,
Thebes Leonidas' aid Xerxes leap up from his marble throne,
Behind with fear and anguish, fled the Persian host as one.

The proud immortals thinned in number, crestfallen and defeated,
By a handful of stout soldiers, back to the camp retreated,
Their overthrow is a paragon of anger and shame to Persia,
Knowing not what he could do, looked around him in surprise,
Of shining: "Oh, can none of this be found countless times
For great reward some help us, to take this cursed man."

Forthwith up to the Persian King, reverently hearer there came,
A native from Mt. Œtna side, Ephialtes was his name.
A native from Kon, reward me well, and your soldiers in one day
Will find within the "Hot Gates," through an unfrequented way.
Foiled of slaughter, I see a miserable gain
This wretch would cause his countrymen to shed their blood in vain.

Meanwhile, the brave Leonidas, and his gallant troop yet warning
Of the treacherous danger, that was impending over the morning,
No chance there was of standing still, yet he will and he fly;
For a Spartan's sworn duty was to conquer and to die.
True to their post these brave men, "crowned that come what world
Fear of and that time, by heaven! at death as they could.

Nor did they wait the Persians to begin the deadly fight;
But marching from the mountain pass, they rushed to left and right,
Attacking with desperate valor, numbers less than they slay.
Fighting, conquering, they fight throughout the day
Of the brave Leonidas, mortally wounded fain,
But he his noble warriors, with dying voice, he calls

"Around me, brave companions, firmly have conquered fast,
Never alive deliver me to the impious Persian foes!
Fight for your country and your gods, fear, courage your sovereign's death,
My heart's best blood is flowing, fear, courage! while you've breath."
Bravely did the Spartans keep their dying King's request;
They fought with desperate valor, around his noble breast.

Exhausted by labor and wounds, they retire within the pass;
The weapons broke, their numbers thinned, few few remained, alas!
Surrounded by foes on all sides, the arrows fall like rain,
And quickly as a man that heede hand was slain.
A mighty his number with the spot, where the noble warriors died,
Two members of that proud band who every fear defied.

And near the spot another white marble stone is placed,
On which the great inscription by Grecian hand was traced:
"Go, tell the Spartan reader, this thou hast seen the lonely
All praise to you brave men, great Spartans on the day,
Whether is made, forever go."

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY IN FOUR CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER I.

Père Sylvestre was the curé of the little village of St. Lye.

He was one of those pure, simple, holy natures that are found here and there in all countries and in all churches—the shepherd of his flock, the friend and father of every man, woman and child in the village that nestled among the hills of far France. St. Lye was like a garden tended by the curé's hands, and in all that garden the fairest, sweetest flower was Lisbette Lafontaine. Such a dainty little maiden!

Fatherless and motherless while yet a babe, she had been even sweeter and dearer to the old priest's heart than any other of his flock. Lisbette lived in a tiny cottage at the corner of the street, near where the fountain splashed and trickled over the stones; form never lovingly shaded the streamlet that came from the hills above, and here their ground from constancy towards the dipping mounds that on a summer's day sparkled in the sunlight as though a shower of diamond dust was being scattered by some giant's hand, or as Lisbette had dropped her silvery veil as she passed. It was a pretty sight to see the Lisbette filling her pitcher at this fountain, her hair half confining in delicate tendrils about her brow, her little ankle peeping out from under her grey skirt, and her white bodice now and again adorned with a pale pink oleander blossom—a piece of natural coquetry born half of the knowledge that she was so fair, half of a childish love of pretty things.

You may be sure the young men of St. Lye were not slow to see into what beautiful sisterhood the orphan child, the soft pink bud of a baby that had been at once the idol and plaything of the whole village, had grown.

And yet, strange to say, girls with far less real beauty than Lisbette had more lovers. There was a strange reluctance about her that the simple villagers felt, and hardly understood; the never lingered at the fountain to laugh and joke with the boys as the other maidens, and would turn away with slowly through the still summer's evening to carry an offering of wild roses to Père Sylvestre as he sat reading his office, book under the shade of the oleander tree in his garden, of which the boundary was formed by a hedge of sweet-scented hawthorn, with lovely pale primrose colored flowers.

Sometimes the good old priest thought to himself "Lisbette will one day be the bride of Heaven," but such thoughts he generally up as yet in his own heart; for the girl was young, and life was fresh and full of joyousness, and he knew that the heart that turns to God must turn of its own free will to the religious life as a flower turns to the sun; most forced of lesser joys to back in the light of His love, only turns to a very immature heart who knowledge all enough good to be as nothing compared with Him; and certainly happiness is thus sometimes to the glory of telling for our dear Lord among the poor, that she has heritage in the Church.

Old Mathilde, a dame of such advanced age that no one in St. Lye ventured to guess at the number of years of her pilgrimage, at the corner of the village stood near the fountain. On a Sunday or a saint's day you might see her going to Mass, one stiffened hand resting on the girl's shoulder: and where the road made a sudden steep ascent to the church that stood half way up the hill, Lisbette would clip her white arm around her aged companion, and, in the fashion they would make the venerable ascent.

In the evening Lisbette used to seek and drive home the four milk white goats with the tinkling bells about their necks, that formed an important part of Mathilde's worldly possessions, and were looked upon as a certain heritage of her adopted child. Mathilde's cottage was the poorest and hottle of great cities ever reached its poverty stricken sanctuary the city.

When any one in St. Lye received a letter by the diligence, that once a week traversed the country and hailed at the village, it was an event known to everyone one before an hour had passed, and the receiver of the missive put on a consequence of importance as he or she walked to Mass the following Sunday.

"Hast thou then heard how the good father hath received a letter, and that the child Lisbette is about to make the journey to the distant town of Marmaine-sur-mer, there to remain till after the holy Easter season?"

"Jeanie Verge!" replied the individual to whom this was addressed; "hast what a terrible journey for one so young? Is not the child overcome by fear?"

"No," was the reply; "Lisbette is of a nature not at all timid. She came to the sester of her mother, one Annette Benoit, who hath never yet seen her and would do so. It is rumored at church and market that she will make the child her adopted daughter, which will be good luck, for she is rich they say."

"Bilil," urged the other, it is a marvel for one so young to make a journey of such proportions!"

Three reasoned the neighbors; but the sure thought it well that Lisbette should visit her mother's people, and when the journey drew near, some of the villagers was meeted in so many places that it seemed, as the old dame said, as if the girl would slowly wrap up the hill road that led, as the peasants said, to where the great iron gates of Lisbette was heavily setting forth on her journey. Her fair face, tearful as dew laden flower, looked back at the villagers assembled to come to see her depart, and the last sight she carried away in her mind was that of the good curé standing apart from the rest very grave and sorrowful. His kindly, gentle eyes, his white hair under his broad black hat, the stout stick on which he leaned, even the gleam of the little silver buckles on his shoes as they caught the sunlight—all combined a picture in her heart; she was leaving behind something the thought of which would guard her from all evil among the strangers, people she was going to. Just at the turn of the road she waved her hand to many colored relief her to friendly farewell, and then she could see St. Lye no more.

The pink tapering buds of the oleanders burst out into great blossoms that hung their heads as if overweighed with their own luscious perfume; the trees grew dense with the fullness of foliage; the ferns became so tall they almost hid the inspiring waterfall; green and gold lizards lay basking on the rocks and up the wall of the curé's garden, too deliciously warm and lazy to skip, even when he walked up and down the pathway pondering over his Sunday sermon; nay, they were even too lazy to be pretty shining creatures, against the round stone of old Mars, who kept watch for the good father, proclaiming in shrill accents that Monsieur le curé was home.

It is probable that if this faithful retainer had not announced her master to his frugal meals at all, the old man would never have thought of them himself, but simply wondered at night same as he felt so weak and weary. So almost was he at times that it was full of him one evening, as he sat in the cool shade down the village street and sipped the leeks on the trees as great spots of fingers might do, Marie, followed with a sequence that called her a consultation with the winnowers among her friends, for got to light the eternal stove in her master's room, and what he could grey-haired heading his shiny hands above the cold stove, and persuasively trying—some how not quite so fire was, stalking out of the Isle of low infirmity and age were growing upon him space, so that he could no longer derive his wonted comfort from the fire's warmth! Marie called in all the neighbors part, and it was this vehement adjuration that first aroused the master to the real state of the case.

Hand of summer hung pretty garlands of flower and foliage about St. Lye, the high star was bright and gay with some of the Lisbette's dwellings, and the hills were adorned with the wonderful tints of the fall of the leaf, and with his people, and his thoughts were filled with the wandering lamb of his fold.

For as yet no news of Lisbette had reach the village, though she had now been absent from the church on three Sundays, and the inquiries were frequent and thirsty.

Then an event happened and thirsty became in time to come one of the marvellous records of St. Lye; for long after the good curé was laid to rest beneath the soft green turf where the lovely clematis was wont to shed perfumed tears of dewy petals on the dead, the folk would say, "Tell us of the death of Père Sylvestre."

CHAPTER II.

This was Père Sylvestre's dream.

He thought he was in a strange country, and that all about him were dusty wastes of sterile plain.

In the far distance, almost like a speck so far away, he saw a figure moving towards him, and he ran to meet it.

But what filled the child! Her face was fined and drawn as though years and years had passed over her since the day when in the first young days of summer he had seen her looking back at him, tearful it may be, but if the eyes were wet, the little rosy mouth was smiling as she waved her hand at the turn of the road that hid St. Lye from sight.

The dream figure was of Lisbette as the curé had never seen her. Lisbette, again the young, wringing her hands, and then stretching them out towards him as though for help!

Poor little hands that not even the hard household work entirely had blunted, could make anything save soft and tender, pink palmed like a year old baby's!

Père Sylvestre tried to move towards this pitiful little figure, but something held him back, and in the struggle against this power he awoke.

"Truly," said the good man to himself as he turned uneasily on his pillow, "I should think I had exceeded in partaking of some savory dish provided for me by my good Marie, but last night was Friday, and I had nothing but soup maigre and simple bread."

Then he once more fell asleep.

But again the same old dream-holder came before him, and this time a dreadful murky twilight had fallen on the desolate waste, that some of Lisbette, as she stood towards him out of the shadowy darkness, was strewing with tears. He came nearer than before, so near that he fancied he could stretch out his hand and touch her.

But the same power held him back, and again the struggle against it wakened him.

"The night was very still and fair; the tender moonlight fell across the room and touched his heavenly beauty the features of the Mater Dolorosa upon the wall of the simple chamber.

"Holy Mother of God," murmured the priest, crossing himself as he sat up in his bed, "hath any evil befallen the child!"

For some time he lay awake muttering softly prayers for the wandering child. Then sixteen triumphal, and once more his eyes closed gently, and once more his regular breathing told that he was at rest.

At rest! Ah no! for more pitiful than ever the child Lisbette came to him on the dreary waste. This time a blood-red, red glow was all about, and as she held out her empty pitcher the Lisbette Saint.

With a cry of pain the father woke. The night was past. In the east the day dawn was shimmering.

"Breaking to time of light across the sky."

and the pure grey gleam fell upon the pure face of the image of the Crucified over against the curé's bed.

"Dear Saviour!" he said raising his eyes to the divine face, "Thou Who loved the little cross so well, if evil hath befallen this child guide me to her."

When Marie took a peep at the new day, through her window that was set in a frame of lattice and flowers, she saw her master kneeling prayer, and down the garden, his head bent, his arms folded, his eyes on the ground.

"Dear saints! but it or beautiful to see him, without doubt he prays for the poor child." said Marie as she popped her head in again, and began hurriedly to attend to her duties.

But Père Sylvestre was pondering on his dream, and that day Marie and the village in general were electrified by the marvellous news that the curé was going in the diligence to the distant village of Mermaine to fetch the child Lisbette. A strange story, brother of the notary of St. Lye, and at present paying a visit to the country to recover health, had unfolded by hotel tell in a crowded city, would take charge of the search of the poor Lisbette. It was one midsummer, and summer, smiling, golden and roseate, was everywhere, taking with it flowers and fruits to deck the world with beauty, yet brings other less agreeable matters in her company to the lands of which we are writing. Of those, dost it perhaps the most unpleasant, when the good priest reached the end of his journey he was sorely travel-stained, and weary enough indeed. Then too, he seldom left his nest, the little village in the hills, and there is something so dreaming in finding oneself alone in a crowd, unknown until seeing strange scenes and strange people.

He imagined of a country the road to the home of one Annette Benoit, a widow well to do, and living near the sea.

"Ah! but it is easy to find the way there, father," replied the man, "For was it not with Annette Benoit the strange matron dwelt the girl from St. Lye, who is to be tried for the murder of Andrew Martel, the work that avin now occurs?"

What then the man might have said remained unspoken, for with a faint gasping sigh the priest sank back and leaned against the rough stone wall that ran along footpath, and his face grew ashen, and the silver hair that fell around it.

"But my father, thou art ill, shall I not get a cup of water for thee?" said the man.

The priest leaned for a moment, and then said in that quiet voice that always spoke of suffering, "Nay, my child, but thou in thy kindness hast given me the cup of the first Lent I gave thee on the day of thy first communion."

Lisbette make a passionate of amen.

"Then I faint, father upon grass to it, rather if the poor child thy pity bids in night to the spot of the tale not yet in thy Saviour's hands, remember that for thy sake I have come to Mermaine and what thine own work lies!"

Both feet were rolling earthly down her place changed face, Lisbette break the image of the Redeemer, and, flinging herself upon her knees on the floor of the prison, cried in her pain.

"Up thy fox wounds that God forbid, O Jesus, great for pitiness now."

As she thus knelt and wept and prayed, the priest laid his hand upon her head and she heard him murmur a benediction, and when she looked up, the door through which he had passed was just closing.

THE SPANISH EARTHQUAKES.

The Kings Aid to the Sufferers—Experience of the People in the Devastated Region.

NEW YORK, Feb. 20. The Herald's special from Alhama, Spain, has the following account of the earthquake:

This royal visit is certainly popular. Perhaps, had it been made earlier, it would have proved more beneficial to the people and more valuable to himself. He arrived at Malaga after the first shock and personally directed the distribution of relief, he would have been with all the people that no revolution could shake his power. For the suffering people, who would have been of vast benefit as relief comes only through the hands of a government, and a government strong enough to distribute it on the spot. The tide would have swept up and covered this record of a terrible crisis, perhaps enabled not only the great open and hollows tales of secrets confided to its breast. Martel was stabbed to the heart, and his blood-stained knife with which the deed was done lay beside his lifeless body.

Père Sylvestre listened to every word of this recital, then he stood in a stunned bewildered and with his eyes raised heavenward.

"My God, I thank thee!" he said solemnly, and then bowed his head as though in the presence of the Great Judge of all men.

"But set thou from this village of St. Lye, Father, and knowest thou this wicked murder and cruel, that the poor child Lisbette is the little group.

"I am the curé of St. Lye; I know the child Lisbette. Thou art a stranger, and this is unusual of this crime; and God will give thee to us in His own good time."

"Holy Virgin but it is good to hear the father speak!" said another woman, gentler and more kindly than the first speaker, "and I believe that the accused was innocent."

"Come into my house and rest, and take some new milk and fresh bread," she went on, pitying the dusty, weary traveller; but Père Sylvestre put her aside gently.

"I don't lingering on time and time for thy charity. Let I must not rest or refresh myself yet awhile. Will you guide me to the priest?" he added, turning to one of the men.

Of course a boon offered; indeed all followed him, and all talked without ceasing. If the curé journey hard, a week they said.

The prison of Mermaine sur mer was not at present full, and the cell in which Lisbette lied, used for the detention of ordinary offenders, yet was in the place where the girl charged with murder was imprisoned, and the place from where she would be brought to the village court-house, accused by the witnesses against her, and tried by a jury of her peers, and then, if guilty, sentenced after the manner of the times and place.

He had thought that the hatred of the people, the sound of the key in the door, the echo of his own footsteps in the long stone corridor, would not have more appalled the heart of Père Sylvestre.

No one but the man was admitted, as the procession that had escorted him thither parted at the gateway, as though some extreme satisfaction were to be derived from staring through the bars, and entering for the hundredth time into every particular of the crime.

Then they departed to the village and spread the news everywhere that the mother and father, the cure of St. Lye, had come to seek Lisbette Lamotte, and was even now in prison with her.

There were kind hearts that rejoiced to hear that the girl, but one round more in the terrible days that had come upon her, but when the kindness felt that strange pleasure in the excitement and thrill of the whole affair, so characteristic of the Southern and everyone looked onward to the trial with delight, secret or avowed.

The arrival of the priest was looked upon as an added feature of interest to the trial. The night was very still and fair; the tender moonlight fell across the room and touched his heavenly beauty the features of the Mater Dolorosa upon the wall of the simple chamber.

"Holy Mother of God," murmured the priest, crossing himself as he sat up in his bed, "hath any evil befallen the child!"

DIVORCE REFORM.

The Expectation of Remarrying a Prime Cause of Separation.

Several minutes and a few words between in our community and at the Opera House the subject of divorce need not rise. The dirty pious spoke plainly and to the point. They proved that our social institutions should be done towards enacting more stringent laws and more strictly the observation of society they thought dependent thus. But which was the question to be answered? Is the character, as far as society and society, they seemed to think, could be the whole of the engagement as to allow an improvement can be made in laws in the matter of marriage and divorce? No, it is the character of the people that is to interest. If the divorce could be obtained by the children of the people, and the people themselves, the people, not social institutions, would be the people themselves, the people, not social institutions, would be the people themselves, the people, not social institutions, would be

Editorial Notes.

— Archbishop Seghers is at present collecting for the Alaska Missions in the Diocese of Albany, where he is the guest of Rt. Rev. Bishop McNeigny.

— A cablegram from Rome confirms the appointment of Rt. Rev. Bishop Gross as Archbishop of Oregon. Bishop Gross was one of the three Prelates whose names were sent to Rome at one time from which to select a successor for Archbishop Alemany.

— Many of the Irish papers are advocating the nomination of Archbishop Croke or Bishop Nulty as the successor in the College of Cardinals to Cardinal McCabe. But it seems from a cablegram printed elsewhere that Dr. Walsh of Maynooth is the coming man.

— Just as we were ready for press we received a very interesting letter from our Rome correspondent giving a graphic description of a recent visit he recently paid to the shrine of St. Clare of Monte Falco, and the wonders he saw there. It will be published next week and will be duly appreciated by all who love to read the holy lives of such wonderful saints.

— A brilliant letter on Parnell and the Parliamentary Fund from a Montana contributor has been crowded over for next week. We hope it will be carefully read and that it may awaken a spirit of practical sympathy for Ireland in the breasts of Monitorial who read the MONITOR and who only await a suitable opportunity to give their mite to the cause of a peaceable solution of Ireland's difficulty.

— We tender our warmest thanks to the many generous friends of "the grand old MONITOR" for the kindly messages and complimentary notices received each week. Also for the numerous manner they send us in no new subscribers. The best evidence we can show of our gratitude is to make the MONITOR worthy of the liberal patronage extended to it by the Catholics of the whole Pacific coast.

—Rev. A. J. Glorieux, who was nominated Vicar Apostolic of Idaho last October, has been waiting in Baltimore since the adjournment of the Plenary Council for the arrival of his brief from Rome, but he recently received a cablegram stating that the bulls have not yet left Rome. He expects that will be conserved in the Cathedral at Baltimore, by Archbishop Gibbons, as their arrival.

— In France suicide, always above the proportion, is largely increasing. Four years ago the rate per 1,000 inhabitants was 17, and in 1884 it was 19. Hanging, drowning, shooting and charcoal fumes are the popular modes of death, while April, May and June are the favorite months. San Francisco has more suicides than any other city on the American continent in proportion to its inhabitants, but its suicide rate is barely 12 per 1,000.

— We have often seemed that there was a good deal of distinction between a nominal Christian and a poker-necked Presbyterian, and our enemies were confirmed by reading in the Cleveland Leader that Andrew Jackson "died a Christian and a Presbyterian." "Old Hickory," we opine from what we have read of his large heart and liberality, was far better Christian than he was a disciple of the cross-breaking Calvin.

— Sister Mary Francis Clare, the well-known Nun of Kenmare, was in Philadelphia on Sabbath last, and was received by the Catholic element of the City of Brotherly Love with every mark of gratitude for the good she has done in Ireland and its suffering people. A congratulatory address and a purse of $600 was presented to her in the name of those who interested themselves in the cause of assisting the Nun of Kenmare in the good work she is now prosecuting.

— Our Irish correspondent in her interesting letter this week says that the general impression in Ireland is that the recent dynamite explosions in England were caused by English detectives in order to hurt the prospects of Home Rule measures being passed by the present Parliament. This idea seems to be prevalent also in England, if we may judge from several communications which have appeared in the English Provincial papers in which it is generally conceded that the explosions must either be the work of paid agents of the English government, or else that the London police have in so useless a body of officials as to demand their immediate dissolution as a useless body so far as the protection of life and property is concerned.

— Several appeals from the Executive and State officers of the Irish National League have already appeared in these columns, and we publish this week a circular from the Secretary of the Irish League asking the Irish element in America to help the home organization with funds for the purpose of returning members to Parliament who will act in unison with Mr. Parnell. We have no appeals made seem to have had no practical result, because we have resolved to open a subscription for that purpose in these columns. We will acknowledge each amount received every week, until April 22nd, and then we will place the total sum in the hands of Rev. Charles O'Reilly, Treasurer of the Irish National League. The appeal will be found on the fifth page, and we commend it to all friends of the cause of Irish liberty.

— A Chicago daily says that in Orange Mountain, N. J., has been discovered a counterpart of the famous Giants' Causeway in Ireland. The opening of a library brought the curiosity to light. The formation is evidently due to repeated volcanic eruptions that forced the trap rock while in a molten state through the old red sandstone upon which it now stands. The columns are from fifteen to forty feet high, as perfectly cut as if molded in form, and owing to their hexagonal or pentagonal shapes are considered by geologists to be of crystalline formation.

— The three original papers which we publish on the inside pages of the present issue prove that the divine affiatus is not confined to any particular community. "Scholastic," the author of "The Battle of Thermopylæ," is a sojourner in Sunny Italy; Miss M. Fitzgerald's scene wanders around the golden groves of Calvey, and Professor Mactilla is at present meandering amidst the mountain passes of Montana. The three poems possess much merit, each being on a different subject. They are all treated in that sweetly religious strain which falls so eloquently upon the ear of every Catholic who possesses a love for the beautiful alike in poetry or prose.

— "White Babies" are articles of regular barter and sale it seems in this city. Fifty dollars is their present market value, at least as we learn from the trial of a certain woman who was convicted of selling a white female infant to a Chinaman for that sum. The baby-selling business cost her six months imprisonment and $500 fine. It would appear that a customary business to sell babies born in private hospitals to Chinese or anybody else, so as to pay the expenses incurred by their birth, and also to relieve the unnatural mother of any further responsibility. That such a terrible traffic should be carried on in a Christian city in a Christian land, shows how deeply demoralizing society is, and how effectually godless education has done its work of destroying even the finer feelings of humanity in the breasts of those who have been trained in its corrupting curriculum.

Archbishop Alemany's Successor.

When his Grace Most Rev. P. W. Riordan was consecrated as Coadjutor Archbishop of this Diocese the Pope named him as the successor of Archbishop Alemany, and the Sovereign Pontiff having accepted the resignation of the venerable Metropolitan, Archbishop Riordan has been confirmed as his successor and has entered upon the administration of his ecclesiastical authority. To the readers of the MONITOR it is not necessary that we should say a single word concerning the present Archbishop, as they are generally familiar with the useless labors his Grace has already shown in laboring for the salvation of souls and the moral and material progress of the Church in this State.

We ask of our readers their prayers that Almighty God may so bless the labors of our new Archbishop that [illegible] not yet left Rome, may be spared to his people and lead them to assist him morally and materially in every good work which he may inaugurate for the propagation of our holy religion, the instruction of youth, the unity of the faithful, or the help of the poor.

Every Catholic's greatest pride should be so to comport himself as to be an honor to Christian society. He should be virtuous in the midst of vice; he should be sober even when surrounded by intemperance; he should be chaste when society reeks with corruption. It was for this that God gave to His Church the soul-strengthening sacraments so as to make the souls of those who loved Him and lived as precious Catholics a perfect image of Himself. Such Catholics as these are a credit to the Church, an example for the evil world, and so many blessings to their Bishops.

Let the Catholics of this Pacific coast therefore firmly resolve—during this holy season of Lent—to live such lives as will cause their priests and Bishops to love them. Of what avail is the friendship of the sin-stained world? Better, far better, for Catholics to possess the friendship of the Pastor who has charge of their souls, than to gain the glory and gratitude of the whole world by being false to their faith and an enemy to God.

The Dioceses of San Francisco, Grass Valley, Oregon, Nesqualy and Helena, as well as the Vicariate of Idaho, have all been placed under new Prelates within the past few years. This is a sign of the growth of the Church, and it should also lead Catholics to consider the duties they owe in shouldering their share of the responsibility which rests upon every man, woman and child in the Catholic Church.

There are new edifices to be erected for the glory of God; new schools to be opened in every Diocese, new charitable institutions to be founded and supported. To help their Prelates by financial aid in the prosecution of these works is a solemn duty entailed upon every Catholic by the law of God.

New Bishops always undertake new enterprises, and we appeal to every Catholic on this coast to donate generously and cheerfully—for God loves the cheerful giver—towards all the enterprises undertaken by their Prelates, and thus they will earn the gratitude of those whom God has placed over them, as well as become partakers in the prayers of the Church for all her faithful children, and gain—here and hereafter—that saving grace which alone can save us through the blessing of Almighty God.

The Editor of the San Francisco Monitor, in another column, makes a mistake in calling our paper the Telegraph instead of the Weekly Fourth Year, and, at present, is the oldest Catholic paper in California.—Editor Weekly Fourth Year.

We beg our valuable contemporary's pardon for cutting of ten years from its age, but the Telegraph looks as fresh and talks so vigorously that the mistake was natural. We hope our Cincinnati southern may live to celebrate its centennial and that the Monitor may be at the literary festival. The Catholic Telegraph is like the Church herself—"old, but ever new."

American Lands Held by Aliens.

A Learned, Eloquent and Patriotic Irish Priest.

The name and fame of the Rev. Dr. Daniel W. Cahill is familiar to every person conversant with the history of the Catholic Church in Ireland, and especially as the editor of this grand type of a lofty Sagesse. Dr. Cahill is now winging their flight back to the breast of that fruitful mother from whence they sprung, we deemed the occasion a suitable one whereon to relate a few personal reminiscences of one of the foremost ecclesiastics of his day in the land of his birth.

It was our good fortune as an acolyte in old St. Andrew's chapel, Lower Hindge street, Dublin—to sit at the feet of this eminent and eloquent divine on several occasions when he delivered one of his masterly charity sermons. Even now the Apollo-like figure of that magnificent specimen of manhood rises before us and we can see his lineaments from six feet four inches in height—towering above us as we look back through a long vista of years, wondering at the phenomenon of this paragon priest.

Dr. Cahill was a native of Queen's County, and on his mother's side was of Spanish descent, his complexion partaking of that rich olive tint peculiar to the purer blooded Castilian races. His hair was raven black of luxuriant richness; his eyes were deep black, and when in his sermons or lectures he rose to the full height of his magnificent figure, they flashed with dazzling brilliancy. In his youth he was intended for the army, a profession which his strength, soldierly bearing and a spirited physique naturally engendered, but he subsequently became a great soldier of the Cross and one of the most eloquent advocates of Christianity in the English speaking portion of Europe.

After many years of his life devoted to his priestly office in Ireland—during which Dr. Cahill passed through the famine scenes of 1847, and the stirring political times of 1848—the great Irish defender of Faith and Fatherland crossed over to England where he entered the lists as the champion of Catholic Ireland against the slanderous pens of the hirelings of heresy ranged on the English press. He delivered many controversial lectures in which he came off victorious, he attacked in succession such English notables as Lord Derby, Lord John Russell, Lord Palmerston, the Duke of Wellington, as well as Wolsegan preachers by the score.

As a specimen of Dr. Cahill's style we extract the following paragraph from his remarkable address to "Scorpion" Stanley. The language used by Dr. Cahill a third of a century ago in reference to England's attitude in Ireland, is as appropriate to-day as it was then. Speaking of England and her rulers, past and present, Dr. Cahill addressed upon "Scorpion" Stanley the scathing sentence

"Thy noble country! the mistress of the ocean! the queen of the land! the envy of the nations of Europe! the seat of civilization! the home of the brave! the land of the free! the refuge of the oppressed! the asylum of the slave! the country of the poor! the land of the noble! the home of the lovely! your government can boldly and proudly point to the Ionian Isles, the Indian Ocean, the Cape of Good Hope, the Australian Colonies, the Canadas, the Provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, Hudson's Bay Territory, the Bermudas, Gibraltar, Malta, Aden, Hong Kong, Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, Victoria, Van Diemen's Land, Cape Town, Port Natal, Port Phillip, Port Lincoln, Port Macquarie, Port Essington, Port Curtis, Port Moreton, Port Nicholson, Port Cooper

DON'T BE UNKIND TO THE OLD FOLK.

Don't be unkind to the old folk,
Often times your tenderest care,
Long for the day, the nice old day.
That unwearingly takes his way,
And wagging his tail outside the door,
Keeping always his boots in sight,
Cares not a rap in his aged old head
For either dog in the fight.

Not his is the bone they are fighting for,
And why should my dog care?
With nothing to tell, but a certain chance
To lose never possessing aught?
Then may be a few, perhaps, who fall
To see it quite in this light;
But what is the fuss I feel rather be
This outside dog in the fight.

I know there are days, monotonous days,
Long years of the same old thing;
To take the part of one of the dogs,
Takes something into the ring.
But I care not a jot what all may say
In regard to the wrong or the right,
My sympathies, as well as my song,
For the dog that keeps out of the fight.

Tenderly watch o'er the old folk,
Kindly their sorrows assuage,
Youth should be near the sober
And the strong staff of old age.
With all their whims and their foibles
Patiently bear and forbear;
Don't be unkind to the old folk,
Give them your tenderest care.

Facts about Precious Stones.

There is in Paris a diamond so hard that the usual process for cutting and polishing made no impression upon it. The black diamond is mostly used for tools. In Russia it is broken into fetters, pestles, and wires as court mourning. The historic diamonds have, on more latter than a piece of glass. The sham diamond is more beautiful than the genuine stone, but it has a tendency to decomposition and does not retain luster.

The diamond mines of Brazil were first opened in 1727. It is estimated that more than tons they have produced at least two tons of diamonds. In England a stone weighing one carat and of the finest water is worth, when cut and polished, about sixty dollars. The desire to rough stones so quite the habit of distinguishing the water of a rough stone by simply breathing upon it. Among the historic diamonds, the Rajah weighed three hundred and sixty-seven carats, and the Great Mogul two hundred and eight. Before it was cut the latter weighed nine hundred carats. From the composition of the diamond, we see what costly things manufactures from common material. All the diamonds field of the world are not worth the anthracite fields of Pennsylvania.

A ruby of fine carats is double the value of a diamond of that size, and one of ten carats is worth three times as much as one of corresponding size. A perfect ruby is the rarest of all stones. Rubies are often imitated with coal stones, the most common being spinel. But it is not difficult to distinguish the imitation, as the ruby is the only stone having pigeon blood color. Another precious stone is the sapphire, which is like the ruby with the exception of the color. A small stone has been seen, which was ruby on one side and sapphire on the other.

A New Use for Safe Deposit Vaults.

One of our well known New York seed firms has now on deposit in the Mercantile Safe Deposit Company's vaults four hundred pounds of Henderson's Snow ball Cauliflower Seed, which at the selling price of one hundred dollars per pound shows the value of this seed to be forty thousand dollars. Not only is this plan of depositing in vaults found to be cheaper than insurance, but what is of more importance is that if the seed should be destroyed by fire the quantity necessary for their trade could not be replaced at any price in time for the spring sales. If the four hundred pounds of Cauliflower seed were grown under favorable conditions produce nearly thirteen million pounds, which when loaded for market and sold at even eight cents per head will produce the sum of quarter of a million dollars, the value of a vegetable has attained in this country, where twenty-five years ago it was almost unknown, becomes readily apparent.

How to Select Clothing.

"How is an inexperienced buyer to distinguish between a woolen goods and the material containing a cotton warp?" asked a reporter of an opinion fashion. "By noticing even the rough edges of the material and inspecting the threads, sir, replied tailor. "Any one can tell a woolen thread from a woollen thread. Thousands will break short in two, or, on being twisted, while the other will fray and flue out, like yarn and worsted. In this way you can easily detect a mixture of cotton warp in a almost woollen fabric. "Why, my dear sir, only to think! "In the same way, sir, even more easily. Frayed out one of the threads from the rough edge, and unravel them. If they contain cloth, it will drop out of the twist, sometimes five inch, and then again in an implicable cloth, that will not weigh make you sneeze. Cotton is plentiful enough of the land and it would be age to give you such a handsome and warm cloth, or more cloddy is rank poison. N. J. Sun.

Ducks' vs. Hens' Eggs.

An experiment was lately made in France for the purpose of finding the relative value of hens and ducks as egg producers. Three of each sort were selected for testing the result by observation as to their relative fertility. Between the first day of January and the end of August, the three hens laid 297 eggs, and the ducks 342 eggs. Moreover, in the autumn months of the previous year, the ducks had produced 215 eggs while the hens had completely ceased laying. Altogether, therefore, the ducks had produced 617 eggs within the twelve months as against 297 obtained from the hens. The feeds of each class selected for experiment were of the same age, and as far as could be judged, of the same relative size and strength. Of course a more extended series of trials must be undertaken before any definite opinion can be given on the relative merits of duck's eggs and hens in the matter of egg laying. But there are eggs and eggs, and it remains to consider their comparative value of food, as produced by the hen or duck respectively. This was undertaken by a French chemist, M. Commali, who gave the result of his analysis of both varieties. A hen's egg weighing 50 4 grammes (equal to 14 443 grains avoirdupois), was found to consist 7 2 grammes of shell and membranes, 32 2 grammes or 66.07 per cent of the contents. The hundred parts of the contents of a hen's egg contained 25.01 dry matter, 1.05 ash, 11.77 fat, and the proportions of the same substances in a duck's egg were found to be 28.72, 1.16, and 15.09 respectively. It follows, therefore, that ducks are not only very prolific layers, but their eggs are also richer in fat to no inconsiderable extent, facts that will not fail to interest the reader.

OUR SAN BERNARDINO CORRESPONDENCE.

SAN BERNARDINO, Feb. 16th, 1885.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—I have already advised your readers of the wonderful Religious Revival Fathers in spiritual labors.

Since then the Jubilee, Fathers Yorke and Gallagher left the Mission this city. By Your Committee known as the Valley-Mines, in this county, seldom there are a number of Catholics who desired to partake of the spiritual growth of a Mission. The mission was held in a building known as the Town Hall, and each night as church bell not having a single bell to hear! there, the congregation were filled to overflow with Catholics, Protestants, miners prayer by a other in the building, the pews stationed in front of the pulpit, the aisles and even the pulpit was used as well as for the attitude of prayer, which they are so often put.

As the Fathers entered Valley Station a delegation of Catholic miners met them and escorted them into the camp, this being the second visit they ever had from priests, Father Hare of this place being the first priest that ever celebrated the Holy Sacrifice in that region, last Christmas being the occasion.

There are now about 1,500 miners in Calico and over a hundred Catholics attended the Mission and of most Catholics attended the Mission, many of them had to be turned away for want of room, and a priest before in the Mission country was paid to the Fathers by the Protestant people of the community, even the preachers forgoing their regular "Sabbath" services so as to give the good Fathers a chance at the Calico Tabernacle. And mail did they do their work! May God and His blessed Mother reward them for their untiring and and zealous labor for the souls of sinners.

A large-hearted resident of Calico, a Mr. Hare, Brother of the Catholic Church in this church at that place, has offered to donate the ground that region will be well provided with all the requisites of our holy Religion. Nothing of our belief Bishop reminds us that Christ came to seek and save the poorly be built, during his recent Episcopal visit to give Confirmation at that place. He evidently has not yet recovered from the accident of a couple of years ago, and he, in the average of a Conference of his Priests, when his missionary visits to all parts of his Sorrowfully Diocese, just as if he can be in one and robust health.

Since the Mission here, Catholic duty seems to have set up a new impetus. This different to have set up a new impetus. This different to have set up a new impetus. This different

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

BY ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

"The doctrines of the Church were the same in the Middle Ages as now, but the element of mercy had blunted the sharp edges, under which wealth enjoyed the fruits of labor. A false honor was created, and Luther, instead of trying to reform matters, strove to reform doctrine."—MONSIGNOR CAPEL.

"Ye are the Light,"—the Master said of old
Unto the Twelve,—"light of the world!" Glad light,
Which shade throughout the earth the radiance weighs,
Clearer than noonday's cheerless rays of cold.
O glorious mission! O ineffable trust!
Are there any Doctrine shelf-worn, dim, beshrouded
O'ershadowing Doctrine shall we, then, behold
Its lustre unfaithless hand small thy light?
Shall we, for coolness' fervent zeal, cast out
For Truth's warm splendors?—Blessed be the night!
The salt may lose its savor, as foretold,
Morals grow lax in lost Christopher's sight,—
But Christ's own Doctrine, by no shock or shame
Unsteeled, yielding
Shall shed abroad, for age, the glorious manifold!
Light of God's own Face.

TO MY ROBBY MOUNTAIN GUARDIAN ANGEL.

Bright haven of Eden to all our lives are given,
That we, in the various trials may patient bear;
Thou art sent as "Angel" to be heaven,
Thou art as "Wisdom" "entwoven" in care.
"Guardian Angel! I love yoo, for the balm
Your kindness gives my soul "A mourner." I
Doff the sad cypress for the cinchona palm;
Of earth's sorrows I grieve, the saddest will
Forget my own grave land of Faith and song;
Forget the vows that bind me to her world,
Forget my sorrow for her, but Pere Sylvestre
Sweet Memory! Forget my own Ireland!—while visions
From once and anxious thought—while visions
And "Tootie Dollings" possess the soul;
Then is indeed dreams or magic green,
In some fair shine where sin hath no control.
And you have read our Erin's wondrous lore,
Gold from the mines of Moore's poetic mind,
Disclosed a Gem I well love to expiate
Where treasure rust and "Shell Gate" days
And "Will remind me of the "Shell Gate" days
When I shall be
Yet dear one!
I will be "Gone from grief's rough ways
And inevitable thy name is wrote as yet not

The Dream of Pere Sylvestre.

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY IN FOUR CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER III.

One day followed another, and the trial drew on apace.

Daily Pere Sylvestre visited Lisbette in prison, and with some difficulty he obtained permission to be with her and by her at the time of her trial.

When he was not with Lisbette, he might be seen kneeling before the altar in one of the churches of the town, praying earnestly that help might be sent his child in her pain and; plunging in the very presence of Christ Himself, for the poor, stricken, humbled head of his child.

The people used to steal in softly to look at the venerable figure; the priests of Marvaine argued upon him that he was overtaking his already feeble strength, representing to him that his years and infirmities called for some relaxation and repose, and that he was doing harm to Mass by that ever pitiless voice of the prosecutor saying his sentence—"Death!"

TWENTY-SIXTH YEAR OF PUBLICATION

THE MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1885.

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the chief agent in the formation of public opinion. It is the great educator of modern times, because it governs the world. It can raise religious journalism to not only a useful and glorious vocation, but, only it will, indispensable to the welfare of society, but a sort of apostolate. What is more, it can be made, in the hands of the Church, a means of the sanctification and relief of the people, whatever it may be—saves all, the Divine truth."—Brownson, Review, July, 1874.

May God bless and direct through the intervention of St. Francis de Sales, under whose patronage they will be placed, the writers of Catholic journals who, during the month of March, will devote their pens to the Holy Apostolic See, and adhere to its doctrines and precepts in the direction and fidelity.—Pius IX.

Collection for the Diocesan Seminary on next Sunday.

A Circular Letter from His Grace Archbishop Riordan was read in all the churches throughout this Diocese on last Sunday, ordering a collection to be taken up on next Sunday for the support of St. Thomas' Seminary for the education of priests. This seminary is located at Mission San José, and is one of the most important institutions which calls for the charitable contributions of Catholics, hence we hope that dollars will take the place of dimes on the collection plates next Sunday.

The Church is Apostolical, and every member is—in a certain sense—an Apostle, for in the Church there is a communion in all things by all its members. Hence St. Peter says to the first Christians: "You are a chosen generation, a kingly priesthood, a purchased people—that you may declare His virtues who hath called you out of darkness into His marvellous light." And as we have inherited the light of God-given faith from those who preceded us, so we are collectively and individually bound to transmit that same holy faith in all its integrity and entirety to those who are to succeed us, and endeavor to diffuse its light more and more among our brethren.

All are not called to the exercise of the ministry, but all are obliged to co-operate with the Priests, to sustain them whilst attaining the education and the discipline necessary for the reception of the sacraments of Holy Orders, and the subsequent ministration of the duties of the sacred state to which they are called. The Priest is the visible representative of Christ. It is His doctrine that he teaches; it is by His Divine authority that he speaks. The Priest continues the celebration of the same sacrifice which the Son of God offered on Calvary for man's redemption; he dispens's God's pardon and is the visible successor of God's infinite and innumerable graces through the soul-saving sacraments of our holy faith. Take from the earth the Catholic priesthood—the salt which preserves it from corruption—and how deplorable would its condition become!

It must be apparent, therefore, to all Catholics, that the perpetuation of the priesthood is the most imperative obligation of the Church in general and of each Diocese in particular, and how deplorable would its condition become!

It must be apparent, therefore, to all Catholics, that the perpetuation of the priesthood is the most imperative obligation of the Church in general and of each Diocese in particular, and how deplorable would its condition become!

Will England's Difficulty Become Ireland's Opportunity?

The Irish people at home have elected peaceable Parliamentary agitation as the safest, surest and shortest road to freedom from English miasule. They have placed Parnell at the head of the Irish National organization which they sustain to the best of their ability. And he—as spokesman of the Irish people—has expressed to the Irishmen in America his fonds so as to help elect representatives from Ireland to the British Parliament who will act as a unit with Parnell, and who will voice the sentiments of that portion of the Irish people whose things represents the strong enough clamor made in the House of Commons. This contribution is called The Irish Parliamentary Fund, and the Monitor having opened a subscription list in its columns, we have to read therein the names of every man or woman on the Pacific coast who sympathizes with Ireland in her present struggle. Talk is cheap, and it is well enough in its way, but it takes money to carry on the fight for freedom—whether on a constitutional or a belligerent basis, and a dollar donated to Ireland now will have far more practical effect than any other aid that could be offered.

The present Egyptian difficulty in which England has become involved has already created a breach in the ranks of the English people and culminated in the English Parliament by the introduction of a vote of censure which came very near turning out Gladstone's administration. It requires only another repulse of the British forces in Egypt to cause a general election throughout Great Britain, under a new ministry—and then will come Ireland's opportunity—if Ireland is only prepared for the political contest.

A Montana contributor makes a patriotic plea for Parnell and the Parliamentary Fund on the first page of this issue, which should be read and acted on practically by every man in America in whose veins flows Irish blood. As the writer ably says Unity, a single aim of purpose, full confidence in a tried leader, and a liberal support to representatives—is the only course by which success can crown the cause of Irish agitation. Ten men pulling in one direction can effect more by concentration of physical force than a hundred men pulling in different directions. The rule of physical force is just as potent in moral force, and hence we hope Parnell's plea for the Parliamentary Fund will be answered in that splendid spirit of generous patriotism which has hitherto characterized the contributions to the Land and Fatherland by the Celtic race on this coast.

The Birthday of Robert Emmet.

The 4th of March is a memorable day in the annals of Irish history, it being the birthday of the immortal and imperishable Irish patriot Robert Emmet, whose memory is cherished by legions of the Irish race in every land.

Robert Emmet was born in Dublin, where his father was an eminent physician, and his mother was a Quaker lady. When he had finished his college course he became head and soul in the spirit of patriotism which inspired the exile of the Irish people in the memorable era of 1798, and he entered heart and soul into the effort then made to liberate Ireland from the thraldom of England.

The exalted character of Emmet is well portrayed by persons of all political complexions who have written upon the turbulent times in which he lived. The poet Moore in his "Life and Death of Lord Edward Fitzgerald," speaks of his friend and fellow student in the following terms:

"Were I to number, indeed, the men among all I have ever known, who appeared to me to combine in the greatest degree personal worth with intellectual power, I should, among the highest of the few, place Robert Emmet. Vividly free from the follies and frailties of youth, though how capable to lead into them, he showed in every other respect—the purest and most amiable of youths, and with a mind and character which, seemed as if, in the same time they enabled that at all divided his thoughts with the interests of Irish freedom, which, in him, was as hereditary as well as national feeling—himself under the most martyr like sacrifices for the cause. Simple in all his habits, and with a sense of lofty and disinterested honor, which no temptation could seduce, no threat shake, he was, at an early age, the soul of a party, which, from the rank they held in talent, as well as from the high and spotless character of most of their leaders, could not but be formidable to the government of Ireland."

Moore's description of Emmet is well worth reading in full, and we have space to read therein the names of every man or woman on the Pacific coast who sympathizes with Ireland in her present struggle. Talk is cheap, and it is well enough in its way, but it takes money to carry on the fight for freedom—whether on a constitutional or a belligerent basis, and a dollar donated to Ireland now will have far more practical effect than any other aid that could be offered.

We recent to learn that the "Irish Fireside" has ceased publication. The Irish Fireside, of which the celebrated philosopher Ulsaghs was for so many years the editor, has ceased to exist with the present year.

The New York Tribune got off a pretty good pun the other day when it said that "between El Mahdi in the Soudan, and El Dahdi in Ireland, they are just now giving poor John Bull plenty to do."

A petition, golden up at the Dayton, O., Soldier's House, and with two thousand signatures, was forwarded recently, to President Cleveland, respectfully urging the name of General Rosecrans for Secretary of War.

—"To the President of the Irish League, from a friend of Ireland and liberty," was the inscription on an infernal machine received by Patrick Egan while at the Irish National ball at Lincoln, Neb., on the 17th of last month.

The Geological Society of London has this year assigned its "Bigsby" medal to Catholic priest, Abbe Renard, of Brussels. The medal, according to the will of its founder, is to be given, irrespective of nationality, to any consist who has distinguished himself by geological research and is not more than forty-five years of age. Abbe Renard's claim to eminence is in his researches in fossil microscopy.

—According to Sadlier's Directory, the Catholic Church in the United States has now one cardinal, eleven archbishops, sixty-three bishops, one prefect-apostolic, six mitred abbots, 7441 priests, 1597 candidates for the priesthood, 6626 churches, 907 chapels, 1886 stations, thirty-five theological seminaries, eighty three colleges, 501 academies (that is to say high schools for girls), 2264 parochial schools with 460,511 pupils, 272 asylums of various sorts, and 154 hospitals.

A very instructive and consoling article on the Holy Rosary, from the gifted pen of a "Son of St. Dominic," will be found on the second page this week. We have several other articles for the same beneficial and important object, from the same various Dominican Fathers, which will appear during Lent on the third page of each issue, and which we commend to the perusal of all those pious people who appreciate the honor of being favored by heaven so far as to be the worthy clients of the Mother of God.

The beautiful Sonnet which we publish on the second page from the pen of Miss Eleanor C. Donnelly, was suggested by the remark of an old Irish P. P., on the subject of Father Cox's audacious attempt to reform the Doctrine of the Church; although Sir Bernie Founder compared the Doctrines of Christ by His Apostles and their successors, to the Light of the world! Said means a totally distinct constituent of the Church. Unfortunately we all can lament sadly, for the light exists no longer in Rome. "For there can be no sunshine, but most dim or shine.

The views on the Chinese Question entertained by Bishop Haymonds which will be found on the first page, are entitled to great weight in consequence of his long residence in China and the extraordinary facilities he possesses for forming a correct view of the Chinese character. The conclusion Bishop Raymonds has arrived at just wants the adjustment, still strike every country takes her place among the nations of the earth, free, and free till then, let my epitaph be written."

The poet Moore, who knew Emmet intimately, being his college mate and personal friend for many years, spoke almost prophetic words when he penned these patriotic lines regarding the respect made by Emmet that his tomb should remain unmarked until his country took her place among the nations of the earth.

"Let my epitaph be written
Where cold and unhonored his relics are laid:
Sad, silent, and dark, be the tears that we shed,
As the night dew that falls on the grave we lay
Shall brighten with verdure the grave where he sleeps
And the tear that we shed though in secret it will flow
Shall long live in memory green in her soul.

Oregon's New Archbishop.

A Georgia paper—the Savannah Times—alluding to the nomination of Bishop Gross as the future Archbishop of Oregon, gives the following interesting facts connected with his ecclesiastical career:

"Bishop Gross was superior of the Redemptorist house in Boston till 1876 when he was consecrated Bishop of Savannah in Baltimore on the 27th of April, Archbishop Bailey performing the consecration ceremonies. He came to Savannah at once and began to inaugurate that system of work for which he has since become noted. In the same year, the 19th of November, 1874, the corner-stone of the Cathedral was laid, and that edifice, one of the handsomest in the South, was pushed into rapid completion. St. Patrick's Church here is also a monument to his thrift, as is also St. Joseph's Infirmary, erected in the Spring of 1876. The Benedictine Fathers came here through his influence, and the good accomplished by them is due in a manner to this good man. St. Mary's Orphan Home, beyond Anderson street, the Sacred Heart Church, which the Clare Collectives are now building on Shell road, Clare, were all begun at his instance, and this is not alone all that he has done. At Macon, Pio Nono, College, one of the best institutions of learning in the South, is an instance of his indefatigable energy. Atlanta shows the imprint of his work. While the Catholics are glad of the deserved promotion of their Bishop, they feel and at parting from one, by his splendid talents, indomitable energy and perseverance, has accomplished much in the advancement of the Church in Georgia, and by his charity and kindness of manner endeared himself to all Catholics and Protestants alike."

ST. CLARE OF MONTE FALCO.

Graphic Description of a Visit to the Shrine of St. Clare.—The Protector of the Poor at Virgin Tomb. Her Body Preserved during six Hundred Years.—A Sketch of St. Clare's Life.—The Instruments of the Passion found in her Hearse.—Her Canonization and the Homage paid to her by the Church.

[FROM OUR REGULAR ROME CORRESPONDENT.]

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir:—It was a fine clear morning that on which I left Assisi for Foligno. The mountains and valleys were still in shadow, and had not long risen above the Appenines. We proceeded to our journey—as is usual with Italian express trains—about the rate of ten miles per hour. However, I was on a holiday trip, and my heart was light as I left much like a schoolboy returning home for the first time from college, having been six months in "the blues"; consequently I unceremoniously forgave all the short-comings of the train and its officials who were laboring so hard to bring me to my destination. Long had I been pondering many

A VISIT TO MONTE FALCO,

and now at last my desire is to be gratified. After I had waited patiently about an hour the train pulled up at Foligno. It had run clear through from Assisi, a distance of some twelve miles, but time! Oh! the poor fellows and were looking out with the most disappointed features for an Englishman or two to whom they might offer a fee. Well, I immediately stepped down from the train public opinion and I was soon in a carriage. In a few minutes I was surrounded by a dozen specimens of the cabby tribe. They were fearful to behold, and I think if any of them ever strayed over to Ireland they would run great dances of being arrested for vagrancy. Those figures impressed me with a strange feeling of dread, and I was condemned by a choice jury for some horrible sarcasm, which, if pronounced in Italian, would be simply castle offensive. For they really looked very like the nurdy characters that used to be pictured in the Illustrated Dublin Journal by Joe Darcinale. Odious and disagreeable as were the cabmen, I was compelled to patronize them, for I was in a hurry. Accordingly I selected one of the most villanous looking of the lot, and he, with a wild whoop, dashed off at a gallop, and I, with a very nervous feeling, followed. Fathers Leonard Hegan and Francis Cummins, to whom I had letters, were expected from the heart and placed my luggage in charge of the cabman, and I was soon in the midst of the Franciscan Fathers. These fathers treated me with the most kind and courteous attention, and I felt at home in a few minutes. Fathers Hegan and Cummins are well known in Rome, and I need not speak of their merits. Suffice it to say that I was treated by them as a brother, and I shall ever remember with pleasure the few days I spent in their company. I was so early, that I had time to visit the Church of St. Francis, and the Church of St. Clare, in the interest of the cabby tribe. They were fearful to behold, and I think if any of them ever strayed over to Ireland they would run great dances of being arrested for vagrancy. They would take me anywhere, cost, no cost, so long as I was able to keep pace with the advance. Churches and schoolhouses have sprung up all over the city, while the force of priests have correspondingly increased to minister to the wants of the rapidly growing denomination. Of the 300,000 Catholics in the archdiocese, about 50,000 are located outside of Philadelphia, leaving 250,000 dwellers in the city.

—A "non-Catholic Parent" asks the Monitor if his daughter would be compelled to attend Catholic worship in case he sent her to a school under charge of one of the female Religious Orders of the Catholic Church? And the Monitor is very happy to say that compulsion is not allowed as a factor in the Catholic Church. Any young girl of non-Catholic parents can attend a Catholic boarding school and remain a Seventh day Adventist, a Methodist or a Muggletonian, and neither coaxing or cajoling or threats will avail to make her change her creed. So particular is the Church on this point that a Letter of Instruction from the Sacred Propaganda to the Bishops of Ireland, some seventeen years ago, at the Bishops of North America, in which this peremptory paragraph occurred: "We forbid you to Catholic parents attending Catholic schools to be obliged—against at Mass—against—or—to—own—discretion."

—The sight rule of the Pope of Rome on this matter, and our "separated brethren," who have control of sectarian educational institutions, might take a leaf from the chief pastor in the tendom in this matter, with great advantage to their business spirit of freedom of conscience.

—The Englishman who is not an egotist can scarcely be one of the Grand Jury Hall, Even Mgr. Capel, with all his learning and talents, could not talk for ten minutes without mentioning the Mass! Even in New York without casting reflections upon the standard of Catholic education in this country, betraying the effort to a smattering to progress in the pathway of knowledge even against great odds, and then limiting manifesting the Prelacy of America by sneering at the idea, a Catholic University for such a set of uncultured savages as an Catholics are in this country. Hard! Mgr. Capel will scarcely be taken across the Atlantic, he will find far more food for his sarcasm in his own dear England than he will find in America, and he will do far more in keeping with his position in this land to leave the management of the educational institutions of the Church to the American Bishops, who have hitherto succeeded remarkably well in spreading faith and knowledge among people who were in a state almost even of such an egotistical English sarcastic as one who volunteers his advice without waiting to be asked for it.

—His Holiness has been pleased through the medium of the Secretaire of State, to name Mgr. Aristides Rosadini, Chargé d'Affaires, ad interim, of the Holy See to the Belgian Government. The prelate, resident in Brussels—as the regent of 1866, is highly esteemed by the authorities of Belgium, where he will remain till the definitive selection of a Nuncio. Appointed to Brussels Mgr. Rotelli will, for the present, retain his position as Delegate Apostolic at Constantinople, though it is expected he will eventually replace Mgr. de Rende in the Nunciature of Paris. Amongst the candidates for the office of the archiducse have also been mentioned Mgr. Ceccarelli, Nuncio at Madrid, and Mgr. Ferrata, Nuncio at Vienna; the late Nuncio of Lisbon, Mgr Masella; the Nuncio at Paris; the Archbishop of Capua, and the Archbishop of Bologna and of Catania, both of the Order of St. Benedict. The reports must be taken cum grano, all that unofficially known being the creation of a Cardinal in the next Consistory of two Italian Archbishops. Another rumor mentions as future Nuncio to Turin the name of Monsignor Jacobini, the Neapolitan patrician. The Holy Father has further been pleased to name Commitor of the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda Fide, the Very Rev. Joseph Pennetti, Rector of the Seminary of the Holy Apostles Peter and Paul for Foreign Missions, and finally to create Chevalier of the Order of St. Gregory the Great, Alessandro Manzoni, of Turin, a well known Catholic journalist connected with the editorial staff of the Gazzetta di Turino, and for over twenty years a strenuous defender of the rights of the Church.

A CHURCH CLOSED.

How Bishop Heerdtsher Interdicted a Rebellious Congregation.

FAT RIVER, Mass., Feb. 16.—To-day the following letter was read from the pulpits of the churches of the Bishop of Providence to the flight of Bishop Heerdtsher, forbidding the use of the church in this city, and ordering that the Blessed Sacrament be removed:

A SAD CONDITION OF AFFAIRS.

Sins we have in the year 1876 at Monte Falco (Italy). Where the body of St. Clare is preserved to be endeared with a perfect use of reason, and she entered a pious conversation with the bones that lie of saints—Bishop Bellomo and nobody. Bishop Bellomo was dressed in the most gorgeous robes, and he was followed by the full clergy of the Diocese, and by a large number of people from the Diocese, and by a large number of people from the Diocese, and by a large number of people from

THE POOR MAN'S WIFE.

Only ten dollars—no more, sir,—
The wages I weekly touch,
For I labor sturdily and slow, sir,
It isn't a deal too much!
Your money goes in the city
And vanishes left and right,
And I see not a single penny
As earnest of my sight.

Sal's husband gives her her money,
She's better than gold to me!

We live in a reeking court, sir,
With rumsery, drink and woe,
But Kitty has never a thought, sir,
That isn't as white as snow—
She hasn't a thought or a feeling
An angel would blush to meet;
I love to think of her kneeling
And praying for me to sweet.

Sal's husband gives her money,
She's better than gold to me!

I must be honest and simple,
I must be manly and true,
Or how could I attach her dimple,
Or gaze in her truth eyes blue!
I feel not anger, but pity,
When workmates go to the bar;
I say: "They're never a Kitty
They'd all keep company, I'd say!"
Sal's husband gives her money,
She's better than gold to me!

Ah, the day she stood at the altar,
Modest and white and still,
And truth from her lips did falter
The beautiful word: "I will!"
Our home has been bright as I pretty
As ever a poor man's may,
And my soft, little dove, my Kitty,
Shall smile in my heart for aye.
Sal's husband gives her money,
She's better than gold to me!

Gossip.

A common weakness of the human mind is the love of gossip; that

"Small, small, impressible small talk,
That ooze its powerful dew-ground in Typhoon."

Those who indulge in it are the idle, the bitter and discontented, who find no comfort or peace in life so great as seeking out the shortcomings of others. It is the sure evidence, if not of a naturally mean and vicious soul, at least of a narrow and untrusted mental vision. Some people seem not to be aware that every word that passes their lips is tinged with the color of their own minds, and that such a way of talking story discloses the individual character. It is a pitable fact that many a one has gone through life a victim to the intangible accusation that is expressed by the silent shrug and the carefully-worded innuendo, and other where the life of the accused has been spotless when compared to those of the slanderers. Have the higher truths them no place when in cordially true, that we let the grand and beautiful things pass by unheeded, while we go on grubbing in the dirt for the base metals! Talk of places and principles, not persons, except where the latter are used to illustrate some general truth, and that one no be judged impersonally—the small and insignificant are never safe subjects for analysis—remembering always that truth, to the finite mind, is not absolute, but relative, and that no two see it from the same standpoint.—Washington Gazette.

How Men Would Manage.

Says a bright woman: "Could anything be a better illustration of the way women do their work as compared with the way men do them, than to look over a village of say a thousand families on Monday morning. In a thousand little kitchens a thousand women would be seen thrusting wood into a thousand little cook stoves, heating a thousand little wash boilers, bending their backs over a thousand little wash boards, and hanging their clothes on a thousand clothes lines. If, by some singular social revolution, the men of such a village were to undertake to do the same work, their first step would be to get up a steam company, invest capital in building and machinery, so organize the work that about half a dozen women could attend to it, and the rest of the women would be free to do their own business on Monday, just the same as any other day."

Girls Beware.

Girls be careful of your associations! The newspapers are filled with painful instances of girls ruined and ruined, through folly in forming the acquaintance of young men, of whom they have nothing, and whose intentions in seeking their society are evil. There are many traps set to catch the feet of unwary school girls who think it is romantic to flirt with young men whom they meet on the street, or the cars or elsewhere. Girls, do not hold yourselves so cheaply. Recognize no one, to whom you are not introduced by someone whom you know respects you, and would guard your welfare. Do not have acquaintances whom you would not confide to your mother. You may consider it a sheer way to live, and you may think there is lots of fun in the adventures with your schoolmates boat of, but depend upon it the slow life is the true one, and that any girl who gives herself ever so slightly to base associates, is in danger of indescribable heartaches and deceptions and pants from which there is no escape.

Prunes in California.

The prune industry is attracting much attention from the orchardists in Southern California, and the fruit grown is in every inferior to the best imported. Perhaps the largest prune orchard in the world is situated near the town of Saranac, Cal, and contains 16,000 trees. It was recently sold for $72,000. It is situated on a gentle slope from the foot of the mountain to Los Gatos road and can be taken in at a glance. Near by it is the famous Rice orchard, containing fruit and nut trees of almost every known variety; also the O Banion & Kent orchard of eighty acres, for which $110,000 has been offered and refused. Canned prunes are among the new delicacies in the market, and there is no other fruit that stands them in temptingness. They are destined to be held in great favor, and will command a good price.

Around the House.

Never put a hot iron directly on silk—it takes the life out of it.

Pickles or vinegar will not keep in a jar that has ever had any kind of grease in it.

Cream cotse cushions on sofas soon displeasing, lemon juice is best on others, and cold water suits others still best.

Paint spots may be removed from any kind of clothing by saturating with equal parts of turpentine and spirits of ammonia.

Salt will curdle sour milk, hence in preparing with porridge, gravies, etc., the salt should not be added until the dish is prepared.

Hartshorn applied to the sting of poisonous insects will allay the pain and stop the swelling, or apply oil of sassafras, which is better. Raw eggs should be treated in this way.

Don't waste your time scouring your bread pans; bread never bakes as well in a bright tin. Indeed, the best bread pans, if one can afford to have them, are those made of one of Russian sheet iron.

When coffee beans are pleased upon hot coals or upon a hot plate the flavor arises is one of the most effective and at the same time agreeable disinfectants. If no beans is obtainable even the spreading of ground coffee on the object to be disinfected is more satisfactory.

Family Fun.

MOSTLY LIES.

Said Jones: "I hardly ever ride.
For crowded cars I can't abide.
And carriages I do despise,
I am so fond of exercise."

"I bring my lunch," said Smith slate,
"For hotel restaurants I hate;
Besides, I'd spoil my appetite
For dinner when I'm home at night."

Said Brown: "I'm tough; I never wear
An overcoat. I do declare
I do not feel the cold like those Half-frozen chaps wrapped in furs with clothes."

"I never touch cheese," Green spake,
"They're made of stuff not fit to make
For healthfulness or comfort food;
Give me my fragrant limburger."

And so we all apologize
Just more or less—some a lot,
Because we date not say we prize
We are afraid to have expose.

"Why, Maggie, it means what the teacher, "is it possible you don't know what grace is! Doesn't your father say something before you begin to eat?"

"Oh!" responded the girl, with a glow of intelligence; "yes, mum, he does; he always says: 'Don't make hogs of yourselves; that's all the butter there is in the house!'"

A Regular Man.

Some time ago in New Hampshire an old parsonage of 50 winters was gathered to his fathers, and a couple of temperance siders from a Massachusetts city happened to hear of the circumstance, and thinking it a good opportunity to put out feelers for a vacancy, attempts waited upon his surviving relative, a hardened old farmer, who was found in his shirt-sleeves leaning over a five-rail fence, thoughtfully chewing a wheat-straw.

"We edified to ask you some questions about your grandfather. He must have been a remarkable man."

"Yaas—jess so, he was a very regular man."

"Ah, very temperate in his habits, I suppose."

"Yaas, he gen'ly got up 'bout 5 in summer 6 in winter, and allers took a glass of Jamaiky rum first thing 'fore doin' his chores.

"What! did he use stimulants?"

"Hey?"

"Did he addicted to alcoholic beverages?"

"No, he wasn't an addicted man, but allers took a little more Jamaiky and smoked a pipe just after breakfast—an' a—

"Yes, so gran'sir often said, and his lawsee! chock was a horn of rum as mulass as, tho' he gen'ly took a little clear sparrer after it jes fo' he sot down to his dinner."

"What, and did not all this dram-drinking effect his health?"

"Great heavens! Why I thought you said your grandfather was a very regular man."

"Reg'lar! S'he was as reg'lar as a clock, and when he'd had a horn or two after supper, and was settin' afore the hire over a quart mug of cold Jamaiky, smoking his pipe, my gran'father—

"Hang your grandfather! The old man must have been preserved in spirits of tobacco or he would never have lived so long"—and the elders withdrew, not satisfied that they had either a remarkable dissertation or a frightful example to suit their purpose.

A Sensitive Market.

"So you think wheat will go up?"

"I have no doubt of it."

"Is there any reason for it?"

"Reason! A thousand reasons. My wife was a neighbor of Tom Alleyman's lady fall out of bed last night; John Trueland's brand girl upset over a chair after breakfast this morning, and, look here, I've got a sliver of it in my fingers!"

"Hot box on earth."

"Ah; you people who do not operate on change cannot understand how every thing affects the market."

"But how do you know wheat will go up."

"Well, it will either go up or down."

EXCITEMENT UNABATED.

That Remarkable Experience of a Rochester Physician Fully Authenticated.

Cleveland, O., Herald.

Yesterday and the day before we copied quite our columns from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, a remarkable statement, made by J. H. Hanson, M. D., a gentleman who is well known in this city. In that article Dr. Hanson recounts a wonderful experience which befell him, and the next day we published from the same paper a second article, giving an account of the "Excitement it has occasioned" caused by Dr. Hanson's statement. It is doubtful if any two articles were ever published which caused greater commotion both among professional people and others.

Since his publication of those two articles, having been engaged with intense energy, we sent a commissioner to Dr. Hanson and also one to H. H. Warner & Co., asking if the publication of the statements published, and the reliability of the statements published. In answer thereto we have received the following letters, which will interest to the entire subject and verify every statement laboriously made.—

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: Your favor of yesterday, published statement, every my signature, to which you refer, is true in every respect, and I owe my life and present health wholly to the power of Warner's Safe Cure, which snatched me from the very brink of the grave. It is not surprising that people should question the statement I made, for my recovery was so great a marvel to myself as to my physicians and friends.

J. H. HANSON, M. D.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 21.

SIRS: Acknowledging your favor duly received, we would say: The best proof we can give you that the statements made by Dr. Hanson are entirely true, and could only have been published unless strictly so, is the following testimonial from the Health Office of Rochester, and a card published by Hanson himself, which you are at liberty to use if you wish.

H. H. WARNER & CO.

To Whom it may Concern.

In the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle of December 31st, there appeared a statement in the form of a card from Dr. J. H. Hanson, of this city, recounting his remarkable recovery from Bright's disease of the kidneys, after several years of suffering, as had given him up, by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. The statement was so far together accounted with Dr. Hanson, we believe to be entirely true, and that the statement not literally true. We are also acquainted with my reputation well acquainted with H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of that medicine, whose commercial and personal standing in this community are of the highest character, and we believe that they would not publish any statement which they were not literally and strictly true in every particular.

To the Editor of the Loving Church, Chicago, Ill.

There was published in the Rochester papers and Chronicle of the 31st of December, a statement made by J. H. Hanson, M. D., announcing he had been cured of Bright's disease of the kidneys, almost in the last stage, by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. I was referred to in that statement, as having recommended and urged the adoption of many delusions. He was paying off the national debt, going into partnership with Baron Rothschild, and forming a lodge of female Freemasons. One day an epileptic patient, intoxicated at being perpetually asked to buy imaginary shares, gave him a tremendous blow on the bridge of the nose. From that time he improved rapidly, and acknowledged that the blow had a sobering effect, and had quite knocked the nonsense out of his head. There is no doubt that this was the secret of that cruel old remedy for madness, the circulating swing, favorably recommended by physicians of the last century. This horrible swing, was a small box hung upon a pivot, and worked by a small lever. The "infernal machine" of the maniac's pacing a paroxysm, was strapped in a sitting or recumbent posture. The pivot was placed under the chair, and the velocity of a hundred revolutions a minute, and the horrible effect was supposed to be heightened by reversing the motion every six or eight minutes, and by stopping it occasionally with a sudden jerk. The results of this swing (which occasionally brought on convulsions of the brain) were profound and procracted sleep, intense prostration, mental exhaustion, and a non-substantial horror of any machine to the same remedy which left a mental impression that acted as a permanent restraint. That the results were often beneficial we have indisputable evidence. A man who awakes out of sleep is conscious of a lapse of time, and can generally even guess its duration; but the man struck on the brain is often unconscious of any lapse. A man was struck in the street, and was afterwards delirious. He was unconscious after the first blow for fourteen days. He was then delirious and maniacal for ten weeks. When he became more tranquil they brought him to the asylum in a strait-waistcoat. He soon became quiet, but when he became conscious he had clean forgotten the fourteen days' insane and the ten weeks' delirious and maniac. At the battle of the Nile an Egyptian was struck on the head by a shot, and became unconscious. He was taken home with the wounded, and remained in Greenwich Hospital fifteen months deprived of sense and speech. At the end of that period an operation was performed, and the brain relieved from the pressure he instantly rose from his bed, and continued the orders to the sailors which had been so abruptly interrupted fifteen months before. Dr. Abercrombie gives an analogous case. A lady was struck with apoplexy while sitting at the whist table. It was Thursday evening when she fell, and she lay in a stupor all Friday and Saturday. On Sunday she suddenly recovered her consciousness, and her first words were, "What are trumps?" The clock work had stopped at that point and on the pendulum resumed commenced to swing.

Curiosities of Lunacy.

There are cases where the blows on the head have been followed by the brain, and produced extraordinary changes for the better. A gentleman of my acquaintance, at the age of twenty-six, he fell down a stone staircase, and for three days and nights he was entranced. From that moment he became a quiet Christian Methodist mentioned a case of three brothers who were all nearly idiots. One of them was injured on the head, and from that moment he became sane, and was a successful barrister. Wollenstein, too, has recorded a case where a man fell and broke a window and awoke with enlarged capacity. Dr. Hanson's case is not unique in the series of many delusions. He was paying off the national debt, going into partnership with Baron Rothschild, and forming a lodge of female Freemasons. One day an epileptic patient, intoxicated at being perpetually asked to buy imaginary shares, gave him a tremendous blow on the bridge of the nose. From that time he improved rapidly, and acknowledged that the blow had a sobering effect, and had quite knocked the nonsense out of his head. GLADSTONE'S ARRAIGNMENT.

A Sensation in the House of Commons. The Premier's Pirouette. Why O'Brien was Suspended.

LONDON, Feb. 24.—Gladstone, in the Commons this evening, moved to postpone all notice of motions until after the order of the day, resuming the debate on Northcote's motion of censure upon the Premier for his Egyptian policy was adjourned. In response to an inquiry put by Elliot Ashmead Bartlett (Conservative), Gladstone explained that he had never mentioned the abandoning of the Soudan by her Majesty's forces after the capture of Khartoum. He had merely said that the evacuation of the Soudan by Egypt had formed the original policy of her Majesty's Government. That policy remained unaltered, but recent events had intervened to prevent its execution.

Rosebery (Home Rule) opposed the Premier's motion and was seconded by his opposition by several Parnellites.

The opposition became so noisy that the Speaker was forced to adjourn the House, announcing that it would be his duty to inform the house that he thought the subject had been adequately discussed. At this the Parnellites nearly all joined in prolonged howls and derisive cheers. William O'Brien, editor of United Ireland and a Home Ruler, shouted out: "We will remember this in Ireland." This remark was greeted with cries of "Oh," "Oh," "Name him" "Name him." The Speaker thereupon named O'Brien. Gladstone at once moved that the named member be suspended. O'Brien at once jumped up and said: "That is the result of my attempt to bring the question which had so long agitated the Irish people before the House and the Prime Minister had submitted, Thomas Sexton (Home Ruler) rose on a point of order. He was sharply overruled by the Speaker.

A division was then called upon Gladstone's motion to suspend O'Brien. It resulted in a vote of 214 for the motion and but twenty against it. The speaker, when the vote had been announced, ordered O'Brien to withdraw from the House. O'Brien arose, straight-end himself up to his full height, and exclaiming with much precision and sarcasm, "Certainly sir; I will withdraw from this place of honor," he left the house amid a Parnellite cheer.

The Parnellites objected to the resumption of the debate on the motion of censure because it would prevent discussion on the motion made by Redmond relating to the conduct of an Irish constable named Murphy.

The Gladstone-O'Brien episode was quite sensational while it lasted and Gladstone's conduct was fine. When the House had cooled down to business the debate was prolonged and voted for by 297 yeas and 40 nays. Parnell at present does notation with the tally and as a rule votes in unison with the Tories. The result of the debate is considered to be that the delay would only result in a further deposition of the value of the property. As it is, the country will consider itself lucky if it obtains an equal protection for equal to one years rental of the farms. The company has over 600 tenants, who pay $40,000 per year in rents. It has offered the tenants the first opportunity of purchasing their holdings on easy terms.

Bishop Donnelly and the Poor.

—On the 8th inst, throughout county Monaghan, Ire, by express orders of Bishop Donnelly of Clogher, a collection was taken up in the churches for the benefit of the girls who were thrown out of work by the stopping of the mill at Castleblaney, in which they refused to work in holidays of obedience, whenever the owner arbitrarily closed his works. Dr. Donnelly speaks of these girls as "unhappy in one sense."

DEFENDING PARNELL'S SILENCE.

A Southern Judge from an Irish Point on English Impertinence.

The Rev. Arthur Ryan, of Tipperary, writes a letter to the Boston Pilot in which he defends Mr. Parnell's silence upon the dynamite question. Father Ryan thinks it would be unbecoming on the part of the Irish leader to answer the loathing taunts of the English Press by humbly asserting his innocence, but he says that he was not a thief or murderer. But even if he did, such reputation would be unknown in valley. Mr. Parnell's denunciation would, Father Ryan thinks, have no more effect on stopping the dynamiters than simultaneous sermons from every bishop and Cardinal Manning in England would have in stopping pickpockets or with broken Father Ryan continues: "It is say also that Mr. Parnell's denunciation of dynamite outrages would cause him and his party of what you acknowledge to be a serious and emotional character. Would it? Would the savage disability that believe Mr. Parnell and the bishops, priests and people whom with him, are ready to shake off the yoke of England? Would the Irish people cease to be Fenians? Would men like Father Angus or journals like the Nenagh Guardian state one which of their venomous hatred of the Irish race, or withdraw one of their slanderous accusations every stray video from Donegal to Cork or cry out Dynamite and invoke vengeance on the atrocious? Not they. How could they? Would they not be perfectly logical in saying that men who would not scruple dynamite would scarcely scruple the lie that would assist it? And what one of us could frame a denunciation that would not be as one twisted by those jaws of malice into silence or at least into a qualified one? I expect, for instance, that the line of Dublin by which read last year in the line of Dublin to Dublin Castle, and which I quote the Dublin Freeman's Journal, I expect this very moment whether I believe that I can with honor at an evening that has written these words in fire on my heart, and that indeed I do not little and time the hands that held the Phoenix daggers in Dublin, or the dynamite and outrage that are now hate—it is Ireland and the Irish, and the sooner you and all honest Englishmen see this the better.

LABOR RIOT IN LONDON.

Further Perplexities Confronting the Tranquil Britisers.

A serious riot occurred in London, Monday week, in the vicinity of Parliament street. A process composed of 1,000 stalwart men, with men accompanied by bands of music, and carrying banners inscribed with legends denouncing the government and demanding work, marched to the building occupied by the local government board in Whitehall. A deputation formed its way into the office of the board and demanded the immediate relief be afforded them by the establishment of public relief works. The officials present gave them a cold reception, offering some no encouragement and the deputation returned to the mass of men with a cheering report. The process then marched to the official residence of Chamberlain, where a halt was ordered, the mass groaned and hissed for the Premier and the cabinet Liberal officers, and denounced them for their negligence of the workingman and their cruelty. The subject was in question this time, and the sudden assembling of the mob surprised the mounted guard stationed in Whitehall, and they thought the mob intended to make a rush for the Premier's residence. The mounted men were hastily reinforced and the mob was hastily dispersed by a rush of the mounted men. It had made an attempt to storm the admiralty and home office. Both buildings were heavily guarded with all sorts of missiles. The affair cause intense excitement through the city.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM—

IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Armagh.—In accordance with their late custom, the men of Armagh celebrated the 17th. At the recent establishment of a branch in the Gaelic League, the participants were present were Rev. H. McGuire, chairman, Rev. P. McGrean, Rev. H. McNeve and Rev. P. McIntyre, secretary. Messrs. MacMahon and J. McAnulty also took part in the proceedings. Crossmaglen has also stepped to the front. The branch recently formed there now numbers over 200 steady members; and at its last meeting, under the presidency of Mr. P. Lynch, P.L.G., the secretary, Mr. Conlon, was in a position to announce the receipt of £5, which £20 had been sent on to the Dublin Central Executive. This speaks well for the spirit of the people of Crossmaglen.

Clare.—The village of Crusheen was thrown into a state of excitement, on Saturday last, by the report that an attempt had been made to rob the respected house of Mr. Patrick Fitzgerald. Mr. Fitzgerald, who is a brother of Rev. John Francis McGuire. It appears he was awakened about two o'clock by a man entering his office, when shortly after, another man, who is living in the neighborhood, came to the house and knocked on the door. The man, who was drunk and carried a bayonet, came into the house, and, after some time, threatened him. Father McGuire warded off the blow with his hand, and grappling with the man, immediately a second threat was made, from which he had a very narrow escape. On leaving the sitting-room of his trousers Father McGuire was grappled with his assailant, and after a severe struggle, succeeded in wresting the fellow from him, and he succeeded in making his escape. Meanwhile, the man who had been left in the office had ransacked the place, and had taken from the place a watch and a few pounds in money.

Cavan.—The Cavan Annual for several years past, Mr. Bolton, M.P., has stated that it is not his intention to seek reelection for the county Kilmore. This is good.

Cork.—Two years have not yet elapsed since an interesting account appeared of the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the golden jubilee of Father Mary Joseph Rice, the founder of the Christian Brothers, and author of our national Irish Catechism of his religious profession. The deceased was the founder of Mount Sion, Waterford, and belonged to one of the most distinguished Kerry families. He entered the Franciscan order in the year 1820, taking with her the very ancient name of Brother Ignatius, and he was a man of some religious zeal in 1832.

A lately published account, in a book on Feb. 1, at Schoolmore, at which a branch of the National Gaelic League was formed, the meeting was addressed by several clergymen and others, and it was stated that the Bishop, Dr. Fitzgerald, Bishop of Kerry, had given the infant society his blessing and encouragement. The meeting was also addressed by Mr. Fitzgerald, who stated that the Land Act was administered by people who follow the principle laid down by Pitt, that the interest should be sole master of his own property. Now they contended that it ought to be shown the country stress and ruined tenantry, and that the Land Act was the work of the industrial concerns of the country. Amid a scene of great cheering Father Ryan of Ulcany took the chair. His speech was a clear exposition of the Land Act, and was delivered in the form of a Pitt. The fare delivered, a vote of thanks was proposed to the chairman, and was carried by the meeting, and the meeting then marched to the official residence of Chamberlain, where a halt was ordered, the mass groaned and hissed for the Premier and the cabinet Liberal officers, and denounced them for their negligence of the workingman and their cruelty. The subject was in question this time, and the sudden assembling of the mob surprised the mounted guard stationed in Whitehall, and they thought the mob intended to make a rush for the Premier's residence. The mounted men were hastily reinforced and the mob was hastily dispersed by a rush of the mounted men. It had made an attempt to storm the admiralty and home office. Both buildings were heavily guarded with all sorts of missiles. The affair cause intense excitement through the city.

Dublin.—The remains of Nicholas Archbold, who died in Paris, were interred on Saturday last. At the recent establishment of a branch in the Gaelic League, the participants were present were Rev. H. McGuire, chairman, Rev. P. McGrean, Rev. H. McNeve and Rev. P. McIntyre, secretary. Messrs. MacMahon and J. McAnulty also took part in the proceedings. Crossmaglen has also stepped to the front. Carlow.—The Carlow Nationalist says—Mr. J. G. Bolton, M.P., has stated that it is not his intention to seek reelection for the county Kilmore. This is good.

Cork.—Two years have not yet elapsed since an interesting account appeared of the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the golden jubilee of Father Mary Joseph Rice, the founder of the Christian Brothers, and author of our national Irish Catechism of his religious profession. Both buildings were heavily guarded with all sorts of missiles. The affair cause intense excitement through the city.

Tyrone.—A local lunatic of some description, who is known as Arthur Kane, was arrested in Omagh, on Saturday last, for the part he played in the Phoenix Park outrages. He was brought before the Petty Sessions Court, and, after a long examination, he was remanded for a week, in order to allow the police to make another attempt to dispose of the prisoner, who, it is said, is a dangerous character. The affair has caused great excitement in the town.

Limerick.—The Limerick Fishery Commission, which was appointed on Feb. 4, decided to wind up their concern. The company was formed some twenty years since to work the salmon fisheries on the West Coast of Ireland, between Galway and Donegal, and, up to 1882, it had paid a dividend of 10 per cent. The undertaking proved a failure. The company's chief operations were in Donegal Bay, and the fishery was lost by the company.

Wexford.—Last Sparrow hatting failed to indulge the Limerick people into paying for the Lady's prize, now in pawn. Now they hold the Leonard Gardens Gun-Club as a centre of attraction, and, when they do so, we say valid reason for doing so.

Wicklow.—Mr. Thomas Kane, Kilcarra, Arklow, has lost a valuable cow, which died on Friday last, after a short illness, and was evidently poisoned. This certainly does not look as if the Coburn's and Lynch's outrages are ended. Some time last year based on fear and intimidation, Mr. Kane's cow was poisoned, and Mr. Lynch's cow, Mr. Kane, Kilcarra, Arklow, on January 31, and delivered judgment in the case of Kane and Lynch, which was to be heard in the Court of King Richard's Bench, in a fair trial. In no single instance has any prosecution been made, or, if it be so, and, to refine it legal, the man had his case dismissed. Something like £1,000 is now £20, and a third from £11 to £5 15s. To the Lynch's and Kane's the loss is not so great, but it will take some time to make up the loss.

Meath.—Mr. Edward Kilbreath, of Gunderum, Oldbawn, has been sworn in as High Sheriff of County Meath, and Mr. Thomas Lowry, of Kells, as sub-Sheriff.

Mayo.—Colonel A. W. Knox-Gore died at his residence, Ballina House, on Jan 31, aged 71 years.

The usual Spring outpatient from Connaught and Ulster, which is to be held in Dublin, is small farmers and their sons from the above Provinces, and from the Leinster Province, commencing on their way to Dublin, there for the purpose of attending the Spring Assizes, which are to be held in Dublin, Monday, March 2, and from the Leinster Province, Monday, March 9.

Sligo.—Mr. Edward Kilbreath, of Gunderum, Oldbawn, has been sworn in as High Sheriff of County Meath, and Mr. Thomas Lowry, of Kells, as sub-Sheriff.

Tipperary.—At the annual meeting of the Bowes Fenian Club, held at dark rooms on Feb. 1, the following were elected for the year 1885: Head (Byrne president; E. McGuinness and M. Farrell, secretaries; John O'Brien, treasurer; Joseph Machin and John McGarry, honorary secretaries.

At one o'clock on Sunday morning, Feb. 1, Lieut. Colonel Thomas Fitzpatrick, formerly of the 1st Dragoon Guards, died at his residence, his house on the green beside the Dublin and Kilkenny road, Kilkenny. Deceased was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Antiquaries, and was considered a good deal of a scholar. He was a member of the Kilkenny Archæological Society, and was a frequent contributor to its publications

THE RESCUE OF THE KING.

(Feb. 22nd, 1866, the Convent in charge of the Sisters of St. Joseph, at Germantown (Indian Reservation, Neb.), was burned by fire. By human escaping from the burning building, the Sisters saved the lives of the Indian children, who were in the last flame, but left homeless and their Indian pupils. Father Sepitzer, O. S. F., Superior of the Mission, succeeded in rescuing the Tabernacle with the Blessed Sacrament, and placed it in safety, thereby fulfilling the prophecy of Isaiah, 31 v. 5, by rescuing the Tabernacle from the burning Altar and flying it through the moment of its flame rushed forth after him!)

O the earth has still her brown,
Man or Indian, true and strong,
As ever your fame's golden laurels
Shall be your reward, long!

Man alike need a public cry:
Then the warrior heats that tired,
To the shining goal of victory
Over gray hoge of dust.

Who are they? Let they are telling
Toward about us day by day,
Or are lighting distant regions
With Faith's heaven-kindled ray,
Bearing with unconquering patience
Pain, and toil, and care,
That the children of the forest
May be saved from the Crown.

Valiant Priests who wait, rejoicing,
Hasty if they may but bring
One poor soul that doubt in darkness
To the bright home of our King.
Such are O ye whose dominion spirits
Are and Exiled, sweet, of which innocence
Are the Mission of Kadkin
Calling to "a dam of Tyrge and benghan;

When the holy Convent building
In the white moon cast out,
At the silent watch of midnight
Fell the hungry fire-fiend's spoil,
Heavily wrought they, heavily, nobly,
But that did not save in vain.
The flame strength of the destroyer
Tempt, and I might not contain.

All it burst through first and window
Rising out in fiery flames
Flinging out in fiery glowers
From the roof leaps the alarm
While the street walls echoed, and troubled
At the sight of Tyrge's Dame.
And within the Chapel quivered
A red sea of Fright.

Yet one drawer to pass its portals,
Bought so long that it alone can,
Pass the fire-fiend's fiery portals
Of Tyrge and Dame and Dell?
Yes! Jesus will look for Thee!
Yes! Jesus will look for Thee!
Where the Tabernacle shadowed
Then, O Lord, the King of Kings.

Rent a wall of death before him,
Parted tenants of angry flame
He is Jesus! Jesus! Jesus!
Leaping forth to meet him come,
Hosts of angels, hosts of angels,
Hosts of angels wending call,
Hosts of angels, hosts of angels,
Unless the Church's meeting wall.

Fly, his angel-wings outspread,
With the order warriors bring,
With the sceptre of the Tyrgen
Close in battle round their King!
Gentle Jesus! meek and lowly!
Thou were he to succour guard,
As the shepherd on the hillside
Fed before his super head.

And between the fire and Tyrgen
Flew above, below, around,
Angels, angels, angels, angels, at him
With a valiant flying sound.
Then the Tyrgen's scales in the balance,
Still he wrought with resolute will.
And the Tabernacle
Our the consuming whose all.

Joyful rage to the King was rescued
Joyful rage to the King was rescued
Joyful rage to the King was rescued

THE MONITOR.
TWENTY-EIGHTH YEAR OF ITS PUBLICATION

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11, 1885.

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the chief agent in popularizing those great principles behind which momentous opinion, and opinion governs the world. In our time, religion journalism is not only a useful and serious occupation, but early a work indispensable to the salvation of society, and to the glory of God. What is and what ought to be the object of Catholic journalism but to combat error and defend the truth, whatever it may be—error in the Divine Word."—SEVERE, TUROLDOUS MONSIGNOR UPPINGS.

"Say that Union and Strength through the Instrumentality of the Catholic Press, which, Catholic Journals will defend the cause of religion, to fight against the enemies of the Holy Apostolic See, and adhere to the Doctrines and precepts with devotion and fidelity.—PIUS IX.

Editorial Notes.

— The publication of next week's MONITOR will be delayed until Wednesday afternoon in order to give our readers a full account of the St. Patrick's Day ceremonies—the feast of Ireland's Apostle falling this year on Tuesday next.

— The letters of our regular resident correspondents in Rome and Ireland, which we print this week contain a great deal of very important matter which will be read with interest by the readers of the MONITOR all over the coast.

— Rev. Father McKnight, P. P., of Newport, Tipperary, gives to the Catholic Opinion and Times the glad intelligence that Archbishop Croke intends to visit this country during the coming summer. His Grace will be accompanied by an English manof-war, which is to render military honors to the Italian flag. Scahlin is to be defended by the Italians against the Arabs until the end of the war in the Soudan.

— I am sorry to say that news has reached here that some of the most celebrated correspondents for the English papers have been killed in Africa lately. Who does not know the name of Cameron the celebrated correspondent of the Daily Standard. The poor fellow was killed together with Saint-Lager Herbert, every inch a soldier, and Hoskyn, correspondent of the Morning Post. Burleigh, correspondent of the Daily News, was severely wounded. . . . On the 21st of January Augustin Depreux completed his 72nd year. He received congratulations from King Humbert and several senators and deputies. . . . It was reported by the Liberal press that the celebrated General Lois Mezzacapo, who died lately in Rome, refused to his last illness to see a priest. This has been contradicted by Canon Pecone, chaplain of the military college, who attended him all through his last illness and heard his confession.

No More Public Land for Aliens.

It will be good news for millions of the American people to learn that a dispatch from Washington of the 26th ult., brings the satisfactory intelligence that the Committee on Public Lands has reported to the Senate a bill to prevent aliens from acquiring lands in the Territories. As amended the bill provides that hereafter it shall be unlawful for persons not citizens of the United States, or who have not declared their intention to become such, or for any foreign corporations, to hold real estate in the Territories. The bill also provides that no railroad, turnpike or canal corporation shall hereafter acquire or own lands in the Territories, except such as are necessary to their operation or have been granted by Congress; and all such lands, when not required before or after the passage of this Act, which are not necessary for the operation of such companies, shall be disposed of within ten years after the passage of this Act, and if not then disposed of shall be forfeited to the United States. The land so acquired in violation of this Act shall be forfeited to the United States.

This law, however, is partly good and partly inoperative, for the reason that no power is vested in any branch of the United States government to take back any lands it has already donated either to individuals or corporations. Such an act in ordinary life is called "robbery," and in this respect we hope the telegraph has misconstrued the tenor of the law in question.

Two Peculiar Scenes in Public Life.

The probability and disappointments of life were never better illustrated than in the instances furnished by James Gillespie Blaine and Grover Stephen Cleveland. Both these citizens were candidates before the American people for the highest office known in civil life. The race was nearly won by Blaine when the "Rum, Romanism and Rebellion" speech of a political parson turned the votes of thousands of citizens against the Republican candidate. Cleveland was elected, and ellist he was on his way to the White House, his political adversary was hurrying off to the lost side of his good Catholic sister who loved him dearly, and whose last prayer was doubtless offered up for his return to the faith of his and her dead mother. On the 4th or March Cleveland rejoiced in the victory which surrounded his inauguration as the President of the greatest country in the world. Blaine was shrouded in grief as he slowly followed the bier of his beloved sister to the last green-yard resting where she sleeps the sleep of the just. What a lesson for mankind! Upon what slender threads do hang the destinies of life! And yet, in the wisdom of that Providence who "doeth all things well," Blaine's defeat and the death of his sister may be the means of leading him back to the kindly light of that holy faith which is never spurned for the prodigal who deigns to return to his Father's house. As Father Clarke beautifully and appropriately said in his interview with Blaine which we published elsewhere: "It is better for a man to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting," and God seals just such crosses as Mr. Blaine has borne in order to bring back the stray sheep to His fold. May heaven grant peace to the soul of Mrs. Walker, and ignite again the fire of Catholic faith in her dear brother's soul.

England's Position in Europe.

In a lengthy article on the possible solution of the English problem in Egypt, the London Tablet thus summarizes England's position among her sister European nationalities: "Isolated and alone and without a friend for an friend is the cry of Europe." Such is the unenviable position to which England has come at last: it has a humiliating demand. It reveals, at a glance, the inevitable results of England's centuries of chicanery, cruelty, corruption and unjust coercion of weaker nations. We need no wonder that the "base, bloody and brutal" British government is declared by its pro-English Catholic organ to be "the outcast of the nations of Europe!" It would be a blot upon the escutcheon of Christian Europe if such a conspiracy and perjurious war could find a single nation in sympathy with its cruel code of legislation and its piratical aspirations on foreign soil.

To their honor be it said, therefore, that no nation in Europe is in full sympathy with England in its present unjust conflict against El Mahdi. Germany is evidently only waiting an opportunity to enter into an entangling alliance with her which can be made an excuse for a trial of martial skill; France heartily desires to see England's downfall; and Russia is quietly nibbling her forces on the frontier of Egypt in preparation for the hour when she can say to Great Britain "thus far shall thou go and no farther." Italy is the only power in Europe that has volunteered to assist England in her unjust war in the Soudan, and it is an open secret in Europe that Italian diplomacy discerned at the outset that England would went an ally, and that the power that stepped in to save the British from being entirely routed by the so-called "rebels" in Egypt, would thereby gain a foothold in that country. Italy—in union with the spirit of all European Powers at present—desires to extend its colonial possessions, hence she is spending her funds and using her navy with the ulterior intention of receiving full recompense for the part she is at present playing as "second fiddle" to England in her unjustifiable onslaught on the Sindanese.

It is both ludicrous and lamentable to see the pro-British tone of the Protestant press in regard to this Egyptian Question, and the trouble some half-instructed preachers go to in order to show their love for the land that tried to keep the country in the toils of its slavery. There's the Purple, for instance, had an article in its recent issue which would suit the region of Regent street, London, far better than it does any portion of a land inhabited by people whose national principle is freedom for every people throughout the universe. The Soudanese are fighting for their personal freedom, their home and their fireside—the holiest cause that can animate a brave people. England is at best but an interloper whose policy is to play the part of a pirated freebooter so as to rob defenceless natives of their territory and their rights. Yet this is the Power which the Purple speaks of as having its "honor" maintained by the unjust punishment of the innocent people. Shame upon such British bigotry and servilism!

Those people who imagine that England will ultimately triumph in the Soudan, know little of the antecedents of El Mahdi or the war experience his past victorious military career has brought him. It is now nearly eighty years since the present struggle was inaugurated. At that time El Mahdi—or the New Prophet as he was called—gathered around him for self-preservation the majority of the Arab tribes of the Egyptian Soudan, and at the end of three years of almost continual warfare they succeeded in completely expelling the Turks who had occupied their country for sixty years previously. In 1880 the struggle was renewed with still greater fury. In 1881 the Governor of the Soudan sent two successive expeditions against the Mahdi, but the followers of the New Prophet completely annihilated them and left their bones bleaching on many a bloody battle-field. In 1882 a third expedition set out to capture the forces of El Mahdi, but repeated victory had concentrated fifty thousand Arabs around the standard of the New Prophet, and the array hundred Egyptians forming the third expedition were completely annihilated to a man

Such successive victories naturally inspired the Mahdi with confidence, so instead of merely acting on the defensive—he assumed an aggressive attitude and marched on El Obeid, which city he captured after a lengthy siege and a vigorous conflict. The succeeding events are all in recent occurrence and are familiar to all Hicks' expedition and his defeat at Kasgil; the routing of Baker Pasha at El Teb; the departure of Gordon for Khartoum; its defeat, its capture, the death of Gordon, and the defeat of the English.

Such is a sympathic history of a conflict which has proved to be a series of victories on one side and a succession of defeats on the other. The Mahdi and his companions are actuated by that sentiment which all history testifies in every age to have been the leading factor in inspiring victory for savage and Christian peoples alike. That motive is religious zeal coupled with freedom to live in peace upon native soil. It is for such inalienable rights that the Mahdi and his men are now continuing the conflict commenced years ago, and where we look over the successes which the Arabs have gained thus far over all the forces sent against them, we have but little fear that the blood-red flag of England will ever flaunt triumphly in the face of El Mahdi.

The Irish Parliamentary Fund.

The subscription list for the Irish Parliamentary Fund is augmented this week by the liberal contributions of three Irish priests in big-hearted Virginia City, and to the contributors of these we would call the attention of the friends of Parnell and the Irish Parliamentary Party all over the coast to the fact that St. Patrick's Day presents an excellent opportunity for "passing the hat" collecting for this fund among the friends of the Irish name. Send the money to the MONITOR, where it will be duly acknowledged, and the full amount sent into Father O'Reilly's hands when the subscription closes on April 22nd next.

How Secret Societies Shield Insulting and Ignorant Bigots.

A few months ago we stated in three columns that all secret societies—whether oath-bound or not—were proximately dangerous for Catholics to enter into membership for the reason that they were generally managed by men who were either openly or secretly the foes of our holy faith, and such fanatics never let slip an opportunity where they can insult Catholics and inspect their ignorant, venomous malice into some speech for the purpose of slandering the Catholic Church. Those men generally scorn their allegiance of Catholic practices and Catholic dogma by a degree of brazen impudence fortified by the presence of the benefits that surround them in the "Lodge," or the "Parlor," or the "Camp Fire," according as the meeting place may be designated.

Herein lies the danger that Catholics encounter whenever they mix in with the motley group of men who imitate the mysteries of Masonry and over their majesty with the cloak of charity. The plan to cover hatred of the Church, and the propaging of Catholics—with the mantle of charity, benevolence and friendship for our fellow man, in mixed societies of atheists, infidels, Unitarians, Mason Mormons, Ingersollians, and a sprinkling of sleek-looking Methodist "mahers"—is the Devil's latest invention to undermine the Faith of God in Catholic souls.

Do you believe it? If not let us give you a single instance—out of a hundred similar ones—as it happened last week in Tuscarel, Alameda county. The "Ancient Order United Workmen" is supposed to be a harmless body of men who are Christians, and who seek to derive sick and mortuary benefits may enter without any danger to their spiritual interests either earthly or eternal. This Order—like all the other secret Masonic bodies—covers its olovan foot with the cloak of charity, it wears upon its head the harmless mantle of charity, and whilst its breast-plate of nonsectarianism is lined with the blackest bigotry against the Catholic Church.

On last Wednesday evening this seeming by useful society in which people of all religious denominations are supposed to participate under the cloak of "charity," gave one of its occasional "entertainments" in Hall A. U. W. hall, in North Tuscarel, Alameda county, to which some Catholics were invited, and as they thought it would be a pleasant way to pass an hour or two they went—and paid the usual penalty generally inflicted upon those who visit forbidden places of amusement during Lent.

In the scenes of the "entertainment" a preacher (Protestant preachers are generally "Most Eminent High Magnumps" in all these charity-covered nothing-nothing-nothing-

Farm and Home.

"THANK GOD FOR FIVE."

Five children placed beside the door,
Four merry lads and one sweet maid;
Five of them in those blissful days:
"Thank God for five!" the father said.

The road rule open to blossom fair;
They emitted all the glad spring days;
And cloud drag round the old home's door,
"Thank God for five!" he slowly says.

One at the summer's call fled from home
A brave young soldier! let his father's door
Day and night with the fervent prayer,
"Thank God," he whispers, "for the four!"

The voice of storm has lulled to rest
Another on the still green sod;
The father lifts his eyes to heaven:
"Thank God," he says, "I still have three!"

The maiden wore her bridal wreath
But three short days; then death's death
Exchanged it for a funeral wreath
Two only remain—the mother and father.

Amidst the everlasting snows
One buried lies in ice-bound shaft;
They hold the father, and he said:
"Thank God, one of the five is left!"

The last within a cloistered cell
Closed his mild eyes and cried his head,
And passed to endless bliss: "Thank God!
There once were five," the father said.

On earth he meekly gave them all,
One gentle girl, four valiant men;
In heaven, each more he thanked his God,
To him the five were given again.

HABITS OF READING.

[WRITTEN FOR THE MONITOR BY J. E. O'B.]

"Improve the present hour, for all beside
Is a mere feather on a bubble's back."
HORACE.

One of the most important factors, perhaps, connected with the life of every individual, and one which calls for most attention on the part of those appointed to form the character, is the power of habit. How early and forcibly are its effects portrayed in the half-dazzled, staggering forms that are every day met on the street.

It is the intention of the writer to single out one among the many things over which the power of habit exerts control; and that is, reading. The present is a time when innumerable works pour forth from the press, and fill our private and public reading rooms. It is a time when reading matter is easy of access; when the poorest individual can feast his curiosity on the contents of the sensational novel, or dive into the depths of science. But, it is this excessive abundance which should call forth the attention of every mind to distinguish the good grain from the chaff.

Parents are often based to prefer children for some attention to habits of reading, the slightest knowledge of the contents. Better would it be for these conscientious and indulgent parents to examine the matter on which the mind of their children is feeding. Let them follow those studious children to the public library and see for themselves the trashy literature that is chosen by the little ones to pass away their leisure hours. If children be allowed to choose their reading matter indiscriminately, a habit will be formed, in most cases, for that which is light and trivial. This habit will essentially weaken that power of thought necessary in application to graver subjects, and which if properly cultivated, might have made the youthful mind brilliant light in the scientific world.

But, why blame the children, pursuing one the presence of our public librarian, we may find young men and young women whose sole occupation, day after day, seems to be the perusal of the trashy novels of literature. Low, indeed, must be the aim of a young man, and dead his ambition, who can squander the precious moments of the best of life's portion in an occupation from which nothing substantial can be realized. Why not devote this same time to the acquisition of some branch of a method of study. There is a life-long pleasure in the exercise of powers thus attained; a pleasure, which more than repays for the wasting hours often spent in their attainment. Let not, then, what seem to be lesser ones of a pleasure to them unknown. They are satisfied by the momentary and fleeting excitement found in the perusal of sensational novels.

Few habits have attained that stage of development to which no means of correction can successfully be applied. A remedy is, therefore, only offered which, if followed, will, in a proper direction, cause habits of reading. To commence at the terminus-head, let fashions and modern caliturate useful reading. Let the father of a family devote a considerable portion of his reading to works which will aid him to instruct his children properly. Let the mother who now sits, day after day, mentally buried in the pages of a novel, look to the keeping of her household, and spend her leisure hours in learning how to protect the physical and spiritual health of her children. In fine, let father and mother examine carefully every book to be read by their little ones. To enable them the better to do this, it would be well for each family, where possible, to have a choice selection of books within the home. Prominent in this selection should be volumes of history and biography. Twin the youthful mind by this course of judicious reading, to aspire by the force of ancient and modern production. To enable the mind to run in useful reading, parents should encourage it by their presence in the reading circle, and by frequently questioning the child upon the matter it has read. Nothing tends more to train the youthful mind to habits of attention and reflection than the repetition, in conversational form, of what it has read.

It is not the intention of the writer to inveigh against all fiction. Under a wise disparment of literature it is made to serve a purpose. Judicious indulgence in it, now as a recreation to the mental powers wearied by continued application to more profound matter. But, let it be remembered, that the sort of reading is to be the mind what food is to the body. There is no permanent rest in it, and we must look elsewhere for the cultivation of that noblest part of the human intellect.

With guard your children in this matter—keep them from blunting minds with the silly rays of pave and useful knowledge; giving of powers of memory and reflection. Then, and you will have done for your religion that which will immeasurably add variety fritters folidly, and bring to them character and noblest of intellectual declaration is.

THE GREAT AMERICAN DUDE.

[FROM A BRITISH POINT OF VIEW.]

Once we thought a Yankee hotel took a bottle, you'll believe,
Self assertion, vulgar, cute in his manners, speech and dress;
And that long round the old world he came to make things in general true,
And wean the Old World accordingly with Brother Jonathan.

Then it was his mood to identify a vain absurdity
Of a story so apocryphal as the apple pears of Tell.
But our Jonathan is altered, let him have my hand of pressure;
Though vulgar fellows sneer some at his Anglo-Saxon cousin
So altered that—you honor—it is doubted hard to the
The dude that wants Delmonico's from the sandy of Fall Mall!

He affects our English manners, and our English modes of speech,
Though his annual intonation puts the last beyond his reach;
Yet, ah! really the poor fellow does the very best he can
With his drawl and stent and stetter to ape an Englishman.

Well, ooks now! amusing as all this thing may appear,
To imitate's to flatter with a flattery most sincere;
And such copies subtle flattery should, I rather think, impart
A glow of satisfaction to each loyal British heart.

What a land of golden promises where e'er mill
Homebrew scene, and Jonathan
A sort of fetish worship to an empty-headed idol
Where impecunious nobles find a haven of comfort
And where hobnobs are plenty as are hope in many Kent.

By Jove! a land of heiresses, for each daughter has her sire,
And a season with any title can with ease "make in the pot"
Where beauty dowered with dollars can might most envious
If a baron from Bohemia or a count from Timbuctoo.

Be Obtained a Job.

Boss Plumber (to small applicant for a position)—Do you could like to become a plumber, little boy?

Little Boy—Yeth, thir.

Boss Plumber—Can you read, write and spell?

Little Boy—Yeth, thir.

Boss Plumber—How much is ten pounds of lead pipe at ten cents a pound?

Little Boy—Dollar thereabouts, thir.

Boss Plumber—I'll give you a trial.

The Feet at the Rink.

Literary talent is kept fully abreast of roller skating progress at Brunswick, Ga., where one of the papers prints "trick personals" like these: "Miss Julia Parish glided around the hall like a sunbeam playing upon the crests of the sparkling waves. Mrs. Melver is quite at home upon the roller, and skates as smoothly as the swan glides over the placid waters. Miss Mary Dent has finished crossed the hall like a lightringed dove on some heavenly mission."

A Young Man's Cupidity.

Father—Are you sure that Pumbody loves you? Perhaps he wants to marry you for your money.

Daughter (thoughtfully)—Yes, I am sure he loves me, papa. He swears that he has wondered in the dark, what man he would be saw me.

Father—Where did he first see you?

Daughter—At Coney Island.

Father—Were you dressed in a bathing suit?

Daughter—My feet are realized. He is after your money.

A Good Reason for Being Down on Lawyers.

"Don't what's go gift from foolin' round wid dem yere lawyers," he said, as he joined a group of colored idlers in the market place. Being asked why he vent to a law yer, he explained:

"You know dat Buck Williams? Powerful bad nigger he am. Gits drunk an' kicks de dogs an' throws de winders. Come around to my house one night 'an' wuk at' stove de roof off de house an' wanted to clean out de shanty. I fale a-sot he had no goss for him wid an axe handle, and dey war guine to treat me for bein' widdin de law. I—

"Well?"

"Well, when dey told me dat he had a smoked hand, a broken arm, an' war all broke up, I wanted to settle de case. My wife woman consed me to go an' see a lawyer an' de lawyer he taxed me $5, an' advised me to git Buck my de house an' wagin' and gits in cash.

"And you did?"

"An' I didn't! When I got home his wife war waitin' for me, an' she said if I didn't hand' over $2 in cash an' a sack of beer she'd mashes me wid a lawsuit. Took me jist abouteen tirks of de skin to settle an' de beer, an' now I can't be mutilated nohow. Lawyers! Dat! I paid $5 to one of 'em to tell me dat I must reduce myself from poverty to affluence to settle a case wher' the complainant didn't ax but $3 an' would hev' gin me forty off on dat if I had kicked."

Johnnie and the Egyptian Question.

"Pa, what is England sending more troops to Egypt for?"

"To rescue Wolseley, my son."

"What is Wolseley there for?"

"To rescue Gordon."

"What for was Gordon ever there?"

"To rescue Egypt."

"What was fighting?"

"Well, nobody yet. The Mahdi had an army raised, though."

"Pa, do the British own that country?"

"No, my son."

"Then they are campaigning in the wrong ward, ain't they?"

"It looks that way, Johnnie. Now run along and carry in that wood for your mother. You're too inquisitive."

Just a Little Chat.

Rev. Father Elliot, the eloquent Pastor Father of New York, some time ago returned after a long absence on a mission. On the day of his return he was announced to the parlor by a visitor who wished to see him on particular business. He descended and inquired the nature of the business. "Oh, none, Father" said the visitor; "none whatever. I just called to see you for the purpose of having a little chat." "Oh, you did!" said the Pastor preacher. "Well, I regret that I am unable to chat with you. I have no time to devote to chatting, but will kneel down and repeat the rosary with you." And he did, and it is said that the visitor called no more to have "a little chat."

NEWS OF THE WORLD.

CABLEGRAMS FROM ALL COUNTRIES.

BRITISH NOTES.

The Gloomy Warning at a Tory. Is Disease Insane?

New York, March 7.—The Herald's London cable of the 6th says: A thoughtful member of the cabinet said to-day to a Herald correspondent by a correspondent his opinion about what the Times called the "existing political crisis," sententiously emphatic. It means that Irish fidelity is more manifest than ever; that South Africa is in confusion; that chaos is in Egypt; that Earl Granville and Bismarck are fighting; diplomatically dumb that the British army is locked up in the Soudan; that the Queen's health is the key; that Russia is at India's gates and that the Ameer is holding their key; that the dynamiters are planting more earthquakes and that an increase in the army means an increase in the income tax; that Ireland is insane and is going to be crazier. It is useless to add he is a Tory. He then pointed to Cleveland's inaugural, and added: "There is no crisis in America, except the office-seekers' crisis, and I think if aliens are allowed to hold land I shall not seek re-election in Parliament, but in a calm ranch."

Gladstone Crazy on Slate.

The St. Stephen's Review says: "Gladstone recently bought one day over 100 hals, and that his mind is giving way under the strain to which it has been subjected is evident."

Bagdad Brave to Bismarck.

PARIS, March 7.—The majority of the newspapers consider that the speech made by Granville in the Lords last evening in explanation of England's action in the Soudan was a mistake, was an act of humiliation unworthy of a great like England.

The Parnellites Not Satisfied.

The negotiations between the Government agents and the Parnellites, the Government offering to limit the operation of the Crimes Act to one year, have been broken off, the Irish members of Parliament refusing to accept the terms. The Government will now propose the extension of the Crimes Act for two years.

How the Irish will Welcome Walsh.

The Police of Wales, it is now generally believed, will meet with a cool reception on the visit to Dublin next month. Many fear that he will be hooted during his progress through the country. The retreat made by the Lord Mayor, John O'Connor, from his first attitude of approval of the visit of the Prince of Wales, when a great majority of the Irish National Members, some of whom he had been congratulated, and who had made previous to this speech, "the Lord Mayor, however, finally maintains his present attitude of not to meet, or attend, official receptions to the royal visitor, and so threats on the part of his former political colleagues seem to have any effect on his present determination to welcome the Prince. All this tends to make the Nationalists more determined in their declared purpose to elect the Lord Mayor's successor, as it is called, by contract, which shall be a man who will not be ashamed to meet, when the occasion is forced upon him, by the Prince, for any purpose whatever. They are now, it is said, made such a determination as will "teach England that the disloyalists are in the majority in Ireland."

Rioting Soldiers in Waterford.

A serious outbreak occurred to-day between the soldiers and civilians at Waterford, Ireland. A detachment of the Royal Irish Regiment, numbering 100 men, had been sent from Clonmel to Waterford in readiness for Queen's visit, when they were to be sent to Dublin. The officer allowed the men to remain in the barracks, ostensibly while awaiting the departure of the steamer which was to take them to Dublin. As soon as the hour arrived the interest in rioting in the various towns in the town grew so great that some of them were prematurely drawn by the time they were expected to report at the quay. On the way to the quay they engaged through the streets in irregular squads, committing various outrages and attacking the houses of citizens. Women and young girls were seized and passed through the ranks of the soldiers, amid cheers from the crowd. Some of the soldiers tore down their own beds and shop doors and carried them over bayonets. In all 3 houses were entered, ransacked and left in the deepest confusion. The officers were powerless to restrain the soldiers, although they made a determined effort to do so. Explaining

THE DAILY STRUGGLE.

Tired hands which never reap the know,
So labor-spent;
Tired feet—that ceaselessly must go,
Yet long for rest;
Each days exile on life's restless wave as wave,
Nons liferight faith of our daily crave.

Tired heart, then pleasel for the goal,
That seems remote,
And shudly yet shrinks from the toil;
Ah! exhibit this note
Tis a sublime fate, life wistfulful sleepless cry
Which, upon its yearnings, marks each weary sigh.

Cuddled thus but hear that gentle voice,
That, whispering low,
Forever bids thee to rejoice
Your yield to fate;
Thy ceaseless spirit counts each roughness toll,
Each cross from which thou'rt chapped to recoil.

Stay! stay! thy labor be reckone too,
Thy pain life's fee;
While gazing on its cheerless view
Thy pace grows slack,
Consumed into despair, thy spirit sinks back.

This primarily being shares with thee life's race.

"Every day, ah! yes, each day
Now grows wan!
At are, when life here passed away,
And I lived will be done.
A golden shadow has a silent another link
Ever while our weak hearts from the burdens shrink.

We know not oft, at day's calm close,
Our heavel sins,
The Book of Life shall yet disclose
Its tells and pains,
(In glowing characters of shining light,)
Which we or crowns and sorrowed in the fight.

Then letter not a while nor pause,
Since twilight grows,
And nearer its dim shadow draws;
Thou shall repose
Beyond earth's toilers, in their well-earned rest,
Thou Weary hearts and hads shall rest indeed.

Questions for Cooks.

Why should beans never be put into cold water to soak as is often recommended? Because all the nutritious portion of the bean is extracted by the process. They should be washed in warm water, then in cold, be tied loosely in cloth, be put into boiling water with a little salt in it, and be kept boiling for four hours. They are then excellent to serve with gravy, and not with melted butter. They serve as garnish around roast mutton or beef, and are excellent eating served whole or in a puree. To make the latter, when the beans are done, throw them instantly into cold water, rub them with slip off the skins, rub the beans through a colander, and mix a lump of butter with them. A little stock, or milk, or cream, is a delicate addition. Why should plenty of fat boiling water be used in boiling vegetables, potatoes excepted? Because the greater the body of boiling water the greater the heat. If only a little water is used, the whole affair soon cools, and the vegetables become tough, so much so that no length of time in boiling them will render them otherwise. Brussels sprouts, in April, if properly cooked by boiling them for eight minutes in boiling water, will be tender as asparagus, but if not properly done, hours will not cook them.

Why should onions be always cut in round and very thin rings? Because the fibre is thus cut across, and in so cutting them, whether for frying or for making sauce, they are rendered very tender when cooked. With turnips and carrots it is just the same: neither of the three should be split or cut in any other way.

Why should parsley never be boiled with soda—only boiling water and salt? Because parsley, having no oil in it, would be spoiled with soda, and all flavour would be extracted. All parsley should be picked free from the stem, be put into plenty of boiling water with salt, and in summer be boiled only one minute, and in winter two minutes, and be strained and chopped on the back of a plate. If only a little water is used in boiling it, the water becomes brown and the parsley tough and ill-favoured.

How Much People Lose for Want of System.

It is astonishing how much time people lose for want of "system." A girl rises, dawdles about dressing, gets late for breakfast, and then the best part of the day is gone.

A young fellow has finished his work; his idea about with a few friends, and lo!—he knows it, it is past time to check, and the evening is practically wasted.

Life is too short and must be crammed into a lifetime of there is only organization and system.

No motion or maid, sitting down, for instance, to make a knitted counterpane, could do the whole at one sitting; but a quarter of an hour's work every day would accomplish the whole task, long as it is, in the course of a few weeks.

The minutes, too, have an odd trick of slipping away so swiftly that if they are not caught, and applied to a good purpose, they are wasted in a manner which leaves the years periodically a blank.

The young husbands who come home in the evening and grow sulky because their wives are untidy, and the dreplace dirty with the day's ashes, and who are told by their spouses there has been "no season to do" that time for "tidying up" could not be found, make sure that the last tenants dried a small pea.

The heaviest day's work can be got through, either by the fireside on the wife's part, or out of doors on the husband's side, if time is taken by the forelock; every thing begun early, and everything, too, systematically carried out.

The Orange Tree

The orange tree is the longest-lived fruit tree known. It is recorded that there thriving the age of 300 years, and it has been known to have flourished and borne fruit for more than 100 years. No fruit tree will grow and produce fruit so well under rough treatment. It commences to bear the third or fourth year after budding, and by the fifth year it will produce an abundant crop, but its yield will increase gradually under favorable circumstances, and as the years pass on it will become a very productive tree. The early growth of the orange is quite rapid, and by the tenth year it will have increased more than in the next fifty years, so far as its trunk and height are concerned; but as its age multiplies its fruit stems increase greatly, and an old tree will sometimes bear several thousand oranges.

A California Ranch.

A wonderful farm is that known as Baldwin's Santa Anita Ranch in Los Angeles County, this State. It comprises 1,200 acres in grapes, 16,000 orange and lemon trees, 2,000 pomegranates, 3,000 English walnut trees, 2,000 almond trees, 2,500 peach trees, 4,000 pear trees, 2,000 apricot trees, 1,500 fig trees, and substances is furnished for 25,000 head of sheep, 2,000 cows and pigs and several hundred horses and mules, and this year before harvest could be seen 17,000 acres of golden grain.

THE OLD ARCTIC RUBBERS.

How shabby my old arctic rubbers are growing
The depth of their worthiness soon will be over.
How well I remember, those blustery and snowy day
The day that I carried them home from the shoes.
Both Winkler and Vernon predicted a smoker;
The north wind was blowing and bitter the cold.
I doubt them and paid for them too—and a quarter.
The old arctic rubbers that served me so well
The old arctic rubbers, the flannel-lined rubbers
The old arctic rubbers that served me so well

They gave me protection wherever a blizzard
Such cross drifts, knee-high, did the wind blow
Ankle and shoes,
And daily, while snowy or rainy days I scanned,
They lay near the door, ready for service
Yet complaint other times they were in the way
Who cares is the ancient old arctic rubbers
And ladies stepped on them through mishap
The old arctic rubbers that served me so well
The old arctic rubbers, the flannel-lined rubbers
The old arctic rubbers that served me so well

The buckles, that formerly glittered like spun
Are rusty and broken, their rule complete
The soles of the rubbers are worn thin
That make me look low legged when walking the street.
But though they're a wreck now in sole, heel
and upper,
Some hungry goat's appetite yet may they satisfy
By furnishing him with a breakfast or supper,
The old arctic rubbers that serve so well
The old arctic rubbers, the flannel-lined rubbers,
The old arctic rubbers that served me so well.

A New Kind of Dog.

A wild-looking man who resembled one who had wrestled with uncertainty and catch so fast can hold, and been thrown to the outcast, went into a Woodward Avenue bird store the other day, and, approached the affable proprietor.

"Look here," he said, "may I take you apart for a moment?"

"Certainly," replied the man of animals, "if you can put me together again."

"Well, here's a letter from my wife—say, come out and have something."

They went out and had something; when they came back the wild-looking man resumed the letter.

"She writes me to get her a white canary back dog, in exchange."

"Now you go," said the bird-man severely; "business is business, and I've no time to fool away."

He sat down on the curbstone to rest. He was still reading the letter, when a sympathetic lady stopped to look at him.

"Poor man, are you ill?" she asked, very kindly.

"Heaven bless you, Madam! Will you read that letter! If you can and will, I am a saved man!"

The lady took the letter as if she were humouring the whim of a lunatic, and hastily ran over it.

"It is easy enough to read," she said. "Your wife, who seems to be an excellent woman, wishes you to buy her a white dog in exchange, attempted to exchange a spaniel, with crowds to finish it, and send by express at once. I am sure there's nothing about it that isn't plain enough."

"Thank you, ma'am. I'll never forget your kindness. Where did you say the cross-stitched dogs canvas could be found?"

"At any art embroidery store," and the lady walked away quickly, remarking, to herself:

"Of all stupids, men are the stupidest. Not to know what a cross-stitch is!"

Where Mercy was Needed.

Lew Campbell, the "One Spoon Baking Powder" man, who travels south, was asked by a lady to dinner. The guests were all seated, and the lady, turning to Lew, said:

"Mr. Campbell, will you—"

"Wha—wha—what I beg of pardon, madam," he stammered, dropping his napkin.

"Will you please ask a blessing" she repeated.

Then she bowed her head, and so did everybody else, and Lew looked down on the plate and stuttered:

"Lord, have mercy, on these poor critiles. Amen."

Difficult to Discover.

"My son," asked a proud father, after the usual greetings of a week was been return from college, "have you a sister-scope among your traps?"

"A microscope, dad" replied the astonished youth.

"Yes, my son. You have been in college, you know, four years, and I thought if you had a microscope handy I should like to see how much you have learned.

"Sweet Violets."

Mr. Winks—"Goodness me! There is a young couple looking at that vacant house next door, and they've got a baby—looks awful cross, too."

Mrs. Winks—"Horror! What shall we do! Can's we scare them off some way? Go tell them the roof leaks and the walls are damp and—tell them the last tenants died of small-pox

"I'd like to, dear, but it wouldn't pay. The landlord would sue for damages

"Oh, mercy! Isn't something must be done, Mr. Winks, before they decide to take it. Can do think of something?

"I have it. Run down to the piano and sing 'Sweet Violets.'"

A Much Slandered City.

Chicago Boy—"Yup, why do the papers call Chicago a wicked city?"

Chicago Boy—"Because they are bribed to do it by those wicked St. Louis people.

Chicago Boy—"Then that isn't a wicked city, is it?"

Chicago Boy—"No, indeed. Why, of the seven murders here last night, three were outside the city limits."

Winning a Wager.

"Poor John was so fond of gambling," said a bereaved widow. "His last bet was $50 that he could eat 200 clams in twenty minutes."

"Did he win the bet,"

"Yis, he won the bet," sighed the widow, "but the money didn't do us any good. It took every cent of it to bury him."

From the Frying Pan to the Fire.

Minister—I learn that a number of the young men in town have formed an outlawing society.

Son of the Young Man—Yes, sir. We hied ourselves out to make use of a profane word for a year under a severe penalty.

Minister—A most praiseworthy idea and one that I warmly commend. The penalties of profanity is truly deplorable. May I ask what penalty you have assumed?

One of the Young Man—Yes, sir. The member who breaks over is compelled to set up the drinks for the entire crowd.

HER FIRST POEM.

How the Editor Improved the Poem but Insulted the Poet.

"If you please, sir," said the young lady timidly, as the exchange editor handed her a chair, "I have composed a few verses, or partially composed them, and I thought you might help me finish them, and then print them. Ma says they are real nice as far as they go, and pa takes your paper every week."

She was a handsome creature, with beautiful blue eyes, and a crowning glory of yellow as golden rods. There was an expression look on her face, a hopefulness that appealed to the hollest emotions, and the editor's mind was in his mind and in fact the longing of that pure heart if he never spoke another lick.

"May I show you the poetry? continued the lady, not waiting for a reply, as she couldn't get the last lines of the verse, and you would please be so kind as to help me."

Help her! Though he had never had a bit of poetry, the exchange editor felt the spirit of the divine art fired his soul, as he pulled to the bewildering music. Help her! Well he should smile!

"Let me read that verse runs like this," she went on, taking courage from his eyes—

"How softly sweet the autumn air
Blows through the woodland life,
And nature turns from outdoor care
To rest autumn pile, and the exchange editor with a jerk. "Just the thing. It rhymes, and it's so. You take anybody now. Half the people you meet are poets."

"I suppose you know best," interrupted the young girl. "I hadn't thought of it in that way, but you know a better deal of such things. Now, the second verse is more like this:

"The dose grass kiss upon the meer
Look twinkly, merry, and gay
While from the valley comes the roar—"

"Of the matchless river pal!" roared the exchange editor. "There you get it. That finishes the verse as well as to match the first. It combines the fashions with poetry and carries the idea right home to the fireside. Why, I never knew your ability in starting verse with my genius to winding it up. I'd quit the sheets and open in the poetry business to-morrow."

"Think so?" asked the fair young lady. "I don't strike me as keeping up the theme."

"You don't want to. You want to break the theme here and there. The reader likes a change. Oh! yes, where you were up the theme it gets monotonous."

"Perhaps that's so," rejoined the beauty, brightening up. "I didn't think of that. Now I'll read the third verse

"How sally deepe the dying day,
As sulph singe from the glen
And meanine twilight seems to say—"

"The old man's drunk again, wouldn't do, would it?" asked the exchange editor. "Somebody else wrote that, and we might be accused of plagiarism. We must have this thing original. Suppose we say—now, suppose we say, 'Why did I poem my best'

"Is that me?" inquired the sweet, rosy lips, the first time she had heard a lie before. I don't know what it means."

"Now, I lived it's new. Why, I'm sure there's nothing about it that isn't plain enough."

"Thank you, ma'am. I'll never forget your kindness. Where did you say the cross-stitched dogs canvas could be found?"

"At any art embroidery store," and the lady walked away quickly, remarking, to herself:

NEWS OF THE WORLD.

CABLEGRAMS FROM ALL COUNTRIES.

ROYAL VISIT TO IRELAND.

The Prince of Wales's Visit.

DUBLIN, March 11.—Parnell has issued a manifesto addressed to the Irish people, in which he says: "Let the Irish people show the sympathy that of the Prince of Wales.

Most meetings held last evening in all the wards having Home Rule representatives in the Council, and the Councillors were solemnly warned by resolutions that if they vote for doing homage to the "foreign potentate" who is coming to Ireland, they need never look for re-election by their Irish constituents.

Home Rulers Approve the Action of the Parnellites.

DUBLIN Corporation.

LINCOLN (Neb.), March 10.—Patrick Eagan, President of the Irish National League of America, received this evening the following cable message from T. Harthigan, M. P., Honorary Secretary of the League in Ireland, in reference to the action of the Dublin City Council to-day:

DUBLIN, March 10, 1885.

Patrick Eagan, Lincoln, Neb.: The Corporation have to-day by the exception of the National members, by a vote of forty-one to seventeen, to address or entertain the Prince of Wales. THOMAS HARTHIGAN.

Eagan sent the following reply:

LINCOLN (Neb.), March 10, 1885.

Timothy Harrington, M. P.: The cable was received. In very nobly attitude of the Dublin Corporation will send a shield of pride to every true Irish heart. In the name of the Irish National League of America, thank them.

PATRICK EAGAN, President.

FENIANS IN FRANCE.

Forcibly Bulled by Order of the Government.

PARIS, March 10.—An immense sensation has been caused by the stand which the authorities have taken against the Fenian agitation. In addition to the arrest of James Stephens, Eugene Davis and John Mackey yesterday, the police this morning arrested a journalist named Gardiner Tynan, and another Fenian, name not learned. Mrs. Stephens was also arrested, but subsequently released. All persons now under arrest will be expelled from the country to-day. Warrants for the expulsion of other prominent leaders have been issued and further arrests are expected.

ARRESTED AND EXPELLED.

LATER.—Davis, Mackey and Leroy were taken to the frontier of France today and warned not to return.

MORBIDLY ALLOWED TO BEHAVE.

Stephens, Davis and Leroy, and two Australians, who were expelled from France, have gone into Belgium. Morrissey was allowed to remain in Paris.

FRENCH ANXIETY TO EXPLOIT.

Rochefort, in the Intransigeant, protests against the expulsion of Stephens, Davis and Leroy, and says: This action indicates that every is ready to outrage the liberties of refugees, who have sought an asylum in France, a proceeding which the Ministers of the Republic never have dreamed of doing. Stephens' wife was not allowed to leave an hour after his arrival.

British Consular Support at Stephens' Banishment from France.

NEW YORK, March 14.—The Tribune says: The sensation which the news dispatches say was created in Paris by the arrest and banishment from France of James Stephens, is not only in the Quarter, but throughout the city and the country. It is thought that the action of the Government, Stephens' adherence to the Fenian doctrine of open war, his speeches and writings in Ireland and America against the dynasties, has made a host of friends for him among his English enemies.

TELEGRAPH, March 14.—The Nat's London cable says: Fenian leaders were to-day expelled from France on the ground that they were a danger to the peace of France. Stephens made his Dublin, or that part of it, which is to be the seat of the Irish Parliament, the capital of Ireland, which the Irish Parliament of Ireland, which the Irish Parliament of Ireland, which the Irish Parliament

THE MORTAL AND THE IMMORTAL

BY MISS ELEANOR C. DONNELLY.

Go, seek among the monuments of Time,
In shrines by kneels and temples proud—
To whatever place the footsteps of sublime
Have left their impress on the sacred sod—
And be thy search, amidst the wreck and wrong
Alike they witness that the most effacing
Of all the powers that sway the world below
Are those which in secret ministrant work,
Failure and failure, their the dwelling place.
Those ancient monumental records claim
Two: for the one bears the unfailing trace,
And hand hands clasp the centuries of time
They fade away, the generations come
To search for dim or lost inscription
Half, half-effaced, the time-worn, tattered and dumb,
They scarce discover the finely-wrought design,
Or, on the tablet, then, in all the broad
Round earth whereon the jubilant, exultant
Of records deathless live? Yes, there of (lost)
The immortal soul of Man not unimportant
In first impressions whether taken or lost,
The rim or rest, for all of first grade,
Treasures the longest; ever old, yet ever
Those potent words which ever are new, which
And yet (yet not) be all of them, which
Cycle of successive years of death to find
Renewed, unless, for life's brief span
In earth, unless, for the eternities
Of the tombs and adoration of the heads
Of nations, unless to the ever-lasting
Immortality of souls of Faith's sweet word,
Saves on a scroll of changeless Truth,
Unchanged, unchangeable, unchangeable, the skies,
Earth and the earthly after or decay.
Ever, ever, ever, the soul of Man, immortal
Dwells it to those words, yet Man's crumbling flowers
Dwells it to those words, those dear souls of ours,
In God's grand bosom, and, we live for ever!

TOP O' THE MORNING.

AN IRISHMAN'S GREETING ON REVISITING HIS native country.

An correspondent sends a Texas paper the following lines by his Cousin T. Murphy, minister of the Gospel, and Miss Mary Ann Murphy, of Wilkes County, Ga., hoping that it will be found that she is thinner of thirty years on the plains of Texas. The lines, which appeared proved to be her son, the first of conscription in Louisville, Kentucky, early in December, 1862:

As soon as I'm o' but there it is,
Down on the hills of Dublin,
God's angels filling the silent black sail
From the fair, sweet lace of my ireland.
Oh, Ireland! and isn't it good to look,
Like a bird to a rich scholarship,
And with all the peat-up love of my heart,
I bid you the "top of the morning."

This one short hour pays lavishly back
For more a year of mourning,
I'd almost venture another flight,
There's so much joy in returning;
Watching out for the hallowed shore,
All eyes, eyes-from morning,
Oh, Ireland, don't you hear me shout—
"I bid you the top of the morning"

See! there on Clonna's shelves strand
The steeple pointing heavenly heaven,
And the ship's bell ringing her bendland out
"Ye are welcome to the top of the morning!"
Into the shore the wildfinds fly
On islands that know no drooping,
And ought in the cliff ca-ranges charge
A million of waves come leaping

Oh, kindly, generous land!
So teal, so fair, so loving!
Who could be the wandering, wild
And dream of you in idle roaming,
The children are your own, Ireland,
Your heart will sigh for the absent land,
When the hour-glass first filmed it.

And doesn't Old Cove look charming then,
Watching the wild waves' motion,
Longing her back against the lifts
And the tip of her toes in the ocean?
It's a rose, Oh Ireland, that's little!
But maybe their chinking's ever
For the little bit o' pine tree!
The life of a Western rover.

For the mountains, and the prairies,
Is as tired a way grand and fair to see,
As the landscape spread before me
But dreams are dreams, and my eyes would ope
Ere I'd see the "top of the morning."

And many a shelter on the Texas plain,
When the day and the dreams are over,
My thoughts would fly o'er the weary wave
And o'er the ocean, fair Erin!
And the prayer would rise that some future day
All thanks and doubting scattered
I'd help to win for my native land,
The light of young Liberty's morning.

Now, never and falter the great line show
War over the Atlantic!
I feel the breath of the Monster breeze,
Thank God, my exile's ended.
Old ocean, old ocean, old friends again,
The ship and the sea, I'm back to it!
Oh, Ireland, from my heart of hearts,
I bid you the "top of the morning."

Literary Miscellany.

The Hard Heart Softened.

The "January thaw" had set in some weeks earlier than people had expected it, and bits of black frozen earth were just peeped out here and there from beneath the snowy mantle of Uplands Farm, on a day when Joshua Simmons, with grating past in his old fashioned red and blue cart. The roses and white roses on the trellis on each side and the old man eyed them keenly as he drove through the house, muttering to himself—

"Yes, that's it. Just as I expected. Not a stone put up, not a board nailed in its place, not a post straightened, since I was here last June. That is doing autumn work up shiplapps, and no mistake. I suppose he unfolded on my discomfiture he bought at home till next June. Well, he will see. Guess may my what the like about in Joe shall go."

Farmer Simmons was a little, thin, wiry, stooping man of twenty, with a face that might nearly have been handsome, since the features were regular, and the eyes of a clear bright blue, while the complexion was like that of a sound and healthy winter apple, rosy and wholesome to behold. But there was an expression in the old man's face that seemed entirely to mar his good looks—an anxious, anxious expression, which is only visible where the soul beneath it has learned to value money far above the actual rate of money's worth. In two words, the farmer was a "freehander" and also a "miser" man, and his only sister, Mary, looking out of the parlour window, as the sound of the cart scraped on the gravel, felt her spirit quail within her, noting the poverty of his aspect, and groaning only too well on what ground he had come.

"What shall I do?" mused the little blue eyed woman of sixty-three, sinking down on a dusty box of rags which she had been sorting, and hidden by the lady bat curtown face behind a pair of hands that had toiled for many a year for Joe Sylvester and Joe Sylvester's children. "Oh, if Joe was only alive, or at least alive to know that your Joe will say when he comes home to-night!"

"Mother!" called out a bold young voice at the foot of the garret stairs, "uncle Joshua has come, and he is blustering the old mare, but he won't put her in the barn, 'cause he isn't going to stay bit just five minutes. And he frightened poney when she went to meet him at the door, and he tried to hit Rover, only Rover got out of the way of the whip; and he says we are a pack of lazy good for-nothings; and won't you come down, mother? Joe is at home and wants you, and we are all going out to swing to play."

"Yes, Joshua, dear," said his mother, sighing, "I will come. Ask your uncle in, and set a chair for him politely, and tell him where your father has gone, and then—"

"No need to tell me!" said a harsh voice below. "Here, youngster, you be off, and if you go near the mare, I'll let you know what's what. Come down stairs, Mary. Start, now."

Young Joshua clattered noisily down the uncarpeted stairs. Old Joshua came climbing slowly, grumbling to himself in an undertone. "Poor Mrs. Sylvester! ain't her hand upon her heart, and glanced around in her trouble.

"O! O! I wish my poor husband. If he was alive he would know what to do, and he would be sure to be right."

Joshua Simmons appeared, emerging out of the square hole cut in the floor for the garret stairs.

"What in this world are you up here for, Mary?" he growled, as he hastened to meet him.

"I am so sorry you took the trouble to come after me, Joshua," she answered, depressingly. "I should have been down directly."

"Very likely, but I am in a hurry. What are you doing up here?"

She pointed to the rags.

"The peddler comes along to morrow, Joshua, and he always takes my rags. So I am sorting them over."

"And you are likely to have your husband." "Poor Joe! Poor Joe! I wish I knew what of late, his is to be a home for him, and I can believe it all for his sake, Joshua. I am sorry about the children. I wish they could have better clothes, and books to read, and many other things that they seem to crave for. But we are together, and well and happy, so I ought not to repine."

Farmer Simmons locked her full in the face.

"Well, Mary, I have come to say that I want the farm."

"Oh Joshua!"

"Now, don't go to crying! It will do no good. My mind is made up. I have put it off long enough, for your sake, I thought I would have got up with any one else. The farm is running down, the fences are tumbling down, and the walks are in a state, the roads doing up generally; and I must have a tenant here who will keep things song and nice as I like to see them."

"But Joe has been ill, Joshua, as you know. That fever kept him down nearly all summer, and then he cut his foot, and had to lay by nearly the whole autumn. But he is well now, and he is working out to get the money for poor, and in the spring he will do up everything—he will, indeed."

"In the spring he will break his arm or his leg, or set the house on fire, or do something worse," prophesied the farmer. "It's no use talking, Mary! Joe Sylvester is an unlucky man, and you were a fool to marry him, when you might have been John Hardy's wife, and seen your husband rich by this time, instead of out at common day work."

"I see my husband a good husband and father, and an honest man, and that is more than Mrs. Harding can say about her," replied Mrs. Sylvester, with spirit. "I would not change Joe for a king, Joshua! I love him now, poor and unlucky as you call him, better than I did on our wedding-day, when he was reckoned the handsomest young man in all the country round." There was a wrinkle on his face, or a gray hair on his head, that isn't dear to me, for I know they came there before their time, through fretting about me and the children, because he can't give us such a home as he would like to. He has been happier here at the old homestead, Joshua, than I have ever seen him for years past. If you say we must go, of course we must, but I know it will break his heart to leave his father's roof, and his mother's spinning-wheel had stood here, and beakwards and forwards, with the noise danced in the long evenings of winter, left her spirit quail within her, noting the poverty of his aspect, and groaning only too well on what ground he had come.

"What shall I do?" mused the little blue eyed woman of sixty-three, sinking down on a dusty box of rags which she had been sorting, and hidden by the lady bat curtown face behind a pair of hands that had toiled for many a year for Joe Sylvester and Joe Sylvester's children. THE MONITOR.

TWENTY DOLLARS PER AN NUM PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 30, 1885.

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the most rapid, most comprehensive, and most popular form of public opinion, and opinion governs the world. It is the great educator, because it is a social and secular sermon, day an day, a text more possible to the million of money, but a sect of opinion. It is the great teacher, because it is the object of fashion. It is the great reformer, because it is the social world, whatever it may be, reflected in the mirror of the press."—Brownson, "Convertible Elements of Society."

We now create our own money through the instrumentality of the Printing Press, hence whoever controls this power, is placed, the authority of Catholic Journals who defend the Church against the Lies of Infidels, of the Holy Apostolic See, and adhere to its doctrines and principles with devotion and fidelity.—Price 12.

Editorial Notes.

—It is rumored, says the London Standard, that a Dukedom is shortly to be conferred on the Marquis of Ripon, in recognition of his services as Viceroy of India.

—Our Rome correspondent makes some startling disclosures this week concerning Bismarck's plot to elect an anti-pope in 1878. He also pays a glowing tribute to the wisdom, prudence and piety of the present glorious Pontiff which will be thoroughly appreciated by every reader of the MONITOR.

—When Michael Davitt was in Rome he was invited to the residence of the Superior of San Salvatore, in Onda, to meet at dinner a number of distinguished clergymen, Irish and Italians. He was most kindly received by Dr. Pio di Bruno, the founder of this religious house, whose name is well known in America.

—The MONITOR's Irish Parliamentary Fund is considerably increased this week through the generous contributions of a number of gentlemen connected with the Green Mountain Gold Mining Company, at Crescent Mills, Plumas County, who subscribed $21 on St. Patrick's Day. Their names will be found in the list of contributors.

—A letter from Rev. Chas. O'Reilly, Treasurer of the Irish Parliamentary Fund brings the news that the sum of $9,738 46 has been contributed by all the States and Territories of the Union—except California—towards the relief of Ireland. We still thus will make that amount over $10,000, and we hope the generous-hearted Irish-American readers in the Mission will enable us to place that sum in Father O'Reilly's hands when we hope to see him next month.

—A distinguished French officer says: "Khartoum is the key of the Soudan, and the moral effect of its capture by the Mahdi is enormous. This is the greatest military disaster that has happened to England since the Indian mutiny, and can only be offset by a supreme effort that will severely test the new mobilization scheme and all the alleged reforms introduced by the British military authorities during the past quarter of a century.

—A Boston clergyman sent to the Longfellow celebration in Portland recently a poem. In the concluding stanza he remarked:

"He still doth live with us and God!
He lost through earth and heaven have trod."

"Us and God" is truly typical of the Puritan mind which is for ever "hankering after" an opportunity of teaching Omnipotence how to "improve" all His works. There is enough self-pride in the average Puritan to supply a dozen turkeys of the male persuasion with "strutting power" for an indefinite period.

—Rev. Father Lambert's "Notes on Ingersoll" is in its eighth edition of 30,000 copies, which will bring the total number published up to 130,000 copies. Two editions have been "pirated" in England and Canada, and a large edition has been printed in London by the regular publishers. In addition, the work has been translated into a dozen different languages in as many different countries. This is the book Col. Ingersoll thinks is not worth noticing. Evidently Blasphemous Bob knows enough not to hurt his money-making dodge by any dangerous experiments.

—The Irish American says the inhabitants of Brittany—which more than one writer of note has cited as the Ireland of France,"—are as Celtic to day as they were in the time of Cæsar. They still speak the Celtic language, and preserve their Celtic customs. They are a thoroughly civilized, but detest spending half a dozen years in barracks, as required by the French military system. The late military school, Depuy de Lorme, who was thoroughly acquainted with the Celtic language, asked an old Breton, who did not understand a word of modern French, "Where are your sons?" "My sons," was the reply of the old Celt, "they are in slavery among the Gauls." They were in the French army.

—A correspondent informs us that the entertainment given in the hall of the A. O. U. W. in Temescal, which we commented on a couple of weeks since, was not given under the auspices of the A. O. U. W., but was engineered by a Congregationalist preacher who has achieved the unenviable reputation of being a genuine anti-Catholic crank, in the interest of a sectarian Sunday school. Our informant also says that the annoyance caused by the Mormon is disowned by the people of North Temescal, as he is not a denizen of that locality but of an adjoining settlement, a fact upon which we congratulate the numerous intelligent citizens of North Temescal. We hope that hereafter the A. O. U. W. organization will be more careful and not permit its hall to be used as a mill wherein to grind out malignant calumnies against the Catholic Church, as we understand that the members of the A. O. U. W. of Temescal have hitherto acted in a very friendly spirit towards their Catholic neighbors and also that they deeply regret having the name of the Order associated with the gross insults against Catholics perpetrated in their hall, although they were entirely guiltless in the matter.

A Remarkable California Missionary.

Santa Clara College possesses the treasure of the secret of the Fountain of Youth. Padre Magin Catala, born at Moutblanc in the province of Tarragona in Spain, in 1761 When sixteen years of age he joined in Barcelona the Order of St. Francis, in which he made his ecclesiastical studies and was ordained Priest. Desiring to devote himself to the good of his neighbor by the services of a missionary life in America, he obtained from his superiors the permission to come to the Apostolic College of San Fernando in Mexico, from whence the first founder of Christianity in our Californian Padre Junipero Serra—and hundreds of Apostolic Franciscan Missionaries, had been sent to many parts of Mexico, Texas, New Mexico and California, to teach to the poor the gospel of Christ. Father Magin was sent from that college to continue in California the good work commenced by Father Junipero—the Christian civilization of the Indians.

In 1794 he commenced his holy ministrations at the Mission of Santa Clara, and he labored there incessantly till death for the welfare of all, especially of his dear Indians. He instructed them spiritually in the Christian doctrine, preached to them assiduously the lessons of the gospel; he had the women taught and employed in sewing, spinning, sewing and such appropriate occupations, while he kept the men filling the land or working at various mechanical trades, all living a sort of primeval patriarchal life, forming one grand community of from two to three thousand under the Missionary, and all partaking about daily of the fruits of the earth and of their industry. Over a hundred head of cattle were killed weekly for that large family of Santa Clara, who before had to depend for their sustenance on the seeds of wild plants and a few armajos or shellfish. But the spiritual food given them by Padre Magin did them more good and was even more relished. The Indians, no less than the Spanish people, saw in him a sun day and night devoted to their good, ever ready to console them in their afflictions, to visit their sick, and to relieve them in their wants. They loved him and his teaching, and they easily received from his lips the saving lessons of Christianity. The Baptismal Records of Santa Clara show that he baptized no less than 5,000; a great portion of whom were adults.

But what contributed most to attract the Indians to a civilized Christian life was his humility. He mortified life and his evident charity, which he learned chiefly at the foot of the crucifix in the Mission church, where he spent on his knees his spare time, and even more than that; for the Indians often watched him and observed him at late hours of the night absorbed in holy prayer, forgetful of his sweet solitude. They used to relate of him many wonderful facts, such as having been seen by them praying in the church, while he had retired to his room for his night's rest; teaching the wild Indian in distant Sierras which he remained with the Mission; announcing to the pulpit sudden deaths happening at the same time in distant places, or about to take place within a week, with their particular circumstances; responding, at the same time the prayers of the congregation in behalf of the victims of such accidents. Many good old Californians, still living, were actual witnesses of such announcements and their realization, confirm the same statements, which naturally rest on human testimony, and to which no authority is intended to be given till the Holy See may examine and approve them. This and his more edifying Christian life made them all revere and esteem him as a saint, and they frequently called him such.

This universal regard was especially witnessed the day of his funeral—the 22d of Nov. 1830, at the present Mission church of Santa Clara, crowded on that occasion, and not half large enough to contain the people who had come from all parts of the surrounding country, for all fast and expressed with their tears that they had lost their Father they filled the edifice with their loud lamentations, and strove to secure some little piece of his habit, which they treasured as a precious relic.

It has been deemed proper not only to preserve the holy memory of the Apostolic Missionary, but also to take the ordinary steps for his Beatification, should the Holy See, after long and mature examination, find it fit to approve it. With this view the first Process has been carried on, and all preliminary steps on the part of the Diocesan authorities are nearly completed. The proceedings of this judicial ecclesiastical court will then be sent to Rome for the rigid investigation, which, it is to be hoped, will result in the beatification of our California Missionary. Pius IX. of happy and holy memory, is said to have once remarked, that in the United States we have not got many Saints. It is to be hoped, that God will grant us to have one in Padre Magin.

Spain and the Holy See.

A rumor has been circulating to the effect that a new difficulty has arisen between the Spanish Government and the Holy Father in consequence of a visit paid to the Spanish Embassy to the Holy See by Don Jorge the King and Queen of Italy. There have undoubtedly been negotiations of a strained character going on between the Madrid Cabinet and Cardinal Jacobini, but there have given place to more friendly feelings, and the Marquis de Molins has already arrived in Rome, and has been received by the Holy Father. The difficulties have arisen from the exaggerated Carlism shown by some members of the Catholic party, and from the recent educational schemes. The visit of King Umberto and Queen Margherita to the Spanish Embassy to the Vatican was a private one, the omission to officially call on the Pope, and the reception by the Pope of the Duke of Montpensier, Duke of Leon XIII. would take umbrage at such an event, which, as a well-known Catholic statesman said, was no more than a lunch would be given by a noted Catholic to the son of Victor Emmanuel.

Archbishop Gibbons Pays his Respects to the President.

WASHINGTON, March 25.—Archbishop Gibbons of Baltimore, called at the Executive Mansion by appointment this afternoon, in company with Mr. Merrick, and was by the latter presented to President Cleveland. The President rose in the Blue parlor. After a pleasant conversation, lasting half an hour, the Archbishop took his leave, and, escorting him to the President a cordial invitation to repeat his call.

Three Centennial Anniversaries.

This present year will bring the centennial anniversaries of the deaths of three Popes. Pope Pius VI. died at Gregory VII., one of the most prominent of St. Peter's successors, of Martin IV., and of Pius fourteenth (Benedetto). (Benedetto) The first died in exile at Salerno on May 29th, 1785, breathing forth the celebrated words, "I have loved justice and hated iniquity, therefore I die in exile." Pope Martin IV., elected in 1281, distinguished for his prudence and sagacity, expired in Perugia on March 28th, 1285. The last Pontiff, (Gregory VIII., governed the Church for nearly thirteen years. He was a man of reformed calendar, the foundation of the Roman or Gregorian College, of the English, Greek, Maronite, and other Colleges in Rome for the youth of divers nations; the institution of the Sacred Congregation of the "Visita Apostolica." Nor is this all. He sent the learned Jesuit, F. Antonio Possevin, into Sweden, where he recovered the abjuration of King John III., and arranged the ecclesiastical affairs of that kingdom; he also entertained the same plan with a mission to Ivan IV. of Russia, who had invoked his aid in settling his difficulty with King Stephen of Poland. He had the consolation to give audience, in 1585, to the celebrated Japanese Embassy, which in the name of three Kings declared homage and obedience to the See of Peter, while the last act of his Pontificate was the publication, under the supervision of the amiable Cardinal Baronius, of the Roman Martyrology, inserting therein the name of the great Pope St. Gregory VII., establishing throughout the entire Church, for July 26th, the Feast of St. Anne, with office of Double Rite; and by the Brief of Premulgation, of February 14th, 1584, enjoining all Patriarchs, Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, and Superiors of churches to conform to the new edition in office in choir. He died in Rome, April 10th, 1585, aged 83 years, and was buried in the Vatican Basilica. In eight promotions he created thirty-four Cardinals, amongst them the future Popes Urban VII., Gregory XIV., Innocent IX., and Leo XI., all four raised to the honor of the Purple in the Consistory of December 12th, 1583.

More Startling Statistics of Drink in Europe.

A few weeks ago we laid before the readers of the MONITOR some rather startling statistics concerning the increase of the sale of liquors throughout the German Empire, and inasmuch as the Temperance Quarterly Journal is trying to attract attention in every portion of this land, we now subscribe from no less an authority than the London Times the following statistics showing the rapid growth of intemperance among the natives of other portions of Europe:

In France the consumption of alcohol is over 1,000,000 litres per annum, enough to fill a lake 1 mile in length, 1 mile broad, and 40,000 in depth. In Belgium the consumption of gin is certain of the western departments, and in Holland the consumption of gin is 2 gallons per head, and both wines, which is equivalent to from 8 to 10 gallons of spirits. In Sweden and Norway the consumption of wine is the most fruitful form of intemperance, and in Denmark it is the spirit from grain, but not certain that in most consumer and causes the most alarming increase. In Finland there were 45,000 drinkshops in 1881, but this number has been reduced by two thirds. In Russia a reduction has also taken place from 22,000 to 12,000 in the last three years, but they are very considerably increased. In Servia the consumption of spirits has increased from 1,000,000 litres in 1876 to 3,000,000 litres in 1882, and 3,200 in 1879, and 11,000 in 1880, while the revenue from spirits has increased from 1,000,000 francs per annum, or 1,000,000, principally in the last three years. In Spain, according to a report published by the Social Statistical Society, the consumption of spirits in 1882 was 1,000,000 litres, and in 1883 it was 1,200,000 litres, principally consumed by the lower classes. According to a report published by the Swiss Statistical Bureau, it would seem that in Sweden the consumption of spirits has not been successful in diminishing drunkenness or the mortality from alcohol. The consumption of spirits in Sweden between 1876 and 1880 being 62, while between 1881 and 1882 it was 72 per head of population, and the number of many destitutions and drinkshops, there is a decrease in the number of drunkenness. In Norway, however, the number of drinkshops is rapidly increasing, where alcohol makes such ravages. Between 1871 and 1880 the number of licenses from alcoholism has doubled, the proportion being 1 to 1 per cent for the men and 41 per cent for the women. In Christiania, a Swiss physician, in of the opinion that ethyle, alcohol, or the alcohol of wine, is comparatively innocuous, but that the amylic alcohol from grain or potatoes is absolutely poisonous, and it is this baneful stuff that is the principal brew for themselves and doctor children, and for their neighbors.

A Jesuit Father Speaks of Public Schools.

Rev. F. R. Clarke, S. J., editor of the London Month, and who spent some time in this country last year, thus plainly sets forth the fatal effects of the Public School system upon Catholic children if some steps are not taken by American Catholics to avert the evil:

I need not remind my Catholic readers of the peculiar difficulties in the way of Catholics who are striving to carry out the course of two or three generations, if they are to preserve the faith of Catholic children in America. It is terrible when I contemplate the unequal struggle, and I remember that, in the natural course of things, the children educated at the public schools will grow up weak in faith, ignorant of their religion, unable to face the objections of the infidel, ready to accept the Socialistic teaching, and prepared to do anything that they may encounter for a comfortable country. It is more necessary to say that the parents ought to instruct them in their religion at their home. What can be more absurd than to expect the mechanic or artisan, who has spent his day in the workshop, to be able to do the work of a trained teacher? Why, he has enough to do to instruct his own children, who have neither time nor talent! Even if the parents be the teachers, they would not have the necessary knowledge, and sometimes are so utterly ignorant of the rudiments of the faith. At the Sunday school, even if the children can be prevailed to attend with regularity, comparatively little can be done. Faith is a delicate plant, and it is not to be sustained day by day with such scanty care. On night as well expect a young child to be healthy and robust who was fed only at the week-ends and kept in the bath-house on Sundays. But the public schools are not merely starved all the week, but are unfortunately fed on poison or at least on food that is. There is no alternative education between honoring God and dishonoring Him, between a religious and irreligious education. A non-religious education is a contradiction in terms. A religious education is possible in many subjects, but instruction in the religious subject, which should be the soul of the heart as well as of the head, of the will as well as of the intellect, is not possible in a mixed school, on a secular basis. It would appear either to ignore God or to dishonor Him. Education can only proceed on the principle that the child is not a mere jumble of teeth and sense, which is intellectual and moral, but a living, breathing, thinking, willing child, with a soul to be saved or lost, and with a heart and conscience, which is the inferior and lower motives of interest or necessity, or else on the higher motives of love for God, of gratitude to Him, of reverential fear of His judgments, of all the sacred truths to which Christianity appeals with Divine persuasiveness.

—It is extraordinary what curious names papers have now-days. A new weekly called Adam has been established in Texas. It is an Irish paper with a healthy Catholic tone, and we wish it every success.

Is Masonry the Enemy of God?

Notwithstanding all the proof that has hitherto been printed in proof of the fact that Masonry is diabolically opposed to Christianity, there are still some persons foolish enough to think that the sect is falsely charged in this respect. Here, how ever, is additional proof of the atheistical teachings of that demoralizing secret society:

A French Masonic paper called Lucifer, an organ of the sect, recently made one of the following Satanical suggestions to the English brethren of the mischievous mystic tie:

"The Prince of Wales, in his character of future Pope of the Anglican Church, cannot repudiate the United Ancient Order well understand. The Grand Architect is part of the constitution, like the king or queen. Like them, he is a peg (chevill). He plays no other part therein. But a peg presumptuous cannot expel his fellow peg. The office of monarch is not very pleasant, and is a sinecure. The consecrations of the late Holy Father against this violation of the rights of the Church were unfortunately silent contempt, and during nearly twenty years the Polish Church continued to be administered, as far as the power of the Czar extended, by mere tools of his ministry.

"Less than two years ago the present Emperor—alarmed on the one hand by the growth of Nihilism among his Polish subjects, and on the other by the ever deepening discontent of the Polish Catholics—made some apparent attempt at conciliating his latter. Negotiations were begun with the Holy See. The Czar's ministers, and after long discussion a definite compromise was made, by which the Russian government undertook to restore to the Polish Church of new Catholic Bishops by the Holy See, and promised to allow them to exercise their episcopal functions without hindrance. The four surviving exiled Bishops were released and ten new Prelates were named by the Holy See with the full consent of Russia, and they were all Russian subjects, who likely has from 1 out that it pays than better for a prince not to be Russian, in those days he has a Russian Czar, and the Pope is a man who was Sterling his "Pontifical Equipment of the Vatican Decrees, at the Pope, to make a doubt, that a few such studies repeated, would cure the Pope of his anxiety as his successors blessed himself with the Holy Ghost, and kneels in Ireland.

On the other hand, a much more important, because a secret and discriminating one, the carefully preparing for more perilous times. Pius IX. was a man of great heart, and very kind. Pius, as a chief of opposition of what had been done in Poland, and the Pope, and the Father Masters society in that city and was the Pope's Nuncio in Brussels, and Papal Ar Ventosia, Vancouver's Island, another man, who had been a Jesuit, and who, by his zeal and pious Christian, had gone to Sicily, and there had converted Garibaldi, and Pius, W. McGinn, D. Brady, J. Hall, H. Hall, Jas. Hall, Jas. Hall, Jr., Jas. Hall, Jr., Jas. Hall, Jr.,

Farm and Home.

THE HEN AND THE HONEY-BEE.

A lady boo, the story goes,
Loquacious, pert and self-conceited,
Pecked a bee upon a rose,
And thus the busy insect greeted:

"I've nodded at you well for many a day,
In garden blooms and meadow clover;
Now here, as before, in idle play,
From morn till night an idle rover.

"While I discreetly bide at home,
A faithful wife, the live long day,
About the fields you lilly roam;
Without the least regard for others.

"While I lay eggs and hatch them out,
You seek the flowers to extract and hoard,
And, sipping honey, steal about,
At best, a cool for nothing variant."

"Nay," said the bee, "you do me wrong;
I'm useful, too—perhaps you doubt it;
Because, though toiling all day long;
I seem to make a free shout it.

"I toss now with the and sweep my hive,
And to be here lofty may work in quiet;
To useful acts needs more alive
Than you with all your cackling riot."

Be Not Above Work.

"Never be ashamed of your business," is a wholesome proverb. If one has an honest business he need not feel ashamed of it. None young persons act as if they thought many kinds of honest work menial and degrading. But they are wrong.

"Man hath his daily work of body and mind appointed, with guidance to govern it duly."

When the service is for the good of man or the glory of God, and is performed in the right spirit, it must ever be ennobling. It is no work to do to be unwilling, slavish spirit that degrades us. Toil is manly, even if it be that of a boot-black. "If I were a boot-black," said a noble Christian man, "I would strive to be the best boot-black in the world." The lad who determines to do his best everywhere, in every place, however lowly, where honest work is needed, soonest rises to honor.

"If little labor, little are our gains;
Man's fortune is the thrift he makes."

Not long since a young man was asked to carry a small package of written papers to his sick relative, but he turned up his nose with the same, and said, "I don't—can't send it by an expressman."

One evening, near the hour for closing a store in Philadelphia, a bundle of prints was ordered to be made by a lady, and more than a block distant. The carts and porters had gone. The merchant requested one of his young men to deliver the bundle, but as he did so he perceived a look of disgust in the clerk's face, and without saying another word he returned to his desk put on his hat, passed out the bundle, and walked off to deliver it himself leaving his young clerk with mortification as well as with fear of losing a good position. There are some city-bred boys who act as if they were "above carrying a market-basket home." Even when mother is bearing a heavy basket for your sake, they think it "degrading" to be seen doing such a thing. They soon get too big to wait on themselves. They grow to be of less use in the world than butterflies.

Family Life.

If there be anything which makes life tolerable it is the home, the place of intimate family.

Strange to say, however, most people could count upon the fingers of one hand the really happy homes they know: the homes that is in which there is not only a tender care for each other, but an unselfish independence and a kindly interest always manifested by every other fellow-member.

A daughter will always find her mother anything she may want, and brush her brother's hair, mend and hem for them ere the male members of the house start off for work in the morning.

Brothers too, will often take their sisters out for a jaunt or little attentions which cost nothing and are so much appreciated.

This is the household into which a young man who wants a good wife will do well and wisely to marry. There may not be much show about the girls, but he will find that they are companionable, and that their disposition stands the test of wear.

Not only enough to fall in love with a girl when she is arrayed for a party, and looks the flesh of pleasure and fun.

When life deepens and darkens, however, and little family worries come in a man wants something more than a pretty drawing-room ornament for a wife; he needs a real good hearted, honest, womanly soul and helpmate.

The Silver Prune.

A resident of Santa Barbara visiting in Oregon, writes as follows: "Apples are a drug. In Chehalem Valley an orchard was pointed out by a man who said that a thousand bushels had gone to waste annually for the seven years he had lived near it. Large quantities of prunes had been planted. A comparatively new variety, the Silver prune is highly spoken of. I had noticed it in the California catalogue when selecting some more trees for the extension of my Lompoc orchard. At Dayton, Or., I was helped at dinner to some immense prunes, each one of which was a full two inches before eating. They are very sweet, needing no sugar in cooking, mean firm and well flavored. My admiration led me to inquire the name, when I was told it was the Silver prune, of which Mr. Alderman of this town was the originator. A call upon him elicited the following concerning it: He believes it to be a seedling from Cole's Golden Drop, but is doubtful and hesitant in so far as being larger fruit—some as large as hen's eggs; it was a prune, however; all that I had met that had grown it to spoke. He claims that it bears largely on the body of the tree—even on spurs of the trunk below the branches. Therefore, he thought it not so liable to break the tree down, but I saw some trees badly broken through overbearing of this description. It is much the color of the Golden Drop, and some nurserymen for a while contended that it was the same. But I notice that it is now catalogued as a distinct variety. Mr. A., gave me sample of the dried fruit which bore cut his neighbors as to size and sweetness. I mailed home some scions for grafting, and shall take a few trees when I return—probably in April. He put 1,000 trees in one orchard. Fifty thousand are ordered for California, but there are not that many at hand."

A Humming-Bird's Umbrella.

In front of a window where I worked last summer was a butter-nut tree. A humming-bird built her nest on a limb that grew near the window, and we had an opportunity to watch her closely, as we could look right into the nest from the window. One day there was a heavy shower coming up, and we thought we would see if she covered her young during the storm; but when the first drops fell she came and took in her bill one or two of the leaves growing close to the nest and laid this leaf over so it completely covered the nest. Then she flew away. On looking at the leaf, we found a hole in it, and in the side of the nest was a small crick that the leaf was fastened to or hooked on. After the storm was over the old bird came back and unhooked the leaf, and the nest was perfectly dry.

HOW WASHINGTON TOOK THE OATH.

Scenes at His Inauguration in this City Ninty-Ofva Years Ago.

On Thursday, April 30, 1789, in this city, George Washington was inaugurated the President of the United States. At about 6, both houses of Congress, in session in this city, counted the votes for President and Vice President, and with the number of electoral votes was sixty-nine, of which the Excellency George Washington had all, and was unanimously elected President; and the Honorable John Adams had thirty-four and was elected Vice President. Charles Thompson was appointed to inform the President of his election, and set out for Mount Vernon with an expedition, and Sylvanus Bourne was dispatched to perform the same duty with respect to the Vice President. He proceeded at once to Jamaica.

On Monday, April 20, the Vice President arrived in New York, and on the following day was invested with his office and installed in the chair of the Senate. Six days before Washington had left Mount Vernon on his journey to New York. Through Delaware, Pennsylvania and New Jersey, he was attended by imposing military and civic escort and greeted with immense public demonstrations. From time to time he stopped under the principal arches erected in his honor and addressed the people. Odes composed in his honor were sung and flowers were scattered before him. A vessel manned by 13 pilots, all clad in blue jackets, and with white hats, came down the Delaware to meet him, and conducted him in state to Philadelphia. Here he was received on landing by Governor Clinton, the officers of the State and Corporation, and a military escort, and conducted to a house in Queen street prepared for the occasion. At nine o'clock the day, following, which was Thursday, the people assembled in the various churches to implore the blessings of Heaven on the new government, its favor and protection to the President, and success and acceptance to his administration. At noon the President moved from the home of the President in Cherry street, through Queen, Chestnut and Broad streets, to Congress Hall in the following order:

Colonel Lewis and two officers.
Captain Stokes, Troop of Horse.
Artillery—Major Van Heers.
Grenadier—Major Lenox.
German Grenadiers under Captain Steiba.
Major Richer—Infantry—Major Christie.
Sheriff on Horseback.
Chief Marshal on Horseback.

The President and suite, with assistant and chief officers on either side.

Committee of the Representatives.
Hon. Mr. Jay, Gen. Knox, Chancellor Livingston and several gentlemen of distinction.

When within a proper distance of the hall the troops formed a line on both sides of the way. The President, passing through, was conducted to the Senate Chamber and introduced to both houses of Congress. Immediately after, accompanied by the two houses, he was conducted into the gallery adjoining the Senate Chamber and fronting broad street, which was decorated with a canopy and curtains of red interwoven with white for the occasion. Then in the presence of an immense concourse of citizens, the oath prescribed by the Constitution was administered to him by the Hon. R. R. Livingston, Chancellor of the State of New York. The Chancellor then proclaimed him President of the United States, which was followed by the discharge of thirteen cannon and loud shouting by the spectators. The President bowed his acknowledgments and then returned with the two houses to the Senate Chamber, where he delivered his inaugural address. These are extracts of that historic document:

"No people can be bound to adore the invisible hand which conducts the affairs of men more than the people of the United States. Every step by which they have advanced to the character of an independent nation seems to have been marked by some token of providential agency; and to the important revolution just accomplished in the system of their united government, the tranquil deliberation and voluntary consent of so many distinct communities, from which the event has resulted, can not be compared with the means by which most governments have been established, without some return of pious gratitude along with an humble anticipation of the future blessings which the past seems to presage.

"These reflections, arising out of the present crisis, have led me to take a review of those principal events, operating much upon my feelings, which have attended my life, from the time that I first entered upon the military stage of my country, until the period of my retirement from the public stage. Retiring from the theatre of action, with the blessings of my fellow citizens, is new to my feelings, and I hope it will be considered as the last act of my public life, when I bid a final adieu to all the honors of public life, and flatter myself that I shall be allowed to spend the remainder of my days as a citizen under the government of laws, the foundation of which I have assisted to lay, and which, I hope, will be found to be productive of the happiness of my fellow citizens.

"Among the vicissitudes incident to life no event could have filled me with greater anxiety than that which relinks the weight of another and greater care upon me, second only to that which I owe to my country. In the discharge of this duty it will be my chief desire that the path of duty may be so plain as to prevent my wandering from it. In this place I feel myself called upon to mention the Senate and House of Representatives as the bodies to whom I look for guidance and support, and it will be more pleasing than profitable to me to rely on their wisdom and virtue for support. It is a maxim which I have always adopted as the guide of my conduct in life, and it is to them I now resort for the benefit of their experience.

"I find myself bound to express my ardent desire that it may be the duty and disposition of the government of the United States to make provision for the encouragement of those who wish to devote themselves to the service of their country in the military and naval departments; and I hope that the wisdom of Congress will so far consider the situation of the officers of the late army, who have served during the war, as to place them on such ground in their future prospects as will induce men of character to continue in the service of their country.

"I shall take care to inform Congress of the progress of the United States in their agriculture, commerce and manufactures, and will lay before you such measures as will tend to the improvement of your country, and to the happiness of your fellow citizens

ROYALTY NOT WANTED.

T. P. O'Connor, M. P., Thinks the Prince of Wales Had Better Keep Out of Ireland.

T. P. O'Connor, M. P., an influential lobbyist in the subcamp of the Irish Parliamentary party, in a letter to the Prince of Wales, which appeared in the London Times, says that the Prince of Wales is entitled "Albert Edward" and not "Edward" in the contending parties "Albert," and the Prince of Wales, Mr. O'Connor, who is a strictly politician, says the corporation of Dublin will present a constitutional policy, and will refuse to pay any respect to Lord Spencer, even though he should have obtained for himself the protection of the hair to the throne. In the same way everyone in Ireland will sympathize with a keen pity the fate of one person who go to the lions and to drawing-rooms which it is accepted the Prince of Wales and his wife are about to hold, and to pay the duchess a decent in the middle of their patients; it is, because in the middle of the nation in the number of rare, a constitutional monarchy, and the Irish people have no other home to their minds the popular feeling, and any public man who would dare to take any part in the reception of the Prince and Princess would forfeit forever all chance of obtaining popular forgiveness, much less popular favor. To make the business complete, it is announced that several trade unions will be combined. It would contribute to the proof that the Irish people had, after all, not surrendered the habits of boycotting, which, if it be true by such transparent action, the Prince of Wales or the Prince and Princess of Wales to be boycotted just now, and should be carried out to the letter, would be a thing calculated to heal, would produce a sympathetic feeling between the two countries. They will be regarded as having taken up the struggle between the Irish people and a foreign land bigotment, the side of the people and the liberties of the Irish people, and no other record could war blot out the severity of such an attitude as a course of grace and an issue so passionate as these two countries have. The Prince of Wales and his wife must make their choice. They must choose between the friendship of the people in vassalry, or their side as long as they are in the government of they must be noticed. Lord Spencer's friends the Irish people regard as their enemies.

TREASURE FOUND IN IRELAND.

A Punishing Farmer Finds a Box Full of Gold.

An Irish exchange relates the following curious circumstance: Some few months ago a man while ploughing a field in the neighborhood of Longford, and the property of Lord Longford, turned up a box in the ground which broke it, and scattered some of the contents. The ploughman, he did not mind, and the man proceeded to plough and sow the field. When the harvest came, he reaped and gathered some of the broken pieces of gold, and sold them to a jeweller in Longford. The jeweller bought the coins, and then taken passage good price, and sold it to a jeweller in Dublin, who gave him a sum of the hundred of these gold coins

EASTER BELLS.

Over the breast of the budding earth,
The verdant mantle of spring is spread with bloom,
Over the wondrous white waiting tombs
Are nodding shadows of sweet plants,
Ring out sweet bells with a joyous chime,
Ring! ring the dawn of the Easter time!

Ring! ring!
In the rock-ribbed glens of the mighty hills,
Till the laughing streamlets dance with joy
At the magic call of your vibrant thrills,
Resonant as the hearing wind and wave,
Till the lone wilderness hears the joyous chime
Of the Angels song
Proclaiming the Easter holiday.
Ring! ring!
Ring! ring! ye bells, again, again,
Till the joyous tones in the valleys take up the
Ring! ring! ye bells, again, again,
Ring your melodious chime across the land,
Ring your joyous tones in grateful tones
Sent up to Heaven in sincere praise,
As the welcome holiday after is spread,
Let Christ is risen from the dead.

THE RESURRECTION.

All hail! to the glory and gladness of day,
Hail! to the world cast in sunshine and joy
Hail, O ye nations! the shadow hath fled,
And the light cast out of the realm of the dead.
The sunlight dispelled, with the remain glow,
The shadows that filled the long night-time
with woe
The tempest that blighted a world in its wrath,
The death that walked o'er its unsparing path,
Their shroud is lashed, for a radiant form
Filled the sepulchre, and the frame of the way of the storm.
And the spirit of the brightness hath silenced the grief
Of the mourners that rode on the blasts of the night
O hide thorn of Easter! O beauty benign,
When every mourner for ever shall shine!
The life-spring hath rushed from the stream of the grave
From the tomb of the Victor who suffered to save.
Lovo kindled the splendor, and gilded the glaze,
Tinting the pensive that brightened world drawn
Thy wing trending darkness for ever is gone,
The light long cherished in ye your shall last,
Thy hope of the world, O! thy magic is Bringing strength to the sickness, and life to the dead
Out the hamlet's low roofs and the city's proud towers
O Sapphire hosts and Athenian belles!
O Sunbeams dancing, ye valleys that smile,
Where the lone flower beauty and blooms o' the wild
Where the "white stilts" of Britton rise, clothed in Spring
Where, thrown by her Tiber, she glorious Rome,
Where the Alps of Switzerland, Sea, Alpine
Mountains
Hallowed by the spell of its islands of balm;
Yes, take to the Alp horn, the valleys look forth,
Where the lone bell is hold on the Isle of the North
Where Albion hath hills, and the ocean, hath sea,
And melancholy calmer in the forest-walled West,
Ye the sole heritage of the children of day
Redemption hath hatched the vanish of its ray,
Hailed long, O nations! resent Easter-tide, Vieg,
Let jubilee be authentic triumphantly rise!
Let the silent tongue of the Dumb jubilant rise,
Let the tongue shed ow it their halo of light!
Let the tongue of the Dumb, the bright Easter
Hail!
Wait praise to the Risen, the Conqu'ror
Hail!
To Him who hath lessened the bonds of the slave,
Blessed the dark valley, and gladdened the grave,
For so immort can hark in the pathway once trod
By the Master of heaven, earth's Saviour and God!

The Story of Lost Alice.

CHAPTER I.

Why did I marry her! I often asked my self, half the question, in the dage that succeeded the marriage, half the question, why I had married so soon. Yet I loved her, so I love yet, I suppose.

She was, perhaps, the strangest character of her age. Her ideas were peculiar, her temperament her; and I often think, when I recall her, she was more a spirit, quiet, fairy, as she was physically, than a woman, that I had comprehended her yet. There are many thoughts nestling in her brain of which I know nothing, and fashes of feeling lost on as her pure nature and soul, and by her again, as empirus might steal a glimpse of the outer world through the golden gates and turn to their brilliant pulsed celestial home. She is my wife. I have her and love her as no other can. She knows my name, and sits at the head of my table; she rides beside me, and I can my carriage, or takes my arm as we walk; and yet I know and feel, at the time, that the darling of my past has fled from me forever, and that it is only the ghost of the girl Alice, whom I won in the bloom of her bright youth, that lingers near me now.

She was not a child when I married her, though she was very young. I mean, that her life had taught her lessons which are generally given only to the gray haired, and had left her spirit as pure and unsullied as light to the old. She had been an unloved child, and in the spy of affection she was left herself, and entirely dependent on her own emotions. Friends and family she had none, so she was constrained laughingly to say; but I have since found out that her sorrow were lasting, and in happy homes, even at the time when she accepted that awful trust for herself, and went out of the great world to fulfil it. Of this part of her life she never spoke; but one who knew her there had told me much. It was a time of struggle and pain, as well it might have been. Fresh from the life of a large boarding-school, she was little fitted for the battle of a great world, alone; and the same cause to say pain as I think, with a kind of wonder, on the child who grew from childhood to maidenhood, unlike at which strong men have quailed, and made herself a name, and a position, and a home. She was a child—at first a drudge, for the wealthy poor, poorly paid, and unappreciated. By and by, brighter days dawned, and the wolf went away from the door. She was admired, read, sought after, and, above all, paid. Even then, she could not see the mission she had prepared so dear a rate. She held her heart in her hand, and it was wrong and tortured every day.

"I may as well stop breathing as stop loving," she would say, with a bright smile. "Don't talk to me about my folly. Let me go on with my toys; and, if they break in my hand, you cannot help it, and I shall not cause to you the sorrow."

She was not beautiful; but something—whether it was her bright, happy face, or the mellow tones of her voice—bewitched people, and made them like her. Men did the maddest things imaginable for her sake; and not only young men to whom folly was pardonable, but those who should have been too wise to be caught by the sparkle of her eyes, or the music of her laugh. She did not trust them; her early life had taught her better; but I think she liked them for awhile, till some newer fancy came, and then she danced past them, saw, was gone.

It was in the country that I met her first, and there she was more herself than in the city. We were distant connections by marriage, though we had never seen each other, and the fates sent me to spend my summer vacation with my mother's aunt, in a country village, where she was already domesticated. I had a kind of horror of her. I hardly know why. I was a steady, grave, quiet sort of lawyer, and hated to have my short holiday of rest and quiet broken in upon by a fun lady. I said as much to my aunt, the morning I arrived, and she only said, "Alice Kent is here," with which she quelled me. She looked over her spectacles in quiet wonder as I gave her a slight sketch of the lady's city life, as I had had it from the lips of "Mrs. Grundy" herself.

"Well, live and learn, they say. But whoever would think it was our Alice you are talking of, Frank! However, I'll say no more about her! You'll have plenty of time to get acquainted with her, in the month you mean to pass here. And we are glad to see you, and your bedroom is ready, the one you used to like."

I took up my hat, and strolled away to have a look at the farm. By and by, I got over the orchard wall, and crossed the brook, and the high road, and went out into the green behind the house, where farthest peted Fred on the head; when she rode past the house at a hand gallop on her gray pony, Fin Darwin, and leaped him over the garden gate, and shook her whip sensily in my face, I laid aside my book to admire her riding, and never thought her unwomanly or ungraceful.

We grew to be great friends—like brother and sister, I used to say to myself. How she liking guided gratefully into driving, I could not have told. I met her one day in the village street. I turned a corner, and came upon her suddenly. She was walking briskly along, with her dog beside her, and her eyes fixed upon the ground, looking grave and very thoughtful than I had ever seen her before. At sight of me her face lighted up brightened suddenly, yet she passed me with a slight nod and a smile, and look her way towards home. Seeing that she was grieved, I followed her, and finding the sudden bound with which I had left my work gone up to meet it, I knew she were to such other.

"Alice!" she turn I reached home, after a musing walk. The farmer and his wife had gone to bed, the children were at a merry making at the next house, and a solitary light burned from the parlor window, which was open. The full moon shone fairly in a sky without a cloud. I unfastened the gate and went in; and there in the open door sat Alice, with a light shawl thrown over her shoulders, her head resting on the shaggy coat of the Newfoundland dog. His beautiful brown eyes watched me as I came up the path, but he did not stir.

"I sat down near her; but on the lower step, so that I could look up in her face.

"Alice, you do not look well."

"I am well, Frank. I am going away to-morrow."

"And that I was cutting rather ridiculous figure, but I put a bold face upon the matter, and asked coolly.

"Are you alone Kent?"

"People said me so."

"Then I suppose I may call you cousin, or I am Frank Atherton?"

"Cousin Frank! We have been expecting you this week. When did you come?"

"Just now."

She made room for me beside her. We talked long. Occasionally recall friends, and the old homestead of the Athertons, which had seen, though I for the last time. Not one about the house, and our friends who were then living there, and I had known and looking now and then at her, as she sat with the remained falling round her, and the great dog lying at her feet. I wondered, almost as my aunt had done, if this was indeed the Alice Kent of whom I had heard so much. She was dressed plainly, very plainly, in a kind of gray material, that fell around her in light soft folds. A knot of white ribbon fastened her linen collar, and a gipsy hat, lying beside her, was trimmed with the same ribbon. Her small chain, like a thread of gold, and a diamond ring, were the only ornaments she wore. Yet I had never seen a dress I like so well. She was tall (too tall, I should have said, had she been any one else; for, when she was standing, her head was almost on a level with mine) and slender, and moved lightly in all her movements. Her brown hair was soft and pretty, but she wore it carelessly pushed away from her forehead; and arranged with that intent they I should have expected in a city belle. Her features were irregular, full of life and spirit, but decidedly pretty, her complexion fair, her mouth rather large, frank and smiling; her eyes were arched, as if they were asking questions; and her eyes large, and of a soft gray, very pleasant to look into, and yet penetrating too, as I found afterwards to my cost. Those eyes were the only beauty she possessed, and she unconsciously made the most of them. When they laughed, it was almost a pity to look at her, the bright beaming glance they gave; but, when they darkened suddenly and grew more and deeper, and looked up into the face of any interested enough with one to notice peculiar to themselves, heaven help him!

"I thought I knew her only five minutes. I felt like, when I chanced to look up and meet a curious glance she had fixed on me. She had a habit of talk, and was sitting, sink her lips half apart and a lovely color mantling on her cheek, stealing my face intently, when our eyes met. There was an electric kind of shock in the gaze. I saw the color deepen and go up to her forehead, and a shiver ran over me from head to foot. I was dangerous for me to watch that blush, but I did; and I longed to have it come, and wondered what thoughts had brought it.

"Frank, bring me my hat," she said to her dog, affectly to you. "It is time for me to go home to supper, I suppose. Are you hungry, cousin Frank?"

"Yes—no. I answered, with my thoughts still running on that blush.

She laughed good naturedly, and took the hat from the Newfoundland, who had brought it in his mouth.

"How fond you are of that great dog! I said, as we rose from our seat beneath the tree.

"Fond of him!" She stooped down over him with a sudden impetuous movement, took his head between her two hands, and kissed the beauty spot on his forehead. "Why, I love him, cousin Frank! Why, the dog is my life! He is the only thing on earth who is or has been true to me, and the only thing—" She stopped short, and laughed.

"That you have been true to," I said, finishing the sentence for her.

"So people say," she answered, with a laugh. "But look at him, look at those beautiful eyes, and tell me if I may not help loving him. My poor old Fred! Nobody else in the world cares for him."

She sighed, and patted his head again, and he stood wagging his tail and looking up into her face, with eyes that were as sad, sweetful, and, what was better far, trustful of love and sympathy.

"I doubt if you will long remain so alone," said, after we had walked a few steps. "And Fred is longing for a mate, I always give him one through the woods. Would you mind?"

"Oh dear no!"

The next moment she was off like the wind, and the dog racing after her, laughing till the woods rang again. I saw that night no more.

CHAPTER II.

I was, as I have already said, a grave, steady going lawyer, trying to work a respectable middle age, with one or two gray hairs showing among my black locks. I had had my dreams and fancies, and my hot, eager, generous youth, like most other men; and they had passed away. But one thing I had not known, one thing I had missed (save in my dreams), and that was a woman's love.

I never gave my visions a body and a name, they were totally unlike all the female kind I had seen, and I used to think if friends reverian was a slight, delicate, gentle creature, with a pure pale face, sweet lips, the blossom and closest of eyes, the softest and finest of golden hair, and a voice low and sweet, like the murmuring of an Æolian harp. And she sat by my chair in silence; loving me always, but forbearing me sometimes, and her name was Mary. I dare say, if I had met the original of this placed picture in life, I should have wooed and won her, and have been utterly miserable.

So, as a matter of course, I fell into danger now. When Alice Kent went singing and dancing through the house, leaving every door and window open as she went, I used often to lay down my pen and look after her, and feel as if the sun shone brighter for her being there. When she raced through the grove or orchard with the great dog at her heels, I smiled, and felt my pulse beat no the head; when she rode past the house at a hand gallop on her gray pony, Fin Darwin, and leaped him over the garden gate, and shook her whip sensily in my face, I laid aside my book to admire her riding, and never thought her unwomanly or ungraceful.

THE HOLY ROSARY.

The Treasure of Certain Salvation.

(CONTRIBUTED TO THE MONITOR BY J. ROS OF ST. LOUIS.)

Since the Rosary is, as we all know, a most important and prominent devotion in God's Church, it is understood that it has most powerful spiritual resources means to procure for all who practice it, or for whom it is offered, eternal salvation, for customary devotions in the Church militant must have to view what is meant by the word salvation theosis. However, let it be well understood, that this is not all that we mean when we say that the Rosary is a treasure of salvation, we mean furthermore, and we intend to prove it, that a true Rosarian finds in Mary's Rosary divine devotion, a moral certainty of high degree of his salvation, one of the most certain marks of his predestination. "It is impossible," says St. Alphonsus de Lagnori, "that a servant of Mary who faithfully honors her and recommends himself to her should be lost. But when it is said that a devoted servant of Mary cannot be lost, certainly those servants are not meant who abuse their devotion by sinning with less fear."

For such presumptuous persons, for their encouragement, I shall presently quote than mercy. It is understood then only for those servants of Mary, who, with the desire to amend, faithfully honor her and commend themselves to her care. That those should be lost is, I say, impossible. As the Holy Ghost, (Prov. chap. viii. 35.) says "It makes no difference how long a sinner may live, if he dies in Mary St. Hilary, "he shall not perish eternally, if he is truly devoted to Mary." (Lib. 12. in Matth.) Father Francisco Suarez, and plously remarks that "he who faithfully and sincerely honors the Most Holy Virgin, will very soon through her, return to the bosom of the Holy Church of Christ placed on the lips of Mary the words of grace, and of life, and he will find me, shall find life, and shall have salvation from the Lord" (Proverb. viii. 35). "And in, as St. Alphonsus adds, "he who finds me (Mary) by means of ancores devotion, shall find the life of grace in this world, and eternal happiness in the next." (Prov. Spoon., chap. viii. 35.)

On the same subject St. Bonaventure says: "Hear O people, and give ear to these words of Mary, "all you who desire to enter into the Kingdom of God, honor me and you shall find life and eternal salvation." The Eternal Father Himself thus speaks to St. Gertrude of Sonna: "My goodness has pledged to Mary, the Mother of Mercy, I will, whenever her prayers are increased, the whoever recommends himself to her, shall not perish, but shall obtain great a name he may have been, shall never become in any way the prey of the enemy of souls. Blessed, I know Mary is a good Mother assists her servants at the moment of their death and obtains for them final perseverance! She actually holds her hand out to her servants in their tenace, and will not let Him go until He shall have pardoned them, and admitted them to the arms of Him. For all her true servants, the grace of grace—the crowning gift of God—the gift of final perseverance! Oh! only happy are the servants of such a Mistress. happier still the children of such a Good Mother! "I will," said Mary one day to St. Mechtilde, "assist as a tender and faithful mother at the death of all those who shall have been faithful to me, and have my comfort them." Wherefore, St. Alphonsus de Lagnori, in assigning the various reasons why Mary is called the "Gate of Heaven, (Ser. 6th, says: "Mary is our life because she procures for us eternal life.

It is only through her intercession that we can hope to obtain that great grace which is due to no man no matter how holy he may be—the grace of a holy death. Blessed is the man who shall obtain it if we constantly and earnestly ask for it. Blessed, I say, promises it to all those who serve her with fidelity in this life." "He that hearkeneth to me, shall not be confounded, he that work by me, shall not sin. They that explain me, shall have life everlasting, and I will give them life everlasting." (Ecclesi. xxiv. 30, 31). The Spouse of Christ, the Holy Ghost, speaks the words of Holy Writ just cited to Mary, and hence St. Alphonsus says that in the order of spiritual life, teach that "devotion to Mary is a mark of predestination. (La Vera Sposa, chap. 1.)

But we make bold to ask why is more certain, that we shall be lost if we, during soon, a true servant of Jesus and Mary St. Alphonsus, "is —Right Rev. Bishop O'Connor, of Omaha, is preparing to take a trip to Rome, immediately after Easter. He will be absent several months.

Editorial Notes.

—"How shall America honor Columbus?" is the question asked in the N. Y. Independent by the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop. "By accepting the faith that Columbus brought to America," answers the Catholic Review.

—We refer our readers to Miss Skidmore's appropriate poem "The Resurrection," which we publish this week, as one of a galaxy of poetical gems which were ushered into the world under the title of "Beside the Western Sea," a volume that should grace the shelves of every public and private Catholic library in the land.

—The Toronto courts have decided that an American divorce of persons living in Canada is not valid. They do not object over the border to the residence of American debaucheees who bring their money with them, but do not propose to encourage any assisted immigration schemes direct from the American divorce courts.

—Very Rev. Canon Lenny, President of the College of Maynooth, and Professor of the Faculty of Theology at the University of Louvain, has just been elevated to the dignity of Domestic Prelate to his Holiness Leo XIII. This nomination has given the utmost satisfaction to all connected with this celebrated University. It is only a very short time since the Right Rev. gentleman was admitted as a member to the Academy of the Catholic Religion of Rome, of which Mgr. Tarnaers, Rector of the University, and Mgr. Van Weddingen, Doctor in Theology, are already members.

—A subscriber to the New York Freeman's Journal relates a sad incident of the effects of going West to a country where there were neither a school nor a church. A Catholic Irishman and his wife went to Illinois many years ago. The other day sixty-five children, grandchildren and great grandchildren, attended the funeral of this President of Maynooth. Not one received number was a Catholic! They were Methodists, go-as-you-please people, etc. The subscriber, commenting on the frequency with which Protestants with "Catholic names" are found throughout the West, attributes this, in the first place, to isolation; in the second, to mixed marriages.

—The "Society for the Suppression of Vice" should take cognizance of the cruelty to persons addressed at any free delivery office or in any town containing a population of 50,000 or over, or at any other office that may be designated for the purpose by the Postmaster General. It is provided that letters having the special stamps shall be delivered by messenger boys, who are not to be paid more than $30 per month, and the cost of this service is restricted to 80 percent of the receipts from the sale of special stamps.

—The interesting interview with Archbishop Croke, of Cashel, which we publish on the first page this week, demonstrates the fact that his Grace is determined that no slander upon his countrymen shall go unrebuked. He expressed a high opinion of the good that total-abstinence societies have done and are doing, without committing himself to the opinion that everyone should become an abstainer; and with reference to the charge that the Irish are a nation of drunkards, as English writers and others have falsely asserted, Dr. Croke vigorously repels the calumny, and shows how false such a charge is when applied to the Irish as a race.

—Commenting on the contemplated visit of the son and daughter of Queen Victoria to Ireland, the London Tablet believes correctly that it is "too late" to try and bamboozle the Irish people by an exhibition of British princes. The Tablet says: "It was announced on Tuesday that the Prince and Princess of Wales will early in April pay a visit to Ireland, where they will be guests of the Lord Lieutenant, will visit various parts of the island, and hold, by permission of the Queen, a Levée and Drawing Room at Dublin Castle. If this announcement had been made years ago it would have been hailed and welcomed by all the land, now, we fear, it comes "too late" for any national good. Our Dublin correspondent tells us of the sort of mixed feelings with which the news has been received in Ireland, and we fear that the Ministers have blundered again."

—A meeting of the Canons and Parish Priests of the Archdiocese of Dublin was held on Tuesday, the 10th ult., for the purpose of electing a successor to the late Cardinal McCabe. The voting resulted as follows:—Dignitaries: Very Rev. Dr. Walsh, 46. Inquisitor: Most Rev. Dr. Donnelly, 12. Deputus: Very Rev. Dr. Tynan, 3. Most Rev. Dr. Woodlock, Bishop of Ardagh, 2. The Very Rev. Dr. Walsh received more votes from the diocesan clergy than were ever before cast for an Irish Bishop of Dublin. Cardinal Cullen was deputatus in 1852, but he received only 23 votes; and it is now clear our own time to forget the settled feeling of security that the Propaganda and the Holy Father would surely respect the almost unanimous expression of the clergy of the diocese, no matter how great the weight of personal merit and influence on the other side, when they placed the late Cardinal McCabe at the head of the list with 43 votes. But the President of Maynooth has now received 46 votes, the largest number, as we have said, ever cast for an Archbishop of Dublin, since the present mode of procedure was prescribed for Ireland in 1829.

—In the "Open Letters" inserted in the current issue of the Century magazine there is one which closes with this very appropriate summary of the evils arising from the "full of grace," and whose purity was so great as to be deemed worthy of the exalted honor of becoming the Mother of the Son of the Most High God!

Has sectarianism no sense of shame? Do Protestants really believe in the Bible? Can they be called Christians when they are constantly at war with the commands of Christ? In both the Old and New Testaments the sin of slander and the crime of calumny is denounced in most emphatic language by numerous Saints. Yet, in the face of God's command—in opposition to the precepts declared by the inspired writers of Sacred Scripture—Protestant sermons and Protestant writers continuously continue to fling out the foulest falsehoods they can formulate for the sole purpose of poisoning the minds of men against the only Church that really represents Christianity in the world!

But this very virulent hatred of the Catholic Church is one of the natural marks of heretical sectarianism. The Apostles and their successors in the Catholic Church have never been of the world, hence—as our Blessed Redeemer prophesied—the world has always hated them because our Saviour chose them out of the world. Do like manner the world hates Priests, Bishops, Popes, Saints—and all who are called to serve God—and in doing this the enemies of the Church fulfill the written law:

"They have hated me without cause."

We sincerely hope, therefore, that the exposé we have made of the iniquitous document which the Tablet printed last week, will lead our neighbors to cast the dark dungeon of detraction to the sunlight of Christian common-sense, and thus save the beloved readers from being deluged with such diabolical inventions of the Infernal for of truth as that which has called forth this Catholic protest.

Protestant papers are fond of boasting of the "enlightenment" which pervades this nineteenth century, yet these very same people seem to be still in the mire of ignorance concerning the Catholic Church which might have been expected before printing was invented, but which is actually disgraceful in those days when books of Catholic doctrine are so plentiful. In view of this fact alone—to say nothing of the moral degradation entailed upon those who wantonly slander the Catholic Church—we ask, what possible benefit can accrue to God and the injustice against God's religion which Protestant publishers perpetrate every time they permit their periodicals to be made the vehicles of constant hate by means of the assaults of virulent cranks upon the Church against which even the gates of hell can never prevail.

Some More Singular Conversions.

Already in these columns we have repeatedly printed instances of remarkable conversions to the Catholic faith, showing that in spite of the prejudices which have been led to embrace the Catholic faith even at a time when they thought such conversions against religious change so utter impossibility.

A correspondent of the MONITOR in Sydney, Australia, recently listened to a sermon preached in that city by Father Tockwell, O. S. B., in St. Patrick's Church, which was so remarkable in its character that we have deemed it worthy of being specially related many cases of singular conversions, but the following struck our correspondent so forcibly that upon returning home he at once wrote it down and forwarded it to the MONITOR for publication in the expectation that readers will be as much interested in it as we are.

Rev. narrator

I was present in the Indian Ocean three hundred years ago, a Protestant family blessed with a young daughter, who, when about twelve years old, had heard the "Hail Mary" recited, and was struck with the sweetness of it. It was a superstitious practice of the Catholics, who taught Christ's Mother to be a Divinity, while after all she was only a woman as any other. The child had been accustomed to say the prayer, until a few days later, whilst waiting for her father, he called her to him, and gave them to the Protestant Church, amongst himself and family, and ordered her to cease from that prayer, and to say instead the Lord's prayer, the words of the Angel's greeting suddenly caught her ear, and she was struck with the sublime rapture at his discovery, he told him that he was ignorant of the fact that the book was roughly snatched from him, and he severely upbraided her for such a thing. Nevertheless the child kept repeating the words of the Angel, "Hail Mary, full of grace; the Lord is with thee, blessed art thou amongst women." Her mother was now. The child grew up and fearlessly lived in the Church of God, and died in the Church, and her last words were "Hail Mary" and her last utterance was the Angel's greeting, and her mother, who was brought up in the Protestant faith, continued to Protestants, embraced the Word of God, and died in the Church of God, wherein were the words of the Blessed Virgin which the Angel spoke to her, and the generations shall call me blessed." It happened one day, that during a conversation, the Protestants contended that the Blessed Virgin was not entitled to any honors or respect, but that any worthy or chief of a family was her equal; and that the Blessed Virgin was a sinner, and that the Blessed Virgin Mary is not as good as the Protestant Ladies. The Protestants quoted the words when he saluted her full of grace, and the Blessed Virgin replied to the Mother of God. Two Protestants seem to have their heart's desire satisfied, and lay in the bottom, the most august of creatures, which the Angel spoke to the Mother of God, and the only infallible guide of a good Protestant, yields to your conscience, and the Catholics who adore pray to Mary the humane and a divine Mother, and Protestants who angry ones to realize those words of the Gospel, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God" and blessed are the Catholics in the midst of the drawing room, the Protestant Ladies and Gentlemen, and in a moment of supreme anguish and despair a man cried out, "Oh, my God, that God will be a Catholic some day!" But what could a lady do in Congress? Tears fell in silence, pray and lament. The years rolled by, and time comes to the land of Calvin, and the Catholic manhood, became an ancient champion of Truth, and the Church of Christ was established in Geneva. He was day in conversation with the pious Mr. Gaillard, a Protestant, and the Catholic said to him, "Sir, I am a Catholic, and I am infinitely happier." Gaillard thus endeavor to convert the Catholic, and he was heard by her loved numbers of the perverse Church of Rome, I will, and shall pleasure, I am a Catholic." However the hour of grace was drawing nigh, the children of that parent, who was to be the instrument God would use to bring her within the bosom of the Church, which with a dreadful illness the child was already in the throes of death, all hopeless. In her last gasp, when her brother suggested that the church of the Holy Ghost, "Mary," said the child, if by the intercession of the Blessed Virgin I should recover, I will be a Catholic." Gaillard at once sent for the Catholic Church, and in the event of being the child's sponsor, the child recovered, and became a Catholic at the age of no matter what, and the Protestant family became Catholics

Farm and Home.

Why the French Poor are Happy.

The poor class in the United States and Great Britain is well-to-do compared with the poor in France, yet it is not as well fed nor as happy. There is a general cheerful tone in this people which strikes the foreigner as soon as he enters the country. Here and climate have doubtless something to do with it, but hygienic nourishment and a sound stomach count more. In presence of this fact, one cannot help regretting the waste of time and energy of reformers and philanthropists who, to bring about man's amelioration with us, are always addressing themselves to his head, to the neglect of his stomach. It is an elementary law governing the human system that the brain and the stomach are two neighbors who cannot afford to be at enmity any length of time without mutual deterioration, and that an improvement in the condition of one implies an improvement in the other. Naturally, this A B C knowledge is familiar to most people, but it does not yet receive the consideration which its importance demands. The foundation of the Frenchman's happiness is laid in the best bread in the world both in taste and nutriment, the best nourishing wine, and the best cooking—save in rare cases in the preparation of a whim, as well as in serving, the English enjoy superiority. Besides the quality of the Frenchman's food, there is a healthful feature in his usually well-ventilated apartments in which it is eaten, and another in the jocularity and innocuous stimulating repast. Sloppy coffee and hot biscuits are not conducive to gaiety; ice-cold water and this soup prepared to the boarding-house are not jolly-inspiring; and a porpourri of water-raking vegetables is not productive of a humor to set the table in a roar. Those, in a word, to say nothing of the quality of the table, heat and haste—are joy-killers, with subsequent dyspepsia.

How to Keep Boys on the Farm.

Farmers in America are everlastingly complaining that their boys will not persist in getting their boys to remain with them on their farms. Here is what the Planter's Journal says on the subject, and farmers should read it well and ponder it: "If every boy develops a fondness for feeding sheep, pigs, horses and cattle, delights in working his private patch, and exhibiting the products of fruit, vegetables and cereals, that is one who can be kept by kindness, he easily becomes a partner on the farm. Yet, a farmer's son should be taught by showing such a pleasure selfishness in his dealings with him. Every boy who works is entitled to a portion of the proceeds of his work. If he assists in the general farm work, cut him off as soon or two for his own, loan him the piece horse, give him the seed and address hence he can plant and cultivate. If he gets in the grass and the hired man to help him out, and when the crop is housed see that he gets a good price in ready cash even if they have to buy it forward. All the trouble you will have with that boy is to keep him from over-prosperity himself. Too many fathers in our land work their boys without recompensing them. They think that the boy's board and clothes cost more than he is worth. The boy reasons that it is the father's duty to furnish him, and that he gets nothing but hard work and no pay. He becomes discouraged, then trifling, gets nothing instead of praise, treasures up discontent in his heart and finally leaves the home and the farm behind him with regret, and goes among strangers to be cleaned with the lions and treated with kindness. Why should a boy in your family who should go and when he gets old he will not depart therefrom,' in the words of Solomon, and they are true. Yet I do not think Solomon meant that the boys should all be trained in the same way without any reference their natural inclinations. Train him up in the way he should go does not always mean as the parent desires him to go."

About Dreams.

Dr. Delasiave, an eminent French student, writes the Paris Biological Society on the subject of dreams. He claims that the character of our dreams is very much determined by the position we occupy in sleep. The most general method of lying, perhaps, is on the right side, and this appears to be also the most natural method, for many persons object to lying upon the side of the heart, which, it has been more than once asserted, should have action during sleep. Nevertheless, Dr. Delasiaye's statements hardly harmonize with this opinion. When one sleeps upon the right side—that is to say upon the right side of the brain—one's dreams have marked and other unpleasant characteristics. These characteristics, however, are essentially those which enter into the general definition of dreams. Only dreams are then apt to be illogical, absurd, childish, uncertain, incoherent, full of rivacity, and exaggerated. Dreams which come from sleeping on the right side are, in short, simply grotesque. They bring to the mind very old or faint remembrances, and they are often accompanied by nightmares. Dr. Delasiaye points out that sleepers frequently compose verse or rhythmical language while they are lying on their right side. The author has tried at times to do so, but without success. Nightmares are the most frequent of all dreams. The moral faculties are then at work, but the intellectual faculties are absent. On the other hand, when a person slumbers on his left side, his dreams are not only less absurd, but they may also be intelligent. They are, as a rule, concerned with recent things, with reminiscences.

How to Make a Good Wife.

Be attentive and courteous to her.

Be cheerful when you enter your home.

Don't be afraid to praise the neat room and bright fire.

Don't be afraid to praise her handing, and her skill in fashioning and making.

Don't fail to give her words of appreciation whenever you can conscientiously express.

Never desire her. He ever true to her.

Let your conduct be such that she will be proud of you.

Be so upright that she will be happy in boasting your children to honor you.

Do not sit silent all the evening absorbed in reading your book or newspaper.

Give your family some of your attention.

Talk them all in the evening things that have brightened your day's labor.

Speak kindly to the children.

Play and talk with them a few moments after supper.

Interest yourself in your wife's employment.

Encourage her when she is downhearted.

Be glad with her when she is happy.

Let her know by words and actions that she is appreciated, and you make her happier than she ever thought of being.

Don't wait to tell the world upon marble that which will be so grateful to her living heart to hear from your lips.

Share with her your good fortune as unselfishly as you do your ill.

Let her walk by your side, your honored companion; your strong hand helping her over the rough places, and sustaining her when wearied in the ascent.

DINNERS FOR FIVE CENTS.

How Poor Humanity Lives in the Great City.

It is sometimes a cause of wonder to many—since the New York Herald—that a "square meal for 25 cents," as advertised in a multitude of places, can be served up with profit. The wonder of such people would soon cease did they know how much cheap food and profits are served in this city. It is the general law of a nature that demand creates a supply. There are hundreds and even thousands in New York City whose individual daily earnings stale below 50 cents. Naturally, therefore, as they think, sleep and drink as well as their more favored fellow citizens, it becomes a great necessity to them to make their scanty earnings go as far as possible. It is just this need that brought into existence all the cheap eating and lodging houses, and as the profits are generally die strictly each business they manage to make money and thrive on profits that to the uninitiated seem absurd. The most curious thing, after these cheap places themselves, is the class of queer people who frequent them. The patrons of these establishments are a strange mixture of vagabonds and poorly paid but industrious workers—hungry-faced laborers, ill-clad clerks, two dollar-a-week errand boys, well paid but miserly men or spendthrift swells reduced to misery.

In one of his rambles around town a Herald reporter was confronted by an old cloth sign hanging out from a dingy store bearing the following inscription:

	Cents.		Cents.
Coffee, per cup	1	Corned beef and cabbage	4
Tea, per cup	1	Beef stew	4
Milk, per bowl	1	Hash	4
Pie, per cut	2	Ham and eggs	5
Beans, per bowl	2	Pickles	1
Meat pasta	4	Fried bratas	1

Inspired with a desire to know more of the interior of this establishment, which certainly reached, in the sense of the sign, some of cheapness, the reporter entered and was greeted politely by a swarthy Italian, who proved to be the proprietor. "Ah! yes, give do est a prosse soulevrito," he observed, "and make mon, too." It was certained from his subsequent remarks that he had done a thriving business for over six years; that he bought his goods in the market day at the cheapest, and he generally near the Fire Points. The guests were mainly of that class who so suddenly dart out of a doorway and cling to one until they have procured two cents to make up the sum and one of a nickel wherewith to refresh their inner man. A lady with a black eye sat at a table earnestly wrapped up in an effort to do away with a plate of—something. The waiters were very busy, shouting out ensignatical orders such as "Coffee in the dark!" (which is everyday English mean coffee with no milk), "Toasters for two!" (dough-nuts), "Shed over your hair-layer" (eaves and forks), and other queer remarks.

Now, people that eat also sleep, and it occurred to the reporter that he might as well see how the man who paid a cent for his lodgings fared for a bed. Following one of the regular boarders he entered into a conversation with him. The coffee-house cosmopolitan had the comfort of his stagnant system that he was entirely a stranger to the cash there happened to be in his pocket. Sometimes when he had only 10 cents he had a method of combining a night's lodging with a "good old racket." In this way—he would enter one of the numerous dives of shape in the slums and by tendering a "ten" would be received the answer right, and title to a can of whiskey. These places are sometimes called "morgues," presumably because they drive the victim to the last kind of vile stuff, which it would be sinder to call whisky. Well, when the liquid compound has been procured, the purchaser thereof retired with it to a backroom, around which were placed wooden benches, and this room were to be found kindred cronies, who discussed politics, the weather, and the accounting dullness of the times, drank, smoked, chaff, told stories, drank, fought, argued, drank—and finally rolled off their benches dead drunk upon the floor, where the patrons of the establishment had a right to lie until morning and sleep off their drunkenness.

But this was not in the regular line of business. When a bed in a regular lodging house was required the small sum of 10 cents would buy the same. It was not with perfect truthfulness he called a bed. The interior of lodging houses of this class generally consist of tiers of tightly drawn hammocks reaching up to the ceiling and held by steel posts. Regular beds had their beds reserved for them, and generally those the top one, as being more protected from the vermin which is indigenous to the place. Again, when the sound a purse was more plethoric he could procure for himself the luxury of a bed, and have his privacy secured by a curtain drawn surrounding his narrow couch. For 25 cents still better accommodations could be procured.

Establishments demanding these prices were very respectable, cleanly kept, had reading rooms, bathrooms and other luxuries, and were patronized by a class of men who were respectable, but whose business making money were so unstable and uncertain that they could not allow themselves to the privilege of a furnished room or private house at a regular weekly payment.

In response to questions as to the quality of food eaten and the price given for it in restaurants mostly patronized by the reporter's informant, the latter stated that the quality thereof was generally good, and contained for was of the "fill in" kind, something that one ounce was of a quality to fend off any sudden demand of the stomach upon a pocket not endowed with the resources of a Vanderbilt. Hash, for instance, was pork and beans—they were great articles to sustain a man's vitality, and save him from too sudden bankruptcy. The Italian's place was patronized by the reporter's informant only when he was very low in pocket. He was a gentleman by birth, and did not care to huddle in with a lot of "bums." When his finances permitted his gentlemanly instincts to have their way he patronized a small five-cent restaurant on Chatham Street, where he could have a cup of feast of beefsteak and potatoes, a bowl of coffee and a huge chunk of bread, and all for 15 cents. They gave no napkins there, to be sure, but plenty for the money, and there was nothing to prevent him from grabbing a handful of toothpicks and leisurely picking his teeth in front of the door.

When he did work he preferred to pell-mell, sawing logs, carting sand, hauling anything in fact that would sail quickly and enable him to make from 30 to 50 cents per day. On the latter sum he could live very comfortably, have a "racket" occasionally, and trust to luck for his clothes. Cape betts were plentiful, so his smoking had no bearing upon his calculations of money getting. When the conversation had reached this point the man about town, as he called himself, bade farewell to the reporter, and entering a building climbed his way up a narrow pair of stairs (for the doorway was so large accommodating that "gentlemen only" could have "comfortable clean beds for 10 cents."

A Love-Hacked Plaintiff.

There was a pretty scene in the Court of Common Pleas, Chicago, the other day, when the Judge of the Parole Bench. He has made that institution one of the foremost benefit institutions of the country, and continues to labor assiduously to increase its business and usefulness. Its work is wonderful.

The Parole Bench is one of those institutions (we have great, strong, which under adverse influences, upon the commercial and industrial enterprises of the country, have been comparatively, until quite recently, hopeless being ignored, ridiculed, and, in some instances, treated with the cold shoulder of neglect, disregard, disgrace, and disgust. Its work is wonderful. It is one of the noble and benevolent agencies of the Parole Bench. Its business has been transacted

NEWS OF THE WORLD.

CABLEGRAMS FROM ALL COUNTRIES.

Not a Friend of the Irish.

NEW YORK, March 24.—A Boston special to the Irish-American says: The leaders have at last the Democratic side on a platform in the form of the aggressive Irish resolutions. It is evident it is not at all in accord, however, with the feeling they had hoped the rest of the Democratic Republicans. The only solid at the selection of a man who perfectly combines a thorough quite Englishman in all his sympathies, with almost no much feeling for the Irish, as the blue-blooded landlord in England. In his own State he never adopted politics and has little sympathy with our methods and methods in such things, the opinion obtaining that he prefers the Republicans of Vermont Democrats, though often boasting of Phelps' alliance with them, regard him as entirely outside their spheres.

Another Spirituality Exposed.

KANSAS CITY, March 23.—J. Harvey Mott, a prominent spiritualist and medium, who during the past year has made his headquarters at a number of prominent cities in the United States, and has visited nearly all parts of the country and Europe, was exposed last night through a case by J. R. Brown, managing editor of the Journal. Mr. Brown obtained an interview, and, when the medium appeared as a spirit, threw a small pot of mallow solution on his face. Then he had him arrested for obtaining money under false pretenses. Mott failed to bail and is waiting for the purpose. Mott gave a bond for his appearance on Thursday.

American Cannot Music for England.

CHICAGO, March 25.—The U. S. Railway Canning Company of this city has received further instructions from the English Admiralty board for the use of the British Army, which contained with additional orders received this morning, where the aggregate amount to the value of $1,000,000. The orders come from England, and are for the British Navy. It will require two weeks to fill the orders now on hand. Another Packing Company is also in receipt of orders to supply 1,000,000 rounds. These are the largest orders ever received here, and when in their magnitude, the stupendous fact that they are to meet a war emergency. The canning houses are working day and night in order to meet these demands.

Regular Mission Courtrooms for the Chinese.

PARIS, March 26.—Le Justice states that it has good authority for saying the Chinese Embassy from Birmingham has made during the past six months 7,000,000 cartridges for China, and contained them to a German officer in active service under the Pekine Government.

Presentation to the Rev. Dr. O'Reilly.

The friends and parishioners of the Rev. Dr. Charles O'Reilly of Detroit, the respected Treasurer of the National League in America, recently presented him with his portrait, which was painted by John Mulvaney, the artist who painted the celebrated picture of "Custer's Last Rally." There is added one more to the long list of honors that Dr. O'Reilly's friends are constantly heaping on him, the portrait, as John Mulvaney, the artist, has made a possession worthy of the man.

Redemption Bonds Called.

The following redemptions in postage are announced to take effect July 1st: Letters which have been in the mail for two weeks, the rate now applied to the same stamps. Newspapers received after the publication offer are to be taxed but half as much as at present. The prepayment of ten cents additional postage will secure the immediate delivery of a letter in any town having 4,000 or more inhabitants.

Cause Severe to Remorse.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 28.—A British steamer arrived in this port from Liverpool with 25 steerage, the oldest of whom was not 16 years. Captain Arnold stated that when two days out he saw something like an old time whisper every steep out of the deck and jumped into the Atlantic and to be a 10-year old urchin, who, when questioned said: "I was 10 years old, I ran away because I felt angry." Just then another passed from the coal hook, and the same report. "Why, my boy, you?" and so it continued until 10 young boys had passed the rail. The Captain ordered the steerage passengers to be brought forward and asked to the steamer. The Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, stated that if they come under the passport Immigrant Ship they will be returned to Holyhead.

Second Lapse Down in Sorrow.

Indiana is one of the few states in temperance sentiment among the public. Prohibition is somewhat more independent every year. Such a thing is to be thought of. Yet, in the Republican 1?" "No," said the white man, "I put on books and cash." "What for you talk out?" said the black. "Yes, you sick all the time, sure money, what for you so keep him?" Some time I books out, keep whisky, drink, keep him, money all sure. Now, so drink long time, work, plenty money, no sick, no sick, no all money, no books."

James Stephens Dying and in Actual Want.

LONDON, March 23.—The wife of James Stephens, the well known Fenian who was recently expelled from France, telegraphed Dr. Dwyer Gray, Irish member of Parliament, that her husband was destitute and dying at Mons, Belgium. Gray forwarded some money to Mrs. Stephens.

A SINGULAR AFFAIR.

A Naturalized Citizen Decoyed into and Arrested in Canada.

NEW YORK, March 23.—Mrs. Ireland of Mott Haven made an application to the United States Marshal attempt to find her husband, who she says that her husband had been kidnapped by some Canadian officers. The further stated that her husband, Robert Ireland aged 28 years, was a corporal in the English army and had been stationed at Ayer, Scotland. He came to this country and became naturalized. On the 19th inst. he left his home in Mott Haven to visit his brother, who was offering to give him a position as clerk in a restaurant. He was to be gone a few days, at $7 per week. Ireland went to meet Shields, and was induced to go to Canada. Shields there announced himself as a detective and took Ireland, then a naturalized American citizen, into custody. Ireland was locked up and refused permission to write home until yesterday, when he sent a few lines to his wife, telling her the above facts and adding that he was about to be returned to England for trial. Mrs. Ireland has requested to communicate with Secretary of State Bayard.

A FIELD FOR MISSIONARIES.

The English people have profited less, in a spiritual sense, by the Bible, than any other people who have ever received it. They are, as Thomas said, slowly "doubters." Lord Macaulay said once that it was doubtful if there was a civilized people in the city of London who believed in the Bible. Wilberforce declared that probably not thirty members of the British Parliament believe in Christianity at all. To-day, there are in many cities in England, and in Birmingham, immense establishments for the sale of the Bible, and they are selling it, and it is to be sold to the Chinese. The Bible is now the most popular book in the English paper published as annual of a large class, intelligent gloss and glaring customs devote alleged Bibles. These good makers are among the most liberal subscribers to the English Bible societies. They can, of course, afford to present the heathen Hinder with a set every Bible, after selling him a clam pod at ten shillings, whose manufacture cost but one shilling and eight pence.

Our readers will remember the evidence of English heathenism given lately by the Lord Mayor's report before Parliament some years ago. He said that the Chinese in London, the city of the world, "are the most degraded people on the earth." Yet, nobody of that same worked in his city, but of his countrymen begging in such a place he might find him. Another niece was asked if he ever saw a Bible in a Chinese house; answered: No, 'twas the other beggar he was afraid of—meaning the devil. Another felt, other, on being questioned as to the existence of such a place in his city, said: "No, I didn't care about no hell—if they'd bring his pickaxe with him he'd get out of any place.

St. Patrick's Mental Aliance Association.

One of the most enjoyable and most successful of the entertainments given in honor of Ireland's Patron Saint was the one given under the auspices of the St. Patrick's Mental Aliance Association of California in their hall, southeast corner of Mission and Fremont streets, on Monday evening, March 16th. The hall was most beautifully decorated with the Stars and American flags. Great credit is due the Executive Committee for the success of the entertaining officers of the Alliance for 1885 are as follows: President, John J. Wall; first vice-president, Wm. J. Byrne; second vice-president, Thomas Ryan; recording secretary, John F. Cullen; corresponding secretary, John F. Cullen; financial secretary, Thomas J. Bradley; treasurer, M. J. Ryan; assistant financial secretary, Michael Cassidy; Board of Trustees: Chairman, John Mooney; J. J. McEvoy, T. Donohue, John J. Leonard, Maurice Foley. The above named officers also constitute the Executive Committee.

IN MEMORIAM.

MAMIE E. EVANS.

On Thursday morning the 26th inst. at early dawn, the earthly tabernacle of Mamie Evans, the wife of Mr. Thomas Evans of Oakland and mother, died, after a long and painful illness, at the age of 21 years, 9 months and 11 days. Her death, which occurred after a long and painful illness, was felt by many friends, especially by her husband, who was a member of the Monaghan Tribe of Red Men, and who was a member of the Monaghan Tribe of Red Men, from which she was the first member of the Monaghan Tribe of Red Men, and of a recent election of officers was chosen Prophet of the Tribe. Her death was a great loss to the Monaghan Tribe of Red Men, and to the Order of Red Men, and to the Order of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which she was a member, and to the Order of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which she was a member, and to the Order of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which she was a member

Poetry

(FOR THE MONITOR.)

IN MEMORIAM.

Lines written for the Anniversary of the death of John P. Rocktop, Jr., (April 6th,) and affectionately inscribed to his mother.

A year ago, (while darkly veiled
In sombre robes, the angel of gloom,)
The mystic Spouse her Lord heralded,
And sang her dirge o'er His tomb.

A mother, too, bereaved her son,
Her heart beside His dying bed,
Yet meekly prayed: "Thy will be done!"
And humbly bent her noble head.

And while the cold and tender light
Of Easter Eve serenely shone,
With pleading prayer and supplicant rite,
She laid him in his grave bed lone.

And went her way with patient heart,
And weeping pilgrims, round shore,
That saw, through chasteners rent apart,
Her one Satisfy smile of love.

"O, stricken soul!" It said: "Do calm
Thy pounding heart from earthly strife,
Thy son shall pass, with Me, who am
The Resurrection and the Life."

And now, the swift winged year hath sped,
And lo! the glorious Easter morn
Dispelleth o'er the darkness dread
Of sorrow's sad memorial day.

And while the Easter olive stands
The priest whose potent reign can bring
Unto the disembodied hands
The Lamb's Eternal Offering.

For him, whose form to blighted clay
Was given, in Death's unsolving breast,
While round the dewdrop Easter ray
Upon his sacred bed of rest.

Aye, when, around the sable shrine
Pond worshipers" tones arise
From tender hearts that Faith doth twine—
Again, unto thy Heavenly eyes,

O, Christian mourner! (raised above
By Hope's divine, celestial fire)
Thy meet Sactissa's smile of love
Amid the Heavenly choirs shall be.

"O, mother-heart!" It says. "Be calm!
Eternal years with glory rife
They son shall see, with Me, who am
The Resurrection and the Life!"

THE ROCKABYE

Green and gold, when the wings it wore—
Gleam of a spirit proved and blest,
Ere of a darkness troubadour
Voice of the Giant in the winter's wind,
A mother's heart-beat's voice and tongue
Thrilling out: Hurrah!
Forever old—forever young—
Immortal as the song it sang!

Green and gold, when the wings it wore—
Gleam of a spirit proved and blest,
Ere of a darkness troubadour
Voice of the Giant in the winter's wind,
A mother's heart-beat's voice and tongue
Thrilling out: Hurrah!
Forever old—forever young—
Immortal as the song it sang!

And tenderly crooned—rocks's woe,
And gone but never gone we'll know no more,
And glory—partial long ago—
Kissed it to the music of the troubadour.
And like a spirit darkly sped
Through Heaven's gate and through
Pulsed by the living and the dead,
Rocks's spirit-pleasure-singer fled
And shrieks, and said: Hurrah!

Green and gold, when the wings it wore,
In blight or blast—in land or sea,
Was given it to grace or guide in pain
Arnold's tramp predatoned the free,
Thus breaking—the Leprechaun,
Shouting out: Hurrah!
Shrieks it in the mouth of death and dawn,
Shrieks it in the mouth of death and dawn,
And shrieks it in scorn: Hurrah!

As mountain blood—as torrents roar—
As hammers beat the tempest of hebe,
As storm-clouds—hurled s'er and s'er,
As lightning—the Leprechaun,
Shouting out: Hurrah!
Shrieks it in the mouth of death and dawn,
Shrieks it in the mouth of death and dawn,
And shrieks it in scorn: Hurrah!

As a mountain blood—as torrents roar—
As hammers beat the tempest of hebe,
As storm-clouds—hurled s'er and s'er,
As lightning—the Leprechaun,
Shouting out: Hurrah!
Wild wept in woes the throes of wrong,
Sorrow and freedom and long
As waves of the ocean throw on throng
Sorrow and freedom and long
To rent the song: Hurrah!

Our sons and the sacrificed—
Wrecked on the rocks of the world—
Old Erin's sons—and tribes, Classical,
Celtic, Gaul, and Britons bold,
O wondrous voice! I cast—and shouted:
Hurrah! Hurrah!
Voice of the Celtic Leprechaun—
High in the stranger's tribunal born
To shriek or mean: Hurrah!

From Manic pall to Dawn of Day
Bloom'd in the brain that righted man,
Tall as the rock of the Amazon
Loved by the Ups of the Republic,
Thy Leprechaun—one of ours
Shouting out: Hurrah!
Born in the ebbs of fairy free
Nor feed the flame that ne'er expires,
But hearts or lyres. Hurrah!
Age, raising s'er the mighty West
The woe of the fairy troubadour
Plaited a giant's brain and breast
Amid the Leprechaun's sweet lyre to shore.
And now—abreast the headed skies,
Thy Leprechaun—the Leprechaun,
The shouting, free-born Celt and Gaul,
A Nation's Spirit Never Dies
Proven or slain. Hurrah!

The Story of Lost Alice.

CHAPTER III.

We were married not long after, and for six months we drank in "Fool's Paradise." When I think of that time, it is as if it might have lasted to our dying day, I am only sigh, and take up the burden of my life with an aching heart.

They had called Alice Eskie—oh, how wrong!—for Nature had made her could be true to another than she was to me.

"I only wanted to find the man, Frank," she used to say, when I laughed at her about it. "I was looking for him through all those long years, and I began to think he would never come. But, from the first moment we met, I knew you speak, and met your eyes, I felt that he was near me. And I am glad to wear my master's chains," she added, kissing my hand.

And I am sure she was in earnest. I planned her best when I treated her as my child. She was so naive, so passionate, high spirited creature. She rebelled a thousand times a day, although she delighted in my control. But it was pretty to see her, when she turned to leave the room, with fire in her eyes, and a deep flush on her cheek; it was pretty to see her with her hand upon the lock, even drop her proud head submissively, and wait when I said, "Stop. Shut the door, and listen to me." Yet it was dangerous. I, who had never been moved before, was bewitched, or but become a tyrant, when a creature so noble as this bent down before me!

She loving, too. Every chord of her most sensitive heart thrilled and trembled to my touch, and gave forth sweetest music, yet I was not satisfied. I tried the minor key. Through her pity, I gain with all glory, for my sweet heart. I can see it now. Some wine-lees found its way into my hot cup! whispered that I was making a child of my wife by my indulgent ways, and that her character would never develop its strength in its main attributes. I acted upon this thought, forgetting how she had already been tried to the fiery furnace of affliction, and, quite unconscious, that while she was getting back all the innocent gaiety of her childish years, she was growing in her manhood were still lying beneath the sparkling surface of her playful ways.

If, for a time, she had shrunk out of my graver self, I resolved to be charmed to do them. I deputed myself agent to my business, heart and soul, and sat poring for hours over law papers without speaking to her. Yet she did not complain. So long as she was certain that I loved her, she was content, and took my her pen again, and went on with the work our marriage had interrupted. Her writing-desk was in my study, by a window just opposite mine, and sometimes I would cease for hour the rapid movement of her pen, and, looking up, I would find her eyes fixed upon me, and while a happy smile was playing around her lips. One day that glance found me in a most unreasonable mood. The cause of her love half pained me, and I said coolly

"It is bad taste, Alice, to look at any one in that way."

She dropped her pen, only too glad of an excuse to talk to me, and cross and leaned over my chair.

"And why? when I love some one."

"This was a bad beginning of the lesson I wanted to teach her, and I turned over my papers in silence.

"Do I annoy you, Francis!"

"Not much."

Her light hand was playing with my hair, and her breath was warm on my cheek. I felt my wisdom vanishing, and tried to make up for its loss by an increased cold-ness of manner.

"Can kiss," she said. "Just one, and I'll go away."

"What nonsense, Alice. What time have I to think of kisses now?"

She stood up and looked me in the face.

"Do I tease you, Francis!"

"Very much."

She gave a little sigh, so faint that I could scarcely hear it, and left the room. I had seared her grieve away for that morning.

This was the first cloud in our sky. It seems strange, now, when I look back upon it after the lapse of years, how perseveringly I labored to destroy the foundation of peace and happiness on which I might have built my life. The remaining six months of that year were months of misery to me, and, I doubt not, to Alice, for she grew thin and pale, and lost her gayety. I had accomplished my first design, and she had learned to doubt my affection for her. I felt this by the look in her eyes now and then, and by the way in which she seemed to cling to her dog, as if his fidelity and love were now her only hope. But I was too proud to see myself in the wrong, and the breach widened day by day.

In the midst of all this estrangement the dog sickened. There was a week of misgiving on Alice's part, when she sat beside him with her books or writing all the time—there was a day when both books and manuscript were put away, and she was bending over him, with her tears falling fast, as she tried to hush his moans, and looked into his dim, glazing eyes—and there was an hour of stillness when she lay on the sofa, with her arm around his neck, neither speaking nor stirring. Then, when the poor creature's last breath was drawn, she bent over him with a passionate burst of grief, kissed the white spot upon his forehead, and closed the soft, dark eyes that even in death were turned towards her with a living look.

She did not come to me for sympathy. She watched alone, while the gardener dug a grave, and buried him beneath the window. She never mentioned him to me, and never paid her daily visit to his green till I was busy with my papers for the evening. So the year, which had begun in love and happiness, came to its close.

I was in the study alone, one morning in the February following, looking over some deeds that had been long neglected, when I heard Alice singing in the balcony outside the window. It was the first time I had heard her sing since Fred's death, and I laid down my pen to listen. But hearing her coming through the hall I took it up again, and affected to be very busy.

I was warm, bright, beautiful day, and she seemed to bring a burst of sunlight and happiness with her as she opened the door. Her cheek was flushed, and her eyes had the sparkle of a child. I looked at her, and was so proud of her, and so fond of her, that I stooped to pick up the figure it was broken in two.

"Oh, you can condescend to lift it from the ground!" she said, carelessly.

"Upon my word, Alice, you are the most ungrateful creature I know. Whenever the little god of love can be easily mended."

She placed the fragments one upon the other and looked at me.

"It can be mended, but the accident must leave its trace, like all others. Oh, Frank, she sighed, throwing herself down by my chair, and lifting her hand to my face, "why do you try me so? Do you really love me?"

"Alice," I said, imperiously, "do get up. You tire me."

She rose and leaned over my chair.

"I will go, Frank, but first answer my question. Do you love me, Francis?"

"I am sorry for your sake, Alice, that I cannot do so."

"Do I annoy you, Francis!"

"Not much."

Her light hand was playing with my hair, and her breath was warm on my cheek. I felt my wisdom vanishing, and tried to make up for its loss by an increased cold-ness of manner.

THE MONITOR.

WEEKLY NEWS PAPER OF PROGRESS.

The MONITOR has the largest circulation of any Religious Paper published on the Pacific Coast.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8, 1885.

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the chief agent in impressing public opinion and erected about itself the religious sanction, which governs the world. In our time, religious journalism is not only a useful and noble occupation, but only a sort, indeed, remains of the ministry which once was the office of kings. What it said, what it taught to be the object of Catholic journalism, had to conform error and defend the truth, whether it was in season or out of season, the Holy Ghost."—BROWN, THEOLOGICAL MORAL OBTUSES.

May God bless and direct through the instrumentality of the Monitor, under a new proprietorship, that it may be a means of good to the Catholic Church, and a means of conquest, in rightly and clear of the Holy Apostle's See, and adhere to its doctrines and principle with devotion and fidelity.—Pius IX.

Editorial Notes.

— The great Catholic family of Von Arnim, which stands at the head of the aristocracy of Brandenburg, has withdrawn into seclusion since Prince Bismarck bestowed one of the members into his grace.

— President Cleveland is a Presbyterian, but his General Grant and other notables very little of his religion outside his Sabbath evenings, and he acts like an ordinary Christian on week days.

— When Gen. H. Pendleton reaches the German capital and sends in his card to Bismarck as the representative of the United States, he can assert of "blood and iron" had better not say much about American pork or the Ohio statesman will make unmagnanimous of him.

— An exceptional ecclesiastical honor has been conferred on Archbishop Fagbers of Victoria, V. I. At the request of the Propaganda the Holy Father has permitted his Grace to be styled Archbishop-Bishop of Vancouver Island, with permission to retain the Pallium and to exercise all the authority designated by that distinctive badge of ecclesiastical authority.

—The peculiar marks of Protestantism as a man-made scheme of go-as-you-please Christianity was never better illustrated than in the case of the Pacific Churchman—the Episcopalian organ—which last week quoted as an authority on the Resurrection of our Lord the familiar lay book—Gresham on Evidence—in order to support the testimony of the Apostles!

— The Church of the Sacred Heart in Paris will be completed in 1889, the year of the World's Exhibition. The contributions to the building fund then for aggregate 13,000,000 francs. It will take 10,000,000 francs to complete the great Basilica. But as liberal subscriptions are coming in every day from every part of France, there is no doubt but that the entire sum needed, enormous as it is, will soon be collected.

— A Chicago daily makes the gratifying statement that there is not [illegible] in that city, a very decided movement among the actors and actresses, themselves, tending to the abolishment of Sunday night performances in theatres. Theatrical entertainments are entirely incompatible with the idea of the sacredness of Sunday, and an effort should be made during the next session of our State legislature to have a bill pass prohibiting theatrical entertainments on the Lord's Day.

— Sensible Christian parents everywhere will learn with delight that the "bags" which hitherto gave a Fenjo Islander hope to the females who wore them, has been tabooed in good society. London women and girls who make up the fashionable society have entirely abandoned the bang, and all styles of wearing the hair coming over the head. They brush their hair straight back, showing the whole of the forehead and temples, bind it very cunningly on the top of the head, and wear it without the faintest suggestion of a curl or crimp.

— How happy the life of such one of us would be if we could only realize in our daily duty the truth of this beautiful and brilliant sentiment of a distinguished writer: "The inherent taint shed over grave are for words left unsaid and deeds left undone. "Sho never knew I loved her!" "He never knew what he was to me!" "I always meant to make more of our friendship!" "I did not know what he needed, in his life on which our Blessed Lord are the poisoned arrows which send Death shoots from the door of the sepulchre."

— Archbishop Gibbons has sent to Rome a handsomely bound memorial volume of the late Plenary Council, containing in official report of all the sermons delivered, the order of exercises, offices of the Council, etc. The binding is of white kid, with rounded edges and gilt facing. On either cover is a representation of the Pope's impals of office in gold. The case in which the book was sent is finished by two solid silver clasps. The presentation will be made by Rev. Dr. D. J. O'Connell, Secretary to the Apostolic Delegate, who is now in the Eternal City.

— Our venerable and esteemed contemporary the Boston Pilot, has this to say of a secret association in whose ranks in this State many Catholics are enrolled: "The A. O. U. W. is a secret order that is wandering over the United States in the garb of a benefit society. In New England, at least, the order is a double-dealer, and none but 'native' Americans (meaning Anglo-Americans, or such Irish-Americans) are allowed on the second deck." It is about the same in California, nearly all the "managers" being high-up Masons or affiliates of some other equally disgraceful secret organization.

—Our readers will find on the third page this week two very interesting original contributions. One is the second instalment of the progress the faith is making in Medoc county—where it is said nothing grows but sin and sagebrush. The other is a letter from Sister Mary Francis Clare, giving an account of the foundation of her first house of the Sisters of Poor in Arizona. This eminent Religious pays a deserved compliment to the women of Ireland for the great share they are entitled to in spreading Catholic faith all over the world, and gives a very interesting account of her audience with the Holy Father.

— The next Sunday there will be a great demonstration in Walchard, a small village of Moravia, from which place one thousand years ago St. Methodius set forth to convert the Sclavic people to Christianity, on which will be held the one thousandth anniversary of that event. All the Austrian Catholic Bishops will assemble to pray at the grave of the Saint on that day. From Poland, too, a vast concourse of pilgrims is expected. The event is to be made a grand demonstration of the indivisibility of Catholic Sclavism against the Sclavism which groups itself around the Russian church.

— The Paris Temps publishes a letter stating that the twenty-five Germans who were engaged at Berlin by Le-Long-Fec have all had to take Chinese names upon entering the service of the Celestial empire. One of them, who was formerly Captain of a corvette, is now called Wang-Li-Tsing, which, when turned into English, means Mr. High Walk. He has just been promoted to the rank of Admiral, and now commands the Chao Tsang. Another German officer is now named Lin Pao, or Mr. Six Cannons. The pay of these officers must be very high; for the commander of the Chinese squadron receives nearly $250 a month, and about $7,500 is the amount guaranteed to the family of each man in case he is killed by the French.

—They have adopted a new plan in Cincinnati to pay off Archbishop Purcell's debt. The Catholic Telegraph tells the glad tidings in this paragraph: "A prominent business man (German) of this city, has taken out an insurance policy on his life for ten thousand dollars for the benefit of the immortal Archbishop Purcell and heirs. We have seen the policy which is the old reliable Ætna Life Insurance Company of Hartford, Conn., and is made payable to Archbishop Elder in trust for the creditors of Archbishop Purcell, and in the event of his death, to his successor in office. The gentleman, who is actuated by a spirit of true Christian charity, has set an example well worthy of imitation. By general consent the amount thus subscribed has been added to the Telegraph Memorial Fund. Next."

— The Northwestern Chronicle of Minnesota gives currency to the news that this Summer six Indian boys of the Catholic Missions of the Rocky Mountains, will be taken to Ireland to be educated for the priesthood in the missionary college lately established near Limerick. Should the young men persevere and receive Holy Orders they will return to their native West to labor among those of their own race. Something like this used to happen ago, but not in some time. Perhaps the son of a wild Red Man should go from the banks of the Missouri and the Yellowstone to the far off Shannon to receive an apostolic training, and drink at the fountains of the Irish Church. Yet it is not improbable that Europe may see students sit at the feet of Irish masters and her seminaries have penetrated every land. The experiment will be watched with interest by the Church in America, and we are hopeful of its success.

—Those half-witted people who are constantly harping upon what they foolishly call the "conflict between science and the Catholic Church," will be delighted to read on the first page of this week's MONITOR the extract from that many of the Catholic ecclesiastics in Italy are among the foremost savants in Europe in relation to astronomy and the physical sciences. There is not now, never has been, and never can be any conflict between Science and Religion. Truth is the vital principle of both, and truth can never contradict itself. The only "conflict," therefore, arises from the false conclusions of men who aim at making the supernatural subservient to the natural order and try to argue therefrom that revealed religion is not compatible with truth. The fallacies and specious propositions of such men are calculated to deceive the masses of the people, hence the Church unceasingly opposes the deceit practiced to make error appear as truth.

— Science has come more come forward to confirm the truths of revealed religion. Opinions have differed as to whether God-Man, in his life on which our Blessed Saviour was crucified, was or was not situated within the present walls of Jerusalem. The Gospel itself affirms that the God-Man was put to death outside the gate, close to the city. The excavations which have been for some time carried on in the Holy City at the instance of the Russian Government, have just resulted in a discovery which leaves no all doubt upon the point. The man engaged in the work have brought to light the city wall which existed at that time, together with the gate leading to the Via Dolorosa, through which the Saviour of the World passed on His way to the place of agony and of death. It follows, therefore, that the Mount Calvary and the Holy Sepulchre which the Faithful have since venerated were in reality the scenes of the death and burial of the Divine Founder of Christianity.

— A Protestant preacher is simply a hireling who is prepared to perform certain duties for so many dollars per quarter (invariably in advance!) In proof of how little some Protestant preachers are about Christianity it is only necessary to note the fact that a few weeks ago a pagan Japanese died in New York, and his friends thought it would be "highly respectable" to have him buried according to the "Christian style," with a big German band, a wagon load of flowers, and all the other fashionable follies of modern sectarian funeral shows. Accordingly the services of an accommodating preacher named Doane was hired, the Japanese body was brought to the church, and a floral cross, anchor and other floral foolishness was placed over the coffin. Dr. Doane did his share of the dirke with great grace and unction, put his money in his purse—and buried a man who did not believe in Christianity when living, after a so called "Christian" fashion! From all such freethinkers "Christianity" good Lord deliver us.

The Consul General of Nicaragua on Central American Affairs.

The Consul-General of Nicaragua who resides in this city, devoted Good Friday to the profanation of a letter upon Central American affairs, which demands more than ordinary notice not only on account of the source from whence it emanated, but on account of the black hearted bigotry which the Nicaragua representative injected into it on that Good Friday, which fittingly dated its birth.

After indulging in an amount of personal laudation which is calculated to gratify the egotism of the writer for all time than it interests the reading public, the Consul-General advances the opinion that President Barrios of Guatemala "did a good thing in expelling the Jesuits from his country, thereby reclaiming it from the total ruin that always follows religious supremacy." And then, by way of strengthening his individual opinion, and adding additional lustre to his idol, the Consul-General vouchsafes to enlighten the American public concerning English history by telling them that Henry VIII. "was the regenerator of his country by the protection given to the Protestant religion and the suppression of the convents."

We grant that in the case of the Consul General of Nicaragua it is "a fellow feeling" that makes him so "wondrous kind" to the Royal Bastard and the legendary King Henry 'As the representative of Nicaragua the Consul General must be true to the principal principles of that so-called Republic which has already endured Henry VIII. of England in its robbery of religious houses, in its suppression of convents; and its unlawful and unwarrantable exile of Catholic priests. A country with such a record is well represented by Sam Emerson where the words of an agent are but a reflex of the work of the government of Nicaragua.

Of the character of the ruffian Barrios as the persecutor of God's Church at already familiar to a great majority of the readers of the Monitor. He it was who forcibly exiled the Jesuits and other Religious from Guatemala, openly defrauding them of their rights, and personal property, denying them a right of a hearing before their accusers, and forcing them to depart from the country they had labored to Christianize.

The example thus set by Barrios was eagerly imitated by the Nicaragua government only four years ago, when nineteen Jesuit Fathers were exiled in a manner just as brutal as that employed by Barrios or his persecuting predecessor in the persecution of God's Church—Henry VIII.

The Consul-General alludes to the "total ruin that always follows religious supremacy" as one cause for congratulating Barrios upon his "good thing." But the "total ruin" caused by robbing and exiling Religious orders can draw no word of censure from the Religious-hating representative of Nicaragua! Henry VIII. of England is eulogized; Barrios is boastfered with praise; the representative of a land which learned its lesson of iniquitous injustice towards innocent priests from the example set by the worst monarch that ever sat on the English throne, and the vilest public character that ever cursed Central America.

The Consul-General of Nicaragua has evinced in their hatred of God's Church, their persecution of God's priests, and their liability for creating a chasm of crime where all before was peace, order and prosperity "Religious Superstition" is an undefined term used by unscrupulous writers when they wish to "arouse criminal hatred against characters and to be against the Catholic Church. With the Consul-General of Nicaragua it may be considered "superstition" on the part of Christians to believe in God or the holy Bible; it may be "superstition" to believe in sacramental grace or the saving influence of prayer and good works. But—thank God a thousand times—Christianity does not depend upon the ipse dixit of Guatala, and the transparent Founder of religion came from Nazareth and not from Nicaragua!

Henry the Bastard and Barrios the bad may receive here scorchy from rascaldom who hate religion, or from enemies of the Church who hate Christian light. This is a free country and every man may take his own selection, but we hope—for the sake of other Consuls-General who are proud of their official position—that the local representative of Nicaragua will hereafter refrain from rushing into print as the advocate or the apologist of men whose only right to recognition is based upon their apostacy to God and their injustice and inhumanity towards their own subjects whom they had sworn before high heaven to protect!

Mutilating the Monitor.

There are some cranks in California with whom it goes hard to have to read the Catholic truths set forth in the MONITOR every week, and they have hit on a plan by which they can mutilate the Fra Public Library with their presence, manifest their malice and hatred of the Catholic Church, and yet not be publicly exposed. We have, however, that impudent scamp who, during the Sunday closures, locking that institution in defiance of the law, and of the incompatible with even the most rigid forms of Christianity, has for years past been thrown through those sanctum sanctorum in the Monitor, and has thus been able to do a gratuitously injurious, and festival of subscription, which we have no doubt, has

Farm and Home.

The Ideal of True Womanhood.

"Earth's noblest thing, a woman perfected." As such artist has his own special theory of beauty, such philosopher his favorite dream for the world's good, such philanthropist his pet scheme for man's benefit, so every masculine mind has a particular notion of what constitutes the true ideal of womanhood.

A nation's position it, civilization might be known by the value it has upon woman's influence. Where this is rated highly, the people are advancing; where woman's worth is ignored, the nation is going to decay.

The pages of history prove this with records of woman. Joan of Arc is a notable example of heroism. Admiring great deeds for her country, she won for herself the immortal title of Maid of Orleans. For three hundred years the gratitude of her nation exempted her native village from taxation.

Those who lay great stress on the power of beauty see in Mary Queen of Scots another striking figure. Her famous predecessor, Helen of Troy, immortalized by Homer, was the cause of ten years' war.

Man's deeds abroad have been, and still are, shaped by the influence at his friends, and it is impossible to limit the invisible power of a woman.

The embodiment of a boy's heroine is his mother; and, as years roll on, it often happens that a man's whole destiny depends on a woman's frail will. To comfort, to cheer and to relieve the monotony of life is no ignoble mission, and for this woman is eminently adapted. To be "the line of poetry in a world of prose," to oil the rusty wheels of life, soften the rough pieces, smooth the rugged spots in life's pathway and to this "a perfect woman nobly planned" will find her chief happiness.

In these days, when so much is said about woman's rights and woman's wrongs, no one can avoid forming some opinion on the subject. It is a difficult matter to say how far it is wise and good for woman to compete with man in paths of public fame and usefulness. The few who are peculiarly fitted for this difficult task will easily overcome the obstacles and prejudices which hinder the softer sex from standing "shoulder to shoulder" with men in the battle of life. But among those who make the attempt there will be many failures; and where stern duty or a special vocation does not call a woman forth to labor for others, she will find her true position in adorning and controlling the household in which she has been placed. There she will find continual tasks; there lies her special sphere. To "teach the young idea how to shoot" will occupy her well-directed energy, while she remains the mighty "Thou who rock the cradle rule the world."

The ideal of to-day differs from the ideal of yesterday; and my neighbor's ideal probably differs widely from my own. Still, there are certain broad lines of excellence which, all are agreed, form the basis of a perfect character. Truthfulness, honesty, charity toward the failings of others, a companionate heart, a tendency to pray with those that weep, and—that is more difficult—to rejoice with those that do rejoice, a judgment, tempered with cordial sympathy—these qualities render a woman "a joy forever," even when she cannot be "a thing of beauty."

How glad we are when we meet a woman superior to the petty spites and foibles, the small jealousies and vanities, which foster the unfortunate feelings of enmity that women are so often supposed to have for one another. The sooner that women rid themselves of these two apparent blemishes the better.

It is to her credit that woman's virtuous nerve shines more brilliantly than in the dark hours of adversity. When troubles crowd thickly round her does she, as her hopeless sisters and animate dropping sister, her fortitude resists the shocks of Fate, and she calm and steady rudeness of misfortune. Does she the desponding to turn from dwelling on the distressful present to anticipate a better and a brighter future.

A woman must be something more than "a phenomen of delight." Her standard of right and wrong must not be controlled by that ideal of worldly excellence—Mrs. Grundy. This potent personage is allowed to rule too despotically in the human world, and it is time that her tyranny received some check.

The ideal woman is naturally refined, and is not vulgarity in every form, whether it be handiness or not. The approaches to the superior endowments of others, while she is content not neglect the cultivation of her own mind. Her beauty does not alone depend upon symmetry of feature; it owes a great deal of its charm to the outward expression of excellence—"the ambassador of a multitude of sweetness." Her endowed, she deserves to be the polar star of some good man's existence, while he proudly boasts that

"Queen lowrier might be glad to live
I am the slave of her superior power."

The spirit of self sacrifice, which we meet only in women whose natures are noble, finds a different outlet to day from that of the prophetic Saint Theresa, who, when a child, set out from Avila to seek for martyrdom in the country of the Moors.

It has been said that "love will know nothing of her greatest men." The same may perhaps be said of woman. The record of a woman's fame may never penetrate beyond the four walls of her home, yet in the finness of her life permeates through other lives, outward through time into eternity.

Different Ideas about Eating.

Julius Cesar records that the savage Britons accounted it impious to eat goose. Gallus sometimes the same savory bird as to only be put on a level with the ostrich. Shades of Father Christmas! to call the goose no better than the ostrich! Who would dream of eating an ostrich—that unnatural-bipeed which is said to be able to digest anything short of lace collars! We say short of lace collars, because that was the only item found in the stomach of a tame ostrich which amused mysteriously after a hearty meal of rusty nails and miscellaneous stuffing, among which happened to be some of the family washing of its proprietor. But Galen was no worse than Aristotle, who condemned the flesh of hawks; and indeed, Galen himself recommended the flesh of foxes. He restored the season, however, to the autumn, when they were been feasting on the stolen grapes of the vineyards. Yet, while Galen, along with Herodotus, considered the flesh of dogs most excellent, Gallus, with Pliny, repudiated horseflesh as utterly abominable. We have not come to eating horseflesh in this country, but in many parts of the Continent it is sought for sale as freely as beef and mutton, and that it is quite as palatable the present writer can testify. Herodotus tells that in Persia not only was horseflesh eaten, but also that camels were roasted whole at times of great rejoicing, just as in our grandfathers time whole oxen used to be roasted on special occasions.

SOLD TO FEBRUARY 1st, 1885.

No other Compound on earth can show a similar record, and no Physician a better one. The highest Medical Authorities pronounce it the only known Specific for Kidney, Liver and Urinary diseases; that it has no equal as a BLOOD PURIFIER, and that it is the safest safeguard against contagious diseases, both acute and chronic, keeping the Kidneys and Liver of delicate Ladies, it has no equal. We can furnish over One Hundred Thousand voluntary Testimonials similar to the following. Read them for the good of yourself, your family and your friends. Note how this vast number of bottles was distributed, as evidenced by our sales-books.

Boston, - 936,842.
HON. N. A. PLYMPTON (Hon. B. F. Butler's campaign manager), of Worcester, Mass. in May, 1880, was prostrated by kidney colic, caused by the passage of gravel from the kidneys to the bladder. He then began using Warner's Safe Cure and in a short time passed a large stone and a number of smaller ones. October, 1884, Mr. Plympton wrote, "I have had no recurrence of my old trouble since Warner's Safe Cure cured me."

Providence, - 128,947.
G. W. FULTON, Esq., Fulton, Texas, suffered for ten years from serious bladder disorders and lost from 15 to 50 pounds; in 1881 he used 14 bottles of Warner's Safe Cure, and recovered his natural weight and said, "I consider myself well for a man of 70." December 20, 1884, he wrote, "I have had no symptoms of kidney disorder since 1881, and if I did I should rely upon Safe Cure."

Portland, Me. - 330,829.
JOSEPH JACQUES, Esq., St. Albans, Vt., in January 1879 was taken desperately sick with Bright's Disease of the kidneys. His wife thought he could not live a week. He began using Warner's Safe Cure, and before he had finished the second bottle he was able to sit on the bed and dress himself. He continued using the Safe Cure, and in June, 1884, he wrote, "I have been free from kidney disease and in good health since." Physicians express great surprise.

Kansas City, - 538,395.
JAMES M. DAVIS, 520 South Pearl street, Albany, N. Y., formerly resided at Jaggers Iron Co., in 1881 suffered from very serious kidney trouble; he weighed 185 pounds; he used 18 bottles of Warner's Safe Cure, and from January 1882 he wrote, "That was fully three years ago. I have had no trouble since, and I feel first class and weigh 208 pounds. I would not be sick for a year of their years ago for all the dollars in the United States."

Canada, - 1,175,868.
ROBERT GRAHAM, 77 Penn street, Brooklyn, N. Y., suffered for six years from inflammation of the bladder and urinary. Six physicians, specialists, gave him up to die. In 1881, he began Warner's Safe Cure and the continued use, he says, effected a complete cure. Under date June 20, 1884, he wrote: "My health improves every day. I can now do a day's work without fatigue, which I could not do for years before I used your Safe Cure."

Bal. Of N. Eng., - 331,315.
EX-GOV. ALEX. R. JACOB, Newport, Ky., in 1881, during a political canvass, health gave way and he was prostrated with severe kidney trouble. Lost 40 pounds of flesh. Used Warner's Safe Cure in 1881, and June 23, 1884, writes: "I have never enjoyed better health,—all owing to Warner's Safe Cure.

Chicago, - 2,181,520.
CHAS. E. STEPHENS, of Louisville, Ky., Nov. 15, 1884, wrote, "When my daughter was ten years of age she was seriously attacked by severe kidney disorder. She recovered temporarily, but a year ago was again prostrated. She was unable to twice her natural size, had frequent back-ache, nausea, and other disquieting symptoms of the disorder. All her medical physicians agreed that she could not recover. Her case and treatment were integrated to a New York specialist, who said recovery was impossible. In June, August we began giving her Warner's Safe Cure, and wholly through the use of Warner's Safe Cure, she is apparently as well as ever." November, 1884, he wrote, "My daughter is apparently in perfect health."

Detroit, - 635,210.
N. F. HESS, Rochester, N. Y., the well known lumber manufacturer, three years ago took twenty-five bottles of Warner's Safe Cure for liver disease. In August 20th, 1884, he reported, "I consider myself fully cured, and give credit is wholly due to Warner's Safe Cure.

Milwaukee, - 344,171.
THE REV. ANDREW J. GRAHAM, (P.E.) Grand Island, Neb., in 1879 was pronounced fatally sick with Bright's Disease of the kidneys. Warner's was prescribed and he could get no relief from physicians. He then followed Warner's Safe Cure treatment, and July 7, 1884, he wrote, "All local trouble has disappeared. Have taken no medicine for nearly a year."

Minnesota, - 486,013.
R. W. HAMILTON, Milton, Santa Rosa Co., Florida, December 15th, 1884, writes, that "four years ago my wife was suffering with liver complaint which resulted in dropsy. Her physicians declared her incurable. Her weight was 200 pounds; she used 12 bottles of Warner's Safe Cure, and has gained 40 pounds. Her dropsical symptoms have disappeared, and she is now in good health."

N. B. SHELEY, Esq., of Bradford, Pa., in 1882, was very severe in his attacks of kidney disorder and rheumatism, which gradually grew worse. Physicians being unable to assist him, his last resort was Warner's Safe Cure, and in June 21, 1884, he wrote, "My health is better than for two years past, and in consequence is better than it has been for five years. When I catch cold and have any slight kidney trouble, I resume the medicine again and the result is invariably satisfactory."

Bal. Southern States, - 2,725,513.
REV. JAMES ERWIN, Methodist minister, West Point, N. Y., was long and very severely afflicted with inflammation of the prostate gland. In very exhausted condition in 1882, he began the use of Warner's Safe Cure, and June 19th, 1884, wrote, "The relief obtained two years ago proved permanent; physicians express great surprise."

San Francisco, - 932,210.
S. A. JOHNSTON, Lockington, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1884, stated that for thirty years he had suffered from kidney disease, which had at times entirely prostrated him, and he was entirely cured by the use of Warner's Safe Cure. He adds: "I feel as sure "I took no or no licensed Warner's Safe Cure, and it has permanently cured me."

B. F. WORKELL, of Ellsville, Pa. in 1879, was prostrated with Bright's Disease of the kidneys, and under the best management, grew worse. "On the advice of Governor Drew's sister, I began Warner's Safe Cure, sixty bottles of which restored me to full enjoyment of health. I have now been cured about four years, and my case is regarded as a miraculous." Governor Drew of Jacksonville, Florida, April 20th, 1884, says "Mr. Worrell's case and cure give me great confidence in Warner's Safe Cure, and I unhesitatingly indorse it."

Cincinnati, - 655,250.
MRS. S. A. CLARK, East Granby, Conn., in 1881 was entirely cured of all constitutional and female complaints of the worst kind. Been sick two years, and tried everything. In November, 1884, she wrote, "Warner's Safe Cure cured me four years ago, and has kept me well."

The Jesuits in Scotland.

It is almost gratifying to learn that the Jesuits are now fully settled in Scotland. Their new college at Garnethill near Glasgow, was opened a few days ago. The Archbishop of Glasgow blessed the building. The Marquis of Bute declared it formally opened, and said

"It is a pleasure to congratulate the Catholics of Scotland up on another step in the economy of that tradition with regard to the relations of the higher education with our Church. To deny such a tradition with regard to the higher education would be sardly possible in a country where three of

The Fox's Dinner-Party.

One of the funniest animal stories I ever heard was lately told by a sober Quaker gentleman from New Jersey, who said it was related to him by the eye witness himself. It was one day in a field near a stream where several geese were running. Presently he saw one of them disappear under a sudden jerk. While he looked for her to rise again he saw a fine gander in the water and trot off to the woods with the unfortunate goose in its mouth. He then chanced to go in a direction where it was easy to watch his movements. He carried his burden to a cross made on purpose for the purpose. There he scratched away a mass of leaves, made a hole, put his goose within, and covered it up very carefully. Then he sat down at a little distance, entertained behind the flock of geese, and finished unslowly the goose he had left in the woods above the surface. But this time he was not so fortunate in his dinner. The goose by some means took the alarm, and ran away with a piece of the skin. The fox finding himself detected, walked off in a direction opposite to the place where his victim was hidden, and, when he had disappeared, he hole, put the goose in its basket, replaced the leaves and trampled carefully and with intellectual appreciation the language of the Gospel. As for Greek, it is, I believe, the language of the noblest instrument for the expression of an idea which as far as we know, has ever existed on earth, and in European thought and art it is the fount of all. Latin is not so much surpassed in human literature. It is the language of Rome in history, but it has also spoken, of the highest human intellect, that I am sure, is upon any one to whom it is closed as other languages are closed. Appearance were certainly very much against the fact, the tall stalk between his legs, and he held his head down, bowed down with a timed grace at his disappointed companion. Ingenuity is what he seemed to be attempt to get up a character for generosity which he knew he was not, and he seemed an unlucky sea-crate and cuffed him most unmercifully. Poor Reynard gave the infliction with the utmost patience, and seemed off, as if aware that he had received no more than might be expected under the circumstances.

"I'll Say My Prayers."

If I should say to you, my little readers, that I am going to tell you a story about a little girl, the first question that you would ask me would be, "Is it a true story?" and "Where does she live?" So I will tell you that it is a true story, and that she lives, nor Erie, but plain, honest Julia, and she lives in a town not a large town, but a pleasant one in California. She is a little girl, and, as a rule, good, though sometimes this little girl, as I will tell you, as I will tell you.

She was playing one day her mother bid her she must go out into the dining-room, and stay there until she was a little girl. She went out saying very hard, but she knew that she must do as she was bid, her mother told her to come in, but she didn't look just right. There was no smile on her face, and very soon she came in with a pouting face and said, "I don't want to be good, I don't want to be good." Now Julia, which was a good little girl, was very, very sorry and made a great noise for a few minutes. Presently she stopped crying, and her mother went close to the door to see if she could hear what Julia was saying, and she heard her saying the little prayer she had been taught. "Dear Jesus, bless papa and mamma and Willie and Mary, and make me a good little girl, for Christ's sake. Amen."

Her mother opened the door very softly, and there sat Julia on the floor, a big doll up with a very sweet smile and said

"I'm a good girl now, mamma, I was so naughty and felt so dreadful bad, I said to myself, 'I'll say my prayers, and maybe Jesus will help me to be a good little girl.'"

And sure enough she was just the best girl you ever saw. Julia's mamma thought word of it, and her whole mind is Julia's from that time.

Guard against Vulgar Language.

There is as much connection between the words and the thoughts as there is between the thoughts and the actions. The latter is only an expression of the former. Thus, if we have the power to exact upon the soul, and learn the skill of expression, the young man who allows himself to use one vulgar word, or one profane word, thought there is a foul spot upon his mind, but by his appearance he will be not the actual foul spot, and diffuses it, till, by indulgence, it will engulfs and ruin his soul. Its model of pure words as of pure thoughts. If you can control the tongue, that be impure words are pronounced by it, you will soon be able to control the mind, and save it from contamination. You will soon find the thoughts hastening to the purifying influence of the Holy Spirit, and, if you are sincere, you will be able to say, "Lord, cleanse my heart, and I shall appear unto Thee with a pure heart." Let the young man who allows himself to use vulgar language, bear after a word anywhere which you would be ashamed to speak in the presence of the most refined female or the most religious man. Try this practice a little while, and you will soon have a good control of yourself.

The Camel.

The camel has twice the carrying power of an ox. With an ordinary load of 400 lbs. he can travel twelve to fourteen days without water, going fourteen miles a day. The camel is the only beast of burden that retains strength longer the decline at 20 lbs. Although they can go without water, they are fatigued at the butcher, the flesh tasting like veal. The Tartars have herds of these animals, often 1,000 belonging to one family. They were transported to Australia, but died from the effects of great heat, and the Europeans thought the camel was a failure

NEWS OF THE WORLD.

CABLEGRAMS FROM ALL COUNTRIES.

Fete of Irish Informers.

NEW YORK, March 30.—The Dublin correspondent of the "Herald" cables today as follows: Joe Smith, who was formerly a detective, the man who pulled down the house in Grafton Street where Burke on the day when the latter was assassinated in Phoenix Park, has just died Smith has been in a dreadful state of health for months past. He has suffered from constant fear of meeting a death like Carey's. Another informer, Michael Kavanagh, the driver of the car in which the assassins escaped from the park, is now in an asylum.

A Plethora of Salooms.

NEW YORK, April 1.—The Excise Commissioners refused yesterday to license the saloon at No. 34 Cortlandt street, on the ground that there are enough saloons in the block already, there being six and upper floors in every building.

Almost Buried Alive.

FRESNO, Cal., March 31.—Jesse Smith Crosby, aged 15 years, died apparently last Thursday, and was prepared for burial, which was to take place today. He preserved a life-like appearance, and at the grave, to satisfy the mother the coffin was opened. A slight moisture attracted attention, and the body was removed to a house, where after several hours' incessant labor the boy was restored to consciousness and will now, it is believed, recover.

Walker Wants to Ireland.

DUBLIN, March, 31.—Elaborate preparations are being made in Tipperary for the reception of the Prince and Princess of Wales. It is said that Sergeant, the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, will not appear at the reception, but demand a subsidy from Parliament, lest he should be robbed by the Nationalists.

Fenian Davis to Remain in Switzerland.

LONDON, March 31.—Eugene Davis, the Fenian agent, who was released from prison on condition of his leaving the country, is in Switzerland and will not return to Ireland, he having proved that he is an informer, and that he had no connection with the expelled Anarchists. He has gone to Lausanne.

Against the Bibles in the Public Schools.

HARTFORD, Pa., March 31.—The Catholic priests have published the Mercer county courts asking that the School Directors of Sharpville be restrained from allowing the use of the Bible in the public schools. The petitioners claim that the service is offensive to all members of the Catholic Church who happen to have their children by nonsectarian erroneous views. The question is agitating the whole country, as it is the first time that it has been carried into the courts in the shape of a suit. It is the intention of the defended side to take it to the Supreme Court.

An Address by Monsignor Capel.

NEW YORK, April 1.—Monsignor Capel lectured yesterday in the main Exposition building on the subject of education. He spoke of the excellence of the Christian Brothers' method. He says Europe is now awakening to the fact that the Christian Brothers, and the attention of others to the conditions of the French schoolmaster, will be necessitated the exclusion of some paintings in the Art Hall and improved upon the method of Ireland. Monsignor Capel visited the Government building.

Irish Brewery in John Bull's Canon.

It is a significant commentary on the vacated policy of Bismarck, that the man, who, of all his generals is chief command in the field, two are Irishmen and two of Scotch extraction; and the latest reports intimate that the English War Office is now doubtful if it can spare "Tommy" enough to send a couple of fighting Hibernians the Wakefield Roberts, whom the Duke of Cambridge hates so cordially, that he would rather let his Highlanders go without the drivers of their necessity to call upon him.

In Favor of the Evacuation of Sendan.

LONDON, April 3.—At an enormous meeting here last night, Independent and Liberal and Radical Members of Parliament were present. A resolution was adopted in favor of the evacuation of Soudan by the British troops.

THE WEEK'S NEWS

—FROM— IRELAND.

IRISH NEWS BY MAIL.

Arrangements.—The death is announced of Sir James M. Strange, Bart., at his residence, Lissmagh, in the 73d year of his age. Deceased at one time represented the county in Parliament. He is succeeded to the title by his brother.

Anything.—The Provisional Committee of the Belfast National League, was dissolved on March 9th, and a new and permanent, fully staffed executive, Rev. Father Quinn and J. McQuade vice-presidents, F. J. O'Neill and Mr. Thos. Sheridan, secretaries, Mr. Hughes treasurer. The chief officers, in addition to the number of clergy who have taken place on the committee. They are Fathers Crane, McGrory, Moore, Magee, and O'Reilly. Thus no fewer than six patriotic priests have taken the most practical adhesion to the National movement.

Cavan.—Alexander Stafford, of Castlecomber, in the county of Cavan, Harmer, was, on the 29th of February, allowed bankruptcy.

Wishes Transfer.—The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland attended, on March 9, the opening of the new Technical School in the Dublin Exhibition Palace. The Lord Lieutenant said that the 78 their recent visit to Belfast, he had 50 per cent, and they were not able to do the present resin. The application was refused, and the reason left to a local judge declaring they cannot, under the circumstances, pay the present rent.

Cork.—The artisans of Cork are taking great interest in the success of the Irish Exhibition, and are displaying a praiseworthy desire to participate in it. On March 11 the Mayor of Cork received an influential deputation of the trades of the city, who promised every assistance to the project, viz: premium, and necessary space for their goods and furniture. Mr. Lyons, the Mayor, undertook the work of the committee. With one measure the depth of the Lord Lieutenant, the Mayor, and the Committee, the Exhibition will be a great success. I hope from the humble: How can children even know, in Ireland, that they are so hopelessly drifted to sea? In after years they do not look back to the past with tender recollections. They have no local attachments. They are the waifs of civilization. Certainly it is worse while for a man and his wife and the nearly grown up and dear daughter to remain in a place shall be, by any effort and self denial, a home for them and their children, and that which they can beautify and learn to love, a home in the world, a necessary in which they can come and go, and conduct the business of life, and be free from the fear of being unfairly treated, and be treated like people of land. This condition stimulates industry, promotes prudence, turns money into a legitimate channel that might otherwise go to the sho-keepers, and furnishes every a value place to which children are doing a good work in the actually tolerable to or-ment their own homes, and the aspirations of the April lessons up of humble establishments ought to inspire hundreds of people with a fresh and free feeling of interest in the earth a portion of which they have the fee.

INAUGURATION DAY.

When the day for the inauguration of the President of the United States was fixed upon it was for the reason that the 4th was the nearest sabbath on Monday. Poetry

MAN'S MORTALITY.

(The following poem is considered a product worthy the best order. The original was found in an Irish MS. in Trinity College, Dublin. There is reason to think that the poem was written by one of those primitive Christians who, in the early days of Ireland, chanted the Gospel in song and chanted at the funeral assembly of the Christian dead and here, laid in the Saxonic table of Tuth.)

Like a damask rose you see,
Or like a blossom on a tree,
Or like the dainty flower in May,
Or like the morning to the day,
Or like the sun, or like the shade,
Or like the pomp that Jonah made;
Even such is man whose thread is spun,
Drawn out and out and so is done.
The rose withers, the blossom blasteth,
The flower fades, the morning hasteth,
The sun sets, the shadow flies,
The gourd consumes, the man—he dies.

Like the grass that's newly sprung,
Or like the lake that's near bounds,
Or like the bird that's here to-day,
Or like the pastime day in May,
Or like an hour, or like a span,
Or like the shaking of the swan;
Even such is man, who lives by breath,
Is here, not there, is life and death.
The grass withers, the lake is reaved,
The bird is flown, the hour ended,
The sport is done, the swan sang out,
The man's now dead, man's life is done.

Like to the bubble in the brook,
Or in a glass much like a look,
Or like the shuttle in weaver's hand,
Or like the writing on the sand,
Or like a bladder, or like a stream,
Or like the gilding of a steam;
Even such is man, whose life's breath,
Is spent and blown, is life and death.
The bubble's cast, the look hoyed,
The shuttle's flung, the writing's hist,
The thought is past, the dream is gone,
The water glide, man's life is done.

Like an arrow from a bow,
Or like a swift course of water flow,
Or like the time twixt foot and shoe,
Or like the spider's feeble web,
Or like the ground by the plow,
Or like the footing of a doe,
Even such is man, whose brittle state
Is alway subject unto fate
The arrow shot, the fleet soon speed,
The time ne'er stinks, the web soon rent,
The race soon run, the foot soon won,
The doe soon found, man's life soon done.

Like the lightning from the sky,
Or like a post that quick doth fly,
Or like the post of a day,
Or like a journey three days long,
Or like a weaver's shuttle swift,
Or like a pace, or like a place
Even such is man, who lamps up sorrow,
Leaves but this day and flies away morrow.
The lightning past, the post must on,
The week is short, the journey so,
The pace doth rest, the plum doth fall,
The shuttle stinketh, and so must all.

ST. PATRICK AND THE PRINCE.

BY SIMS REAVOR C. DOWNEY.

Cormac, the Chieftain, son of Cor, the King,
A stalwart man, with hair like raven's wing,
And deep blue eye (bright as his own Lough Rea)
Was emphatically a handsome boy!
Cormac, the Prince, before St. Patrick stood,
Beside a fountain in a Monastery wood,
A wattled with his own brave Ulster band,
Baptized at the ancient Druidic font.

Mitred and stoled, the great Apostle reared
His noble body, his sagacious head
Shining like silver in the sunlight dim,
When lance-bearers, with shouts of pride, sought
Demanded perfect freedom for the hunt
A contrast bold—the Bishop frown proud
The pilfered crozier in his holy palm,
Then, silhouetted against a pearly sky,
Drove down the heavy iron-pointed rod
Deep (as he dared) in the green sward!

There stood it, upright, planted, as it were,
Rooted the hawthorn and the shadowy fir;
Then, with a smile, he turned to the Prince
Saying, "Young Cormac, I am old, and my feet
Ache with the weight of my years, and I need
Yet a Cormac's hand—hold! I need it (I am Grieved to the earth) The prince's iron rod
Was bedded deep in Ulster's prehistoric bog!

"O Son!" the saint in tender anguish cried,
"Didst meet the Jews, and yet in silence bide?"
"Father, I did—but—Christmas—was—the—day—
Of—Our—Lord!"

Two sons strange portion of the sacred rite,
And when then said that one on Calvary,
My loving Saviour bled and died for me,
Could I do less than bide? Some sacred ashes,
Thou bear the blow in silence if Ho bake!"

Literary Miscellany.

Sister Celeste.

BY C. C. GOODWIN.

In one of the mountain towns of Northern California, a good many years ago, while yet good women, compared to the number of the men, were disproportionately few, suddenly one day upon the street, and in the unobtrusive garb of a Sister of Charity, appeared a woman whose marvelous loveliness the coarse garments and monkish hood prescribed by the order could not conceal. There was a Sisters' Hospital in the place, and this was one of the do-gooded women who had come to minister to the sick in that Hospital. She was of medium size and hight, and despite her shapeless garments, it was easy to see how her form was beautiful. The hand that nursed a baby was a delicate one; under her unsightly hood glimpses of a brow as white as a planet's light could be caught, the coarse shoes upon her feet were tiness size large. When she raised her eyes, from the inner depths a light like that of kindly stars shone out, and, though a Sister of Mercy, when she smiled upon you her lips which seemed to say that of all features, a feature of kisses was hardest to resist.

STAPLEY, SIMPLY DIGNITY

In her mien, but in all her ways there was a dainty grace, which, upon the heavy eyes of the miners of that mountain town, above the enthusiasm. She could not have been more than twenty years of age. It was the old, old story we know as "Sister Celeste;" that she had recently come to the Western Coast, it was believed from France, and that was all that was known of her. When the Mother Superior at the Hospital was questioned about the new Sister, she simply answered: "Sister Celeste is a Sister now, she will be a glorified saint by and by." The first public appearance of Sister Celeste in the town was one Sunday afternoon, when she emerged from the Hospital and started to carry some delicacy to a poor, sick woman—Mrs. Di Lacy, who lived at the opposite end of the town from the Hospital; so to visit her the Nun was obliged to walk almost the whole length of the one long, crooked street which, in the narrow canyon, included all the business portion of the town. When the Nun started out from the Hospital, the town was full of miners, as was the habit in those days on Sunday afternoons, and as the Sister passed along the street sin against nature. Every hour her heart must protest against the starvation which feels; every day she must feel upon her robes the clasp of little hands which are not to be." One boisterous miner, a little in his cups, watched until the Sister disappeared around a bend in the crooked street, and then cried out "Did you see Amy, boys? That is the style of a woman that a man would die for, and die willing, I'm thinking!" Then drawing from his belt a bottle, he held it aloft and shouted "Here are nightly omens of the closest dust ever entered in Bear Gulch; it's all I have in the world, but I say

To any banker in this camp who will look crooked at that woman when she comes out this way, and let me see him do it. In just a minute and a half there would not be enough left of him for the Coroner to gather in a sack and sit on." After this, doubtless all the following week, Sister Celeste was seen going to and returning from the sick woman's house. It suddenly grew to be a habit with everybody to uncover their heads as Sister Celeste came by.

Sunday came around again, and it was noticed that on that morning the Nun went early to visit her charge, and remained longer than usual. In her return, she just about opposite the main saloon of the place, a kindly, elderly gentleman, who was universally known and respected, ventured to cross the path of the Sister, and addressed her as follows:

"I beg pardon, good Sister, but you are attending upon a sick person. We understand that it is a woman; may I not ask if we can not in some way assist you and your patient?" A faint flush swept over the glorious face of Sister Celeste as she raised her eyes, but simply and frankly, and with a slight French accent, she answered:

"The lady, kind sir, is very ill. Unless, in some way, we can manage to remove her to the Hospital, where she can have a nicely warmed room, and close nursing, I fear she will get live; but she is penniless, and we are very poor, and, moreover, I do not see how she can be moved, for there are no carriages."

She spoke with perfect distinctness, notwithstanding the slight foreign accent. The accent was no impediment; rather, from her lips, it gave her words a rhythm like music.

The man raised his voice. "Boys," he shouted, "there is a suffering woman up the street; she is

VERY DESTITUTE AND VERY ILL,

And must be removed to the Hospital. The first thing required is some money." Then taking of his hat with the hand, with the other he took from his pocket a twenty dollar piece; he put his money in the hat, then he sprang upon a low stump that was standing by the trail, and added: "I start the subscription; those who have a trifle that they can spare, will please pass around this way and drop the trifle, as they pass, into the hat." Then Sister Celeste had a new experience. In an instant she was surrounded by a shouting, surging, struggling crowd, all anxious to contribute. There was a babel of voices, but for once a California crowd was unanimous in the purpose which was being heard. The boys could not swear in the presence of Sister Celeste. In a few minutes the hat was full and eight hundred dollars was raised. It was poured out of the hat into a blanket, the corners of which was tied, and handed by the man who first addressed her, to Sister Celeste, with the remark that it was for her poor, and that when she needed more the boys would "stand in."

Again the Nun raised her eyes and in a low voice which trembled a little she said: "Please salute the gentlemen, and say to them, that God will keep the account. The man turned around and with an awkward laugh said: "Hope I'm not authorized, by one of His angels, to say that, for your convenience, I will take down your names, and give you credit."

Then a wild fellow cried out from the crowd:

"Three cheers for the angel!"

The cheers rang out like the braying of a thousand trumpets in accord. Then, in Spanish, Sister Celeste was advised by "Tiger, and the deep toned old day Californian "Tiger" rolled up the blanket like an ocean roar. It would have startled an ordinary woman, but Sister Celeste was looking at the purse, and it is doubtful if she heard it at all. Then the first speaker called from the crowd right step by step, and said:

"You were all married men in the States, and for all that I know to the contrary, were decent, respectable gentlemen. As I delegate you, as there are no carriages in this camp, to go to the sick woman's house and carry her to the Hospital, while the carriage proceeds in advance, and makes a place for her." This was agreed to, and the Sister was told that in half an hour she might expect her patient.

Then she turned away, the crowd watching her, and remarking that her hand when by it step seemed greatly quickened. Long after, the Mother Superior learned how when Sister Celeste reached the Hospital on that day she fell sobbing into the Mother's arms, and when she could command her voice, said: "Those shaggy men, that I thought were all tiger, are all angels disguised. Oh Mother! I have seen them as Elias and Enoch saw when the Master was transfigured."

The eight men held a brief consultation in the street; then going to a store, they bought a pair of very white blankets, six sheets, and four pillows. Borrow Harney's packer's needle and some twine, they sewed up the ends of the sheets, and the sides of the blankets, first rolling the woolen around one of the sides of the blanket. They then proceeded to the poor woman's house, one man in front, and told the women, gently, what they had come to do, and bade her have no fears that she was to be moved a gently that, if she would close her eyes, she would not know anything about it. The others were called in the blanket was laid upon the floor; the bed was lifted from its frame from the bedstead and laid on the blanket, the corners were nicely tucked under the mattress; four men seized the pick handles at the sides.

LIFTED THE BED,

Women and all from the floor; a fifth man stepped outside, raised the umbrella, and held it above the woman's face, and so, as gently as ever mother rocked her babe to sleep, the sick woman was carried the whole length of the street to the Hospital, where Sister Celeste and the Mother Superior received her.

Then all hands went up town and talked the matter over, and I am afraid that some of them drank a little, but the burden of all the talk, and all the toasts, was Sister Celeste.

After that the Nun was often seen, going on her errands of mercy, and it is true that some men who had been rough, and who had drank hard for months previous to the coming of the Sister, grew quiet in their lives, and ceased going to the saloon.

Old day's most laughable event transpired. Two men got quarreling in the street, which in a moment culminated in a fight. The friends of the respective men joined in, and soon there was a general fight in which about forty men were engaged. When it was at its hight (and such a fight meant something), Sister Celeste suddenly turned the sharp bend of the street, and came into the view not sixty yards from where the melee was raging in full fury. One of the fighters saw her, and made a sound between a hiss and a few whistle, a peculiar sound of warning, so significant that all

The very names of the most sacred Rosary are special and closer to devotion.

Volumes after volumes might be written to describe the many ways of express their meaning, but we must content ourselves with only touching on a few points. It should be borne in mind that the solution devotion of which we have been writing so much was the Rosary, commencing by the sweet name it now possesses, the Holy Rosary, and that it has various periods of its existence, several other names. In the beginning it was established, it was called the Psalter of Jesus, the Psalter of Jesus and we know that the name is still frequently employed in England, France, and in several other places to denote the Chapelet or material circlet used in reciting the devotion itself. (Chaumont sur le Loire Dictionnaire Universel Du Clergé du Siècle Horn, 1850, page 70). This name at first sight appears inappropriate, but it is carefully reflect on it, we will at once see that it has been applied intelligently and wisely, for the result of the Rosary, when it has been designedly ordained to obtain what is called the Psalter of Jesus, the Psalter of Jesus, is precisely for this very reason that we speak of the Rosary as the chaplet of Jesus, or the Psalter of Jesus, because it is the most powerful means of obtaining through it, and that by the mediation of the Blessed Virgin, Jesus Christ, the Redeemer, the Saviour, the Jesus of Nazareth, the Jesus of Bethlehem, the Jesus of Calvary, the Jesus of the Tabernacle, the Jesus of the Eucharist, the Jesus of the Holy Sacrifice, the Jesus of the Holy Ghost, the Jesus of the Holy Trinity

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

"Journalism is the greatest power in the world, because it is the chief agent in popularizing true, and propagating false, scientific opinion, and opinion governs the world. In our view, religious journalism is not only a legitimate and honorable calling, but it is the most important for the welfare of humanity, and is a sacred duty. What is and what ought to be the Catholic journalism but to combat error and to spread truth, whatever it may be—above all, the Divine truth."—Rt. Rev. Bishop Ireland, of Minnesota.

"Bad books and evil journals are the inheritance of Protestantism. The reformers of Germany, France and England, in their zeal against the Church of Christ, poured out a flood of literature, which, like a torrent, has swept over the nations, carrying with it the morals of the people, with devotion and fidelity."—Pius IX.

Editorial Notes.

—There are five Catholic Army Chaplains with the English troops engaged in the Soudan Arabian Nights entertainment. These priests are located at Dongola, Wady Halfa, Suakin and Ancona. In the spiritual welfare of her soldiers England may be accounted a far ahead of even this country, where Catholic Army Chaplains are few and far between.

—The letter from Eugene Davis, the Irishman recently exiled from France in company with James Stephens, which we publish on the first page this week, plainly shows that British influence was used in France in order to force Innocent man into exile merely because they were supposed to be in sympathy with the cause of their native country. Republics have the reputation of being ungrateful, and France is no exception to the general rule.

—Several subscribers in Dunlap and Lone ask us to send copies of the daily Times of our sister city in which is printed a very Philippic attack on the Catholic Church. The column is now over and it is amusing to witness how naturally some papers return to their prejudices against Popery whenever the time comes that there is no ticket in the field to feel the force of opposition on the part of Catholic voters. We have hung up the Times on the hook and will (if it) sift the slanders next week.

—We hope the movement recently organized by representative Irishmen in this city with a view of promoting the Irish Parliamentary Fund, will not only meet with the hearty co-operation of the Celtic race of San Francisco, but that its spirit may be emulated by the Irishmen of Ireland in every city, town and settlement on the coast. The fund opened by the MONITOR will close on next Tuesday, according to the original design, and we hope to have from many of Ireland's well-wishers during the week. Thus far the contributions received at this office amount to $164 50, for which we thank the donors, but we anticipate several other subscriptions before we close the account finally.

—James Redpath, although not an Irishman, is a great friend of Ireland, and he has mixed so much with the Irish people that he has caught the contagion of their spirit of witty repartee. This fact was well illustrated last week in New York where Mr. Redpath was lecturing on "Ireland and her Tradesmen." While in the midst of his discourse, a John Bull crank arose and shrugged his shoulders at Mr. Redpath with "But what about St. Patrick?" The crank came at once because spell-bound while Mr. Redpath answered the interlopper slowly, "St. Patrick was a gentleman and he came of decent people!" Then the audience shook the building with laughter for several minutes while the Britisher went outside to lug his head.

—We desire to call the attention of Catholic young men to the important circular from Father Mullaney, which we print this week, and we not them to read it; then we want them to act on its suggestions, and to make their influence felt as a body in every town and city on this coast, by means of organized societies such as that social Catholic Young Men's Union presided over by the pastor of St. James' Church, Brooklyn. The Pastoral Letter says that it is not enough that Catholic societies should be shunned by Catholics, but we must also establish, encourage and propagate the spirit of organization among Catholics of all classes and all ages. Herein we hope to see many Catholic societies for young men springing up all over this coast.

—"Status Celestis" is the title of one of the most natural, pleasant and probable stories of Catholic life which we have yet seen in print. It was written by Mr. C. Goodwin, editor of the Salt Lake Tribune, and when we tell our readers that Mr. Goodwin is not a Catholic they will more fully appreciate the beautiful tribute which he pays to the Sisters of Charity in his lovely story of California life in the days of '49. A friend at Salt Lake, who kindly sent us the copy of the Tribune containing the story, says that the tale is founded on fact, and from the natural way in which the incidents are narrated we are not inclined to doubt the assertion. We publish the story on the second page and all who read it will agree with us in saying that the author possesses literary genius of no mean order.

—As a matter of great importance to those who desire to introduce into the Public Schools of this city the very latest "improvements" in the science of "How to Live without Working," we mention the fact that in Chicago—as in San Francisco—there seems to be a constant effort on the part of Public School Principals, Trustees, Contractors and other attaches of what people loudly call "the patronage of our Schools," to practically disregard the spirit of the Commandment which says: Thou shalt not steal. In Chicago a school-order never yet has been signed by a hearing-union whose security counted dollars, and our local Trustees are not Chicago.

—Lorenzo, April 3.—A pilgrimage will be given to Lourdes, April 4, in which all the abbés, Bishop, Radical Members of Parliament, and municipalities are invited in favor of the Law of Sunday by the British troops.

A St. Patrick's Pill for a Presbyterian Preacher.

A subscriber in San José sends us a clipping of a notice in set forth a synopsis of a lecture recently delivered by Rev. J. C. Hill in a Presbyterian church, on Central America. Of course the lecture was anti-Catholic in tone and untruthful in sentiment, as truth is always stranger than fiction in a Presbyterian fanatic. Alluding to Central America Mr. Hill told his hearers something about that country which the reporter got into print in this singular shape:

"For three hundred years those lands were governed by a priesthood which corrupted religion, spread the Inquisition, and brought the inhabitants of the country to a condition of ignorance and superstition. In 1821 the inhabitants of the Republics was raised and a nation of people arose. The Republics were regularly constituted, but the Sunset Mountain was too eager for political freedom. Its practically economical, but practically by confiscation all the property of the Church. In consequence was that it [illegible] the union was broken up, Guatemala alone remaining a Republic.

This paragraph is so badly "muddled" that we are at a loss to discover whether it was the reporter's "mixed" drinks, or Mr. Hill's misstatement of facts that led to the bombastic blunders which will be apparent to our readers. The kind of "religious freedom" which people gain by "confiscating all the property of the Church," is called robbery by the law of God! Presbyterian preachers may reconcile their conscience to this kind of Presbyterian practice, but the fact still stands out that every time such an infamous scheme is carried out, Satan makes the suggestion and his lieutenants loot the churches while his Satanic Majesty looks on approvingly and smilingly says—he surveys the spoils and the robbers:—"I am monarch of all I survey."

Mr. Hill, of course, had to pat on the back the Saint Barton—(since killed whilst leading an invading army of freebooters into a neighboring State) But Mr. Hill had reason to remember Barrios, because the preacher was his protégé, and as the fond Dictator had Rev. Hill on his back for two years and a half, we think the poor Guatemalans had at least a portion of his purgatory whilst in this world! Here is Mr. Hill's account of his junketing tour in Guatemala:

Two and a half years ago General Barrios visited this country, and the preacher returned with him to Guatemala. He spent three two and a half years the preacher, with several others, had the greatest success among the seeds of the Gospel of Christ.

Read but very suggestive of the sectarian style of

Spelling preacher with a capital "P"

And praising God with a little "g."

And so Rev. Hill and his help mates had "the greatest success among the seeds of the Gospel of Christ in Guatemala." And yet, why did not this Presbyterian preacher stay in that land where the harvest was so ripe and Presbyterian laborers were fortunately for the Guatemalans—so very few! A true Apostle of Christianity generally stays where he is most needed and where he can do the most good. A false traveling preacher who makes the salvation of souls subservient to his salary, generally seeks first the kingdom of the rich, and then prays that all earthly comforts may be added to his portion in life.

Mr. Hill is wise after a fashion, as he evidently knew upon which side his bread was buttered when he bid good-bye to Guatemala and returned to his luxurious life inside the Golden Gate! Presbyterian preachers are rare enough never to preach on self-denial, the virtue of poverty, or the taking up of the Cross in order to follow Christ. With them Christianity is dressed in broadcloth, it lives in fine houses, it rides in its carriage, it lolls occasionally on cushioned pews in a Presbyterian pagoda which custom has called "a church," and it looks down with disdain upon those foolish Catholic Priests and Sisters who prefer privation to plenty, poverty to riches, obedience to self-will, chastity to carnalism, and who suffer so that others may save their souls! No! Presbyterian preachers have a far different programme by which men are expected to keep from luxury, laziness and licentiousness here on earth, to a Presbyterian paradise hereafter—where "the Catholics need apply" in the legend over the infernal gate!

Rev. Hill sent informed his hearers that "there was a good deal of infidelity in Guatemala." All the more reason why such a peaceful Presbyterian preacher as the speaker should have staid among the Guatemalans! But what food do Protestants find for their souls in the spread of infidelity? There are hundreds of them, who, in their inner souls, would be delighted at the fact that infidelity had supplanted Catholicity in every land from Asia to Africa and from Alaska to Australia. The "downfall of Rome" has been the dream of the devil for thousands of years, and it is only natural that the hope of Satan should be shared by his servants!

Rev. Hill told his hearers—by way of illustrating the degrading influence of "Romish" supremacy—that in Guatemala under the rule of "Monks and Jesuits,"

The people were kept poor and ignorant. Only 40,000 a year were spent on public education, and that all of the child texts-books in the schools revered the children that Luther died of delirium tremens.

Well, even admitting Rev. Hill's honest belief that the people of Guatemala being "poor and ignorant" we may point to this charge as entirely consonant with that cold, cruel and purse-proud Presbyterianism which we have portrayed in a preceding paragraph, is poverty a crime? Is ignorance a crime? The Son of God was poor and He chose the poor of Palestine to be the recipients of His divine truths which everywhere around us are hidden from the wise and prudent who follow in His path to Paradise those eternal truths which everywhere around us are hidden from the wise and prudent who follow in His path to Paradise those eternal truths which everywhere around us are strangely to the sons of evangelical exile and pharisees who look upon poverty as a crime and on ignorance as a species of impiety.

Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the Kingdom of heaven.

Blessed are the meek; for they shall possess the land.

Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted.

Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after justice; for they shall be filled.

Blessed are the merciful; for they shall find mercy.

Blessed are the clean of heart; for they shall see God.

Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the sons of God.

Blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousness sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Then, further Hill, is a lesson of love for your fellow man which you and your kind should learn before you undertake to slander the good Catholic people of Guatemala. Are you ignorant of the fact that poverty is one of the keys that opens the kingdom of heaven? Do you know that there are millions of souls gloriously reigning with God in eternal bliss who were so poor and ignorant on earth that they would not discern the difference between a modern Presbyterian preacher and an ordinary Christian? Such "poverty" and "ignorance" we admit, would prove an insurmountable barrier against their admission into the upper-ten Presbyterian paradise, but then we Catholics have the consolation of knowing that it was Almighty God who laid the plan of man's salvation, many centuries before

Luther, Calvin or Knox

Dawned from Pandora's box

Hence we hope that Rev. Hill will see the error of his ways in this presenting Christianity with a false front to the public in his so called "lectures." We admit all he as rich, learned or ignorant as Presbyterian preachers (the Lord forbid!) but the humblest, poorest and most ignorant man or woman in the world may be far more worthy in the sight of God than the grandest and most puffed-up Presbyterian preacher that ever proscribed Popery.

This is the lesson of love we would instil into Rev. Hill and his brethren, in the hope that Satan's Majesty looks on approvingly and smilingly says—he surveys the spoils and the robbers:—"I am monarch of all I survey."

A Sandwich Island Slanderer Squelched.

A subscriber residing in Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands, sends us a copy of the Pacific Commercial Reporter of that place, which is evidently edited by some English descendant of Ananias of old, as from a sample of the lawful falsehoods contained in the article before us, the John Bull writer is decidedly one of the most diabolical defamers of the Holy Father ever played the roll of free-lunch fiend in San Francisco.

Here is an extract that over the infamous Ananias himself might be ashamed of, so entirely false is it in every sentence and statement:

An appeal to Irishmen has been issued by a party of gentlemen of Irish birth. To the question, in which complaint is made that while the Irish Government robbed the Irish people of their freedom, the English press, as a body, have not generally sought to rob them of their good reputation. Such is the legend in the circular, these gentlemen of Irish birth have issued a circular, which, in a very large number of Irish hearts, will be cordially sensitive of late. We remember the Pope's letter to the Irish Bishops, which was a large document, during which Judge Taylor, who presided over a dispatch announcing the assassination of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Secretary Burke, of Phœnix Park, Dublin. When he had terminated the proceedings to announce that fact, the Bishops rose and chanted to the Mass. Those of the Irish Bishops were present and participated in the impressive ceremonies of the occasion. Mr. Tenney was subsequently elected a Superior Court Judge, and he was a man of great sympathy with the Irish cause.

At previous meetings the Irish Bishops present were other than those of England, upon one notable occasion, Father Hogan, who was Bishop of Galway, urged large contributions to the Land League fund, on the ground "that the Irish people in the Island were not so much indicted to the heart of an Englishman." Christian sentiment was therefore applauded, and the aforesaid Irish prelate was called upon to tell the Irish people.

Blessed are they that suffer persecution for righteousness sake; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Then, further Hill, is a lesson of love for your fellow man which you and your kind should learn before you undertake to slander the good Catholic people of Guatemala. Are you ignorant of the fact that poverty is one of the keys that opens the kingdom of heaven? Religious Liberty in State Institutions.

For months we have been anxiously watching the gallant battle which the friends of full freedom of conscience, have been waging in the legislative assembly of New York, but as the matter is not yet decided either in favor of freedom of Catholic conscience in public institutions or adversely to Catholic rights, it is not in order to criticize the influence brought to bear upon the subject by the religious body who have this important question under consideration.

After months of wrangling, during which the bitterest anti-Catholic bigotry was demonstrated by the Protestant opponents of the Freedom of Worship Bill, the New York State Senate has passed the following measure which—if sanctioned by the members of the Assembly—will grant all the rights of conscience which the Catholic body of New York are so bearely clamoring for:

SECTION 1. All persons, including those who may have been or may hereafter be committed to or under the care of any institution mentioned in this act are hereby declared to be entitled to the free exercise and enjoyment of religious belief, and to the free exercise and enjoyment of the religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference.

SEC. 2. This act shall be deemed to apply to every incorporated institution, whether charitable, reformatory or educational, house of refuge, hospital, asylum, school, or other institution of a similar character, or any of the other public or private institutions of this state.

SEC. 3. The rules and regulations established in the act shall recognize the act of the immaculate conception of the blessed Virgin Mary, and shall provide according to the dictates of their conscientious belief, for the spiritual welfare of the children, and shall allow or provide for the reception of the children of the Catholic faith, and shall allow the inmates in such asylums, or other institutions, to attend the services of the Catholic Church, consistent with the proper discipline and management of such institutions, and shall provide that no child shall be compelled to authorize any children of the Catholic faith to be taken from such institutions shall be allowed spiritual care and attention from a Catholic priest or spiritual clergyman of the denomination to which such child may belong, and that such children shall be allowed religious instruction and such religious books and papers as their parents or guardians may request, and that such children shall be allowed to attend such places of worship of the denomination to which they may have belonged, when such places of worship are within a reasonable distance of the institution, and access to the building and premises of such institution for the purpose of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. The willful violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed a misdemeanor.

SEC. 5. This act shall take effect immediately.

We stand up in the foregoing measure that is not generous, but fair and just—the foundation-stone of the American Republic. Yet it was weakly and bitterly opposed by Protestant preachers of every persuasion outside of pandemonium, and barred they evinced against Catholics in their asylums, proved that them to be alive of the arch-enemy of Christianity.

California is as badly off as New York, so far as regards the want of religious liberty to some of her State institutions, but we hope the day is not far distant when Catholic inmates of State institutions will not be compelled to attend Protestant worship or else suffer the consequence of those who have the power. The work of proselyting Catholic inmates is quietly but steadily pursued on this coast, and Catholic parents are innocently sustaining the injustice. We know of one Catholic in California who occupies any prominent position in Church or other official to any public institution who—if Catholics are cared for or combined by the State. We know of many Catholic deaf and dumb, and Catholic prisoners are all without a representative, and we know of one who refused in case of any wrong being perpetrated upon them. Yet the Catholic voters quietly sit down, pay taxes and pay into the hands of proselytizers by their silence. This state of things has been going on for years, and yet that people have begun to look upon it as perfectly legitimate, but we hope that hereafter whenever a Board of Trustees of any State institution having Catholic inmates to care for they will be guided by the Metropolitan clergy of the Archdiocese, and not by the waiter of the nearest Protestant church.

We hope the Catholics of every portion of the Pacific coast will move in this matter of liberty and justice towards their own kindred who may be inmates of public institutions, and secure for them—at the very first meeting of the legislative bodies of the different States—the rights of which we show that similar to that passed by the State of New York State, upon a plan similar to that asserted—although by the Methodist clergy—to be the welfare of the Catholic inmates of State institutions, and we will be highly complimented by the Metropolitan clergy of the Archdiocese, who will continue to work and pray for

A HUNDRED YEARS TO COME.

Who'll press for gold the crowded street
A hundred years to come?
Who'll tread the church with willing feet
A hundred years to come?
Pale, trembling age, and feeble youth,
And strength, and pride, and love of truth,
Shall all be laid in the silent tomb
A hundred years to come.

No matter how we live,
We all within our graves shall sleep
A hundred years to come,
No living soul for us will weep
A hundred years to come.
But others shall our lands will till
And others then our stores will fill,
And others birds will sing as gay,
And laugh the maiden as merrily,
A hundred years to come.

Abuse of Parental Authority.

Runaway girls are becoming quite common. In the past few weeks there have been several in this city. In every case it was claimed that they had good homes, with every comfort and indulgence, and had no cause to leave. There is a woeful ignorance and neglect on the part of parents in training their children. Either the children are given all liberty, allowed to gratify all their whims, and are virtually driven into the streets, or they are subjected, their every when grateful, and anything accorded to their desires and pleasures. Both those courses are wrong—extremes in opposite directions—and generally result in the loss of parental control, and the child becomes wayward. Of the two, however, while the abused child may go astray, it is the spoiled child that becomes precocious, insolent and incorrigible. Parents should certainly love their children, treat and provide well for them; but parental authority, with mutual respect and confidence, should be maintained. If parents did their duty properly, within the bounds of decency and common sense, there would be fewer runaways and less scandal. Harsh or foolishly indulgent parents are generally to blame in such cases; and until parents have more sense and regard for morality, it is not to be expected that guardians in their teens will be sensible or decent in the behavior.

Deplorable Results from Chloral and Bromide.

Again we have to record with deep regret a sad proof that those who take chloral or bromide of potassium for sleeplessness, are guilty of a deplorable error, and do a grievous wrong. The secretion which poison sleep also deprave the higher nerve centres, enfeeble the controlling powers of the will, and leave the mind a prey to the depressing influences of gloomy ideas of self respect and self confidence. The cultured mind feels the tyranny of the intellectual and moral depravation with great acuteness, and in the end succumbs to the sense of powerlessness to recover self control and do right. The depravation wrought is purely physical. The baneful influence of the lethal drug is, so to say, organic. The essential elements of the nerve tissues are blighted by the stupefying poison, as by alcohol in habitual drunkenness. In short, the response to chloral and bromide, is precisely the same thing as recourse to alcohol. The man or woman sent to "sleep"—like mocking semblance of physiological rest—by a dose of either of these narcotics, is simply intoxicated. No wonder that habitual drunkenness of this class first impairs and then destroys the vitality of the mind organ, and places the subject of a miserable article in the power of the emotional nature and makes him the creature of his passions. When will the public awake to recognition of facts with regard to these most pernicious of sleepproducers? Remorseless recourse to them has no better excuse than an willingness to search out the cause of "wakefulness" which prevents natural sleep.—Lancet.

Value of Order.

A look into the chamber of a boy or girl will give one an idea of what kind of a man or woman he or she will probably become. A boy who keeps his clothing hung up neatly, or a girl whose room is always neat, will be apt to make a successful man or woman. Order and neatness are essential to our comfort as well as that of others about us. Many who throw down his cap or book anywhere will never keep his accounts in shape, will do things in a careless, slovenly way, and not be long wanted in any position. A girl who does not make her bed until after dinner—and she will always do it—and throws her dress and bonnet down on the chair, will make a poor wife in nine cases out of ten. If the world could see how a girl keeps her dressing room, many unhappy marriages would be saved.

"Kangaroo."

Kangaroo is the most interesting sport in Australia, and is one of the most enjoying in the world. Large sums are organized, parties of from twenty to thirty joining in those hunts. They ride to the kangaroo grounds, and as soon as game is sighted the two dogs are released and the horses are given their heels. If the kangaroo hides it well up in his business, and if you let him, he will run you nearly another town and underbush. A good, strong kangaroo will give you a long chase, and very often the dogs cannot follow him. In this case, when the horseman gets up to the kangaroo, he takes off his stirrups and stirrup and knocks the animal over the head, which effectually stops him. He is then killed and skinned. The hind quarters are given to the dogs. It is good enough for eating, but too strong to be palatable to those of delicate taste. The tail, on the contrary, is considered to be delicious when made into soup. The average size of a kangaroo is about 5 ft high, but the "old man kangaroo" is often 6ft high, and is very fierce when cornered, and is known to have ripped men open with a single blow from one of its hind legs.

The California Ostrich Farm.

Mr. Sketchley, proprietor of the Anaheim ostrich farm, who has been in this city for several days, says the San Francisco Alta, of recent date, stated in relation to the enterprise: "Though the farm has now good prospects of becoming a complete success, it is still an experiment. It is about eight miles out of Anaheim and covers 200 acres. The old birds number twenty-one, and there are eighteen newly hatched, about six weeks old. They grow rapidly, being at the age of six weeks about the size of a full grown hen turkey. The birds are attended by three men. The hatching season has just begun. I have several birds sitting on from twelve to fifteen eggs each, and have a large number of eggs in an incubator. If the farm be successful it will yield large profit. One-half of the ostrich feathers sent from Africa are marketed in the United States. California ones many never left the farm, under the best circumstances, show scarcely stained dollars, but, in the next ten years, most of the best feathers will be demand. Each bird ought to yield, at least, a hundred dollars, while feathers twice as long as those of the African ostrich are to be washed and sold from $4 to $6 the length-farming is a business very simple. Hence any south ostrich farms, one, two, or more ostriches, beside grand pieces, symphonies, orchestra, string quartets and quintets, and overtures. The catalogue contains the names of 505 works, and a supplement, a list of eighteen compositions, omitted by Cherubini, was added by the publisher.

Cherubini's Masses are sung to the present day in many Catholic churches. His Ave Maria is a famous piece for soprano solo, both in the church and the concert room. Of the Masses, the Messe Solennelle in A is considered one of the best, though the one in D is very grand, and the Requiem in D is also very beautiful. But the C minor Requiem is entoned his greatest work. It is distinguished, in the requirements of the Missal, into seven numbers, the Introit, Graduale, Sequence (Dies Irae), Offertorium (Domine Jesu), Sanctus and Benedictus, Tract (Sed quando eis respondere possumus), Agnus Dei. The treatment, while thoroughly devotional and reverent is intensely dramatic.

Cherubini died on May 15th, 1842, highly honored and much beloved. Among his pupils were many whose names have since won fame, including Auber, who succeeded him as Director of the Conservatory, Boieldieu, and Halevy. Though an Italian both by nationality and style, his long residence of fifty-four years in Paris had a powerful influence, not only upon his contemporaries, but also on his successors. His music lives, and will live as long as long as beautiful melody and feeling are appreciated.

L. SAVARD MERCADANTE, 1795-1870.

Another long lived composer of sacred music, whose works are still heard in the churches, is Saverio Mercadante. He was born at Altamura, in the Province of Bari, in Southern Italy, on December 16, 1795. In his infancy he showed a love for music. When twelve years old he entered the Collegio di San Pietro a Maiella, of which Zingarelli was the director. Here he learned to play the flute and violin, and became leader of the orchestra. He also learned the elements of counterpoint, and in 1818 he made his debut as a composer in a cantata entitled, "L'Apparizione d'Ecole." He followed this with a succession of operas, produced at various Italian cities, Vienna, Madrid and Cadiz; many of them being reproduced in London and other European capitals.

In 1833 Mercadante was appointed Maestro Di Capella of the Cathedral at Novara, in succession to Pietro Generoli, and for the choir of this church he composed a number of Masses, motets, solos, and other sacred pieces. In 1840 he became Director of the Conservatory at Naples. In 1861 he became totally blind, having lost one eye by an accident while at Novara, but he continued to compose by dictation. In November, 1870, he was stricken with a mortal disease, to which he succumbed on December 17th, 1870, just passing his seventy-fourth birthday.

The most of Mercadante's sacred compositions are in the light and trivial Italian style, and as such do not find much favor in countries where a more serious and reverential manner is preferred. But among his Masses there is one, that for three voices, which is a first favorite, and has been reprinted in numerous editions. It is often sung in American Catholic churches, and it has been arranged for four voices, and sung in Protestant churches. Among his solos are "Salutaris" and "Salve Regina" still maintain popularity, and may be frequently heard.

CATHOLIC YOUNG MEN'S NATIONAL UNION.

[CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.]

which so distinguished an approbation as that of the Plenary Council assembled.

I feel confident, therefore, that the intention to attend the convention, which I hereby most warmly extend to all kindred societies, will be accepted; and that all those who desire to see the number of thoroughly Catholic and well-organized associations for the benefit of our young men greatly increased, will lend their valuable assistance in affecting a perfect brotherhood of societies in a National Union which has been so repeatedly blessed.

To become affiliated to our Union a certificate of the thorough Catholicity of the society desirous of affiliation, signed by the reverend pastor, if the society be a parochial one, together with an annual fee of four dollars, will be required.

At the Newark convention the following questions will be discussed, and papers thereon will be read:

1 How to secure in each locality the observance of the Union's "Communion Day."

2 The objections to going to Communion in a body examined.

3 How can archdiocesan and diocesan unions be made more effective?

4 Is a diocesan employment bureau practicable?

5 Reasons why some young men's societies do not flourish.

6 Parochial work that may be engaged in by our societies.

7 Why our C. Y. M. societies should give attention to penal and reformatory institutions, and how they can best do so.

As is evident, these reflections deal principally with society interests. Our great aim for the present is to make the organization of our societies as effective as possible. For that reason I have endeavored to select such topics for discussion as will best help to effect this purpose.

To the treatment of these several questions the greater part of our time at the convention must be devoted. Other matters, such as reports, petitions, etc., must not occupy more than a very limited portion of the two days that will be at our disposal. Hence the necessity of great brevity in their presentation. I hope special attention will be made in these reports of how the Union's "Communion Day" was observed by each society, for the holy effort of all must be to make this institution paramount.

Our lively faith in the Sacraments must be made the characteristic mark of the union's sterling Catholicity. Nothing will better secure the blessing of heaven, the approbation of superiors and the moral integrity of Catholic young men; and it is such men that our times stand sadly in need of.

The world is overrun with moral imbeciles; and the Young Catholicity of many Catholic young men does not remove them from that numerous category. Simple profession of faith is not enough to enable us as Catholic young men, to do our duty to our God, to our country, and to our business. "Active virtue and energetic piety" are necessary, and without the Sacraments they cannot be practiced.

We have now only two months to make our immediate preparation for our annual session. From all parts of the country the reports of society work are such as may warrant us in expecting to meet at Newark a very large number of delegates, from whom encouraging evidence of increasing efficiency will undoubtedly be received. This, however, will greatly depend upon the efforts of the Clergy, who, I trust, will be unanimous in kindred society in their respective districts.

Any information that may be desired will be cheerfully furnished by our energetic national secretary, Mr. Peter D. Bynon, No. 602 F street N. W., Washington, D. C.

Hoping that this address will be honored with the attention which is due to the cause it advocates, and appealing to our Catholic young men of the country to make that cause more the object of their more serious attention, I remain, in the bonds of Christ,

J. H. MITCHELL,
President C. Y. M. N. U.

BRUTAL BRIGANDS.

Horrible Torture of a Poor Parish Priest in Spain.

CURBAIA, April 8.—The Tribune's Madrid cable special says: A horrible outrage is reported from Carmona, Seville province. A band of robbers seized the village late at night and easily gained entrance, as the people were all in bed and asleep. The robbers demanded that the priest should tell them where he kept his money, and on being told that all he had belonged to the poor of the parish, refused to disclose its hiding place. They tortured Ametzaga to make him compliant. He spread the secret. They threw him upon the floor, and two ruffians plunged his feet into red coals under them. They repeated their demand and the priest still refused. They pulled out his tongue to its full length and seared it with a hot poker. The priest by this time was in the most frightful agony and unable to speak, but still refused. They forced the burning piece of iron down his throat. The brigands again threw him upon the hotch coals. The priest fainted and they thought he was dead. Ruffians went to find my money, they returned to the house, and finding the priest better, they dragged him to the door, tore his clothing into strips, and with these they stabbed his bodyless. When the body of the priest was found it was bound in a cruise. The authorities have sent troops in pursuit of the brigands. Mar. Rompaldo del Tinbaro, Pascal Nunolo et Ametzaga is horrified at the outrage and trusts that the Spanish Government shall offer a large reward for the capture of the brigands.

MORE MARTIRS IN CHINA.

Catholic Priests and Chinese Converts Killed.

The Shanghai Mercury of March 5th says: "The hostility of some Chinese officials to the introduction of the Christian faith into this empire, and the favorable terms of their concilatory edicts to the Christian converts in the provinces. In our issue of the 27th we published recent intelligence from the interior of Yunnan respecting a decree issued by Chedoiengpo-pu (the Viceroy of the two provinces Yunnan and Kweichow) for the destruction of all Roman Catholic converts, and the order was said to have had effect in signses. According to information then received, several hundred Catholic villages were destroyed, and some hundreds of converts killed. Two or three priests were also slaughtered. The desirable nature of the report and confirmation in the fact that various Consuls have in the meantime received a notification from the Viceroy that he was in receipt of a dispatch from the Tsungli Yamen, calling on officials in his jurisdiction to protect the lives of foreign residents in Shanghai the fact that the Viceroy of course serious disturbances which had lately taken place in the province of Kweichow between natives and Christians, will minimize no doubt the European who intend to visit the province in question should refrain from doing so at present. It is now feared that the decree issued by Chedoiengpo has been carried into effect, but to what extent remains to be disclosed."

PREVENTING AN EJECTION.

Gallant Damagui Priests and People Drive out a Grasping Bailiff.

DUBLIN, March 31.—A number of tenants were to have been evicted at Gweedore, County Donegal, today, but the people, men, women and little children, to the number of 1,000, refused to refrain from carrying out the well, enforced by a mixed military and of the Parish Priest and the people. On the appearance of the Crowbar brigade the chaged bailiff very wisely ordered a retreat, but unfortunately mountaineers rushed to the threatened scene in great numbers, spread the alarm and defeated the enemy. They offered no violence to the person.

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR—

Dear Sir.—Although the morning of Ireland's National Festival, St. Patrick's Day, was calm and promising, the weather did not prove favorable throughout the day. Towards evening it grew cold and stormy with a few heavy showers of rain, which did not serve to allay in the least the ferocity of the gale. The elements, as if sympathetic with the national spirit, did not whether appear to damper the ardor of the Irish people.

Because the Irish, like the Israelites in crossing the promised land, have their pillar of cloud by day, which is the light of the Sun of English tyranny, and their pillar of fire by night, which is the light and power of their patriotism and unwitting, while the dawning of the morning of their national enlightenment shines every day and makes their darkened their path, and the sunshine of Freedom's rich illuminating the distant goal causes them to forget the present petrolium and Wiggins of their unchanged condition.

The citizens of the Metropolis, "metal York," and other important towns took to the streets and performed their part in honoring our Patron Saint in a commendable fashion, by national demonstrations of every description, decorations, banners, processions, etc., while National Parade in the streets at intervals. But of the province of Saint Columkille, Emperius and Malachy, it was the best credit to loyalty, to Catholicity, to religious and enthusiasm in the cause of Nationality, by carrying out their programme of a pilgrimage in the stronghold of Ormazon and Lorcan, the Primate's Palace, the scene on St. Patrick's Day, City—Derry, was witnessed by a concourse of people estimated north of the Boyne. National Dublin, on that day, over the metropolis of Ireland, which has been throwing brick-bats and firing revolvers during the past two years, was thrown into a fever of excitement by the Nationalists, who, with the sound of drum and the flying of banners, marched in procession through the city, and then tastefully illuminated the night before, and the Nationalists of Dublin, to show that they are determined to interfere with their erection, 300 policemen were drafted into the city, and Dublin Castle, and the Lord Lieutenant, the Duke of Abercorn, and the Duchess, and the Duke of Leinster, and cute the "Hibernia" instead of Dublin Castle, and the "Hibernia" Saxon time.

TO THE SEE OF THE PRIMATE

THIS IS A CLEVER PLAN.

England has at last thought of it in order to prevent Ireland successfully. That of course the "Royal Presence" would be enough to make the rebellion quiet, but England knows that it is not to be in the hands of royalty, however popular, to prevent the Irish people from fraternizing between her royal son and the improver of Ireland's Parliament, Ireland's Parliament, Ireland's Dublin Castle, which should not stand in view of

ST. MARK AT ALEXANDRIA.

When Rome's vast Empire echoed Nero's name,
In the obstinate year of Christian fame,
A small ship, in full rigging, was seen one day,
To enter the great Alexandrian bay,
And soon, after crossing the Pharos's grand,
She gaily cast anchor near Egypt's strand:
The Master's heart was joyfulness once more
As he breathed the sands of his own loved shore:

From that ship the eye could easily trace
The magnificent gifts of its noble owner,
And see how it sparkled in marble, lavish and rare,
Where purest luxury had reared its home,
A ship of palace it truly seemed
As the setting sun in refulgence beamed
On each gilded dome and enhanced light,
Crowned by a gorgeous evening sky!

This great capital of the Ptolemies
Had grown wealthy and powerful, and proud
Since the days when Alexander first chose
Than that site on the shore Caballian mount.
A superior place at her commander
Brought her rare gems from the Orient land,
With Arabia's spices and Ceylon's gold
And other else imports of value untold.

The warrior whose name this city bore
Had conquered kingdoms in days of yore;
But vanish his trophies, as dust in the wind,
Compared with the voice that became manifest
From the prevailing darkness of heathen night,
Bade the Gentile nations to see (what's shedding light)
Proof from the mission of mercy of God's Son,
And convinced that it serves but for a time.

This little ship such a Victor now bore;
A relic whom the pagans would fain adore;
But they knew him not as he passed them by,
With calmness in face and purpose high!
Though his hair and beard were spattered with gray,
His bearing
His bearing
His bearing
Shewed his life's middle years had not yet run by.

Who is this here that descends from the barges?
He is Greek in appearance, this noble Mark!
He comes not in search of riches or fame—
Not for the spoil of his Master' name!
He had planted the faith on Sibyn's soil,
And Thessalonica was made fruitful in faith,
And other parts of Egypt his blessings shared;
But now he a nobler conquest dared.

Alexandria was populous, rich and proud;
Jew had her wealth and prestige high!
In her streets was spoken every tongue then Known;
And in learning vast the no rival could even.
Of Inspired Epistles she possessed one,
Known as the Hebrew most favored retreat;
A Roman mission she enlightened far;
And was then manifested Rome's brightest Star!

Ere Mark of Mendicot or Mount-gate stood,
He thought where should he first bear his tidings
Of Jesus
Should he bend his steps towards the Museum
Grand,
Or find a Jehovah amongst the crowds that stand
In the great synagogue, where the broken song,
Which intercede his ear as he enters the street?
The Priests upon Moses' seat, he was not by
Dulgued, by an outcast, to send a reply!

Will he only address the people gone by
Who are hurrying to the Temple of Jehovah?
He hesitated, and thought of the consequence,
And the outcast's duty to some guardian dared.
Having stood in the Jewish temple and place,
The latter replied with the wonted grace:
"I am the Jehovah's Ambassador here,
When the Scriptures designe to be God's Divine Son."

"What are the Scriptures, allow me to ask?
The writings of Moses were my highest task;
Of Jesus I know not, and care not to know
The Gospel, which contains of Jesus, which said,
Teaching the pagan till the dawn of the morn,
"I am Jehovah," and also, "I am your father,
A Disciple so upright, doubt unknown,
Who ripe for the Force he was destined to bear.

Mark, like the Master, to the poor would first
Jesus,
Not, not only the poor, was his doctrine to reach;
Alexandria's Church was to wide to be fold
The gospel of Jesus, which Mark had
Jesus, which Mark had
Jesus, which Mark had

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the chief agent in the formation of public opinion. It arbitrates between contending classes, and, by its influence, it can, if it will, regulate journalism is not only a profitable business, but it is a noble and honorable one. It is a business of science, but a sort of sacred science. What is said in the pulpit is addressed to a congregation; but what is said in the newspaper is addressed to the world, whatever it may be—secret all, the Divine truth—the truth of God—with Christ and through Christ."

May God bless and direct through the intercession of St. Francis de Sales, the Catholic journalists of this country, the writers of Catholic journals who embrace the cause of religion, the rights and those of the Holy Church, and who, in a spirit of devotion and prayer, with devotion and fidelity.—Pius IX.

Editorial Notes.

— Next Saturday will be the feast of St. Mark, and in commemoration of the recurrence of that anniversary, a gifted poet who serves God in the garb of sweet Charity, has written a lovely poem which we print with great pleasure upon the second page of the present issue.

— Robbery of the Church on the latest improved Italian plan, is the foremost plank in the political platform of the new French ministry. In order to cover up the contemplated crime of sacrilege, it is called "secularization of religious property" in the manifesto of the atheists.

— At the last regular meeting of the Knights of St. Patrick, D. Hanlon, Esq., delivered a more than usually interesting address on "The Political and Religious Influence of the Irish Race in America," which will prove a very interesting historical chapter for the pursual of our readers in our next issue.

— The ancient proverb which says "the anvil lasts longer than the hammer," might appropriately be applied to the Church and Freemasonry, when we read by hundreds of thousands of hammers upon her carcass, yet the anvil of the Almighty God on earth still stands as undaunted, as unworn and as enduring as when first it was forged by Him who declared that His Church should be eternal as He Himself is eternal.

— Mr. S. J. McCormick will leave for the East this week in company with Mr. Joseph I. Toohig, to attend the Supreme Council of the Catholic Knights of America which will meet in New York early next month. Mr. McCormick will be absent about six weeks, and will send editorial correspondence from the different places he may visit during his tour throughout the Atlantic slope. We know that the readers of the MONITOR will wish our absent Chief a pleasant trip and a safe return.

— Our Irish correspondent furnishes quite an interesting communication this week which every Catholic on the American continent—whether Irish or not—should read in order to see how Ireland is manipulated by England's future monarch in order to keep Irish Catholics out of office in Ireland. Any Catholic who joins in paying public honors to Macoas—in view of the condemnatory Letter recently issued by the present glorious Pontiff—should be summarily excommunicated from the Church they thus dishonor.

— Some Catholics who live a few miles distant from a Church complain that it is "too far" for them to go regularly to Mass on Sundays or holydays. But the Church is never "too far" away from true followers of Christ. An instance of this fact was proved recently when Bishop Moreno was administering the sacrament of Confirmation among the Indians, some of whom came from their camps which were 25, 30 and even 40 miles distant. What a lesson for those lazy Catholics who live God less that they do their own personal convenience.

— Rt. Rev. A. J. Glorieux was consecrated Vicar Apostolic of Idaho in the Baltimore Cathedral on Sunday last. Archbishop Gibbons was the consecrating Prelate, assisted by Archbishop Green of Oregon, and Bishop Brondel of Montana, Mass of Covington, and Keane of Richmond. The priests assisting at the impressive function were Rev. G. W. Devine, deacon of the Mass, Rev. I. S. Lee, master of the Bulla, and Revs. B. J. McMann and A. Boyar masters of ceremonies. The MONITOR heartily wishes the new Prelate ad multos annos.

—American brimstone seem to have a penchant for Italian nobleness. In addition to Miss Mackey, the leading names on the list comprise Miss Field, Princess Brancaccio; Miss Lorillard Spencer, Princess Vinyarcs Canal; Miss Broadwood, Princess Doapoli; Miss Conrad, Marchess Teodoli; Miss Kinney, Countess Granotti; Miss Fisher, Countess Oberardesca; Miss Roberts, Countess Galli; Miss Fry, Marchess Torrigiani; Miss Lewis, Countess Barbolini Amadei; Miss Gillinder, Marchess di San Marzano; and Miss Hengerford, Countess Taffanon.

— Command us to the New York Herald for stupid comment on anything connected with Ireland. Referring to Wales' visit to Ireland and Mr. Parnell's manifesto, the Herald says: "The visit of the prince can only be productive of good. It will be the first time in Ireland's history that an English man capable of judging the conditions under which the Irish people live and are ruled will have visited them." Considering that this will be Wales' fifth visit to Ireland, the above rude very shamefully, and the idea that Wales is the only Englishman capable of judging the Irish situation who has ever visited Ireland, is hugely ridiculous.

—The report of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, for 1885, classifies the crimes of the parish of both sexes (under 21) as follows: Murder, 74; attempted murder, 104; burglary, 179; highway robbery, 84; grand larceny, 72; larceny, 230; forgery, 10; arson, 4; manslaughter, 2; counterfeiting, 5; train wreckers, 3; mail robbery, 4; picking pockets, 8; suicide, 37; attempted suicide, 24. The band of a dozen boys is mentioned—all under 10 years of age—who had voted to kill their mothers. One of them proposed to practise upon a servant girl first, but she objected, and the plot was discovered.

— Last week we alluded to the greed for gold, pupils and fine linen, a high character for the preponderant portion of Presbyterian preachers. The following very peculiar method of collecting a Minister's salary we clip from the New York Sun, which tells the tale of the mercenary spirit of Presbyterian preachers very thoroughly. The Sun says "there is no financial nonsense about the Presbyterian pastor at Palmyra, Mo. He the first day of each month he draws his check upon the bank for his monthly salary in advance, and the bank regularly honors the check and charges it up to the deacons, who are personally responsible for the salary. Thus no delay or default in paying the subscriptions can affect him."

— During the past two weeks the British Lion has been roaring at the Roman Bear, and the latter shaggy-coated emblem of the Empire has been growling back. The world looked on and said "war." But Russian red tape and John Bull's diplomacy dissipated the war-cloud, and now their international difficulties are to be settled by representatives of both Powers who will survey the disputed territory and draw an imaginary line thereon which is to preserve the peace for the present. A war in Europe, just now, would open a market for American products and give the farmers of this State a chance to get rid of their surplus grain, but Russia has no money and John Bull has so much belligerent business at present on hand, that he thinks it better to bear his present ills than fly to others which might prove his national ruin.

— The have sought among the Catholic girls and young women of Germany by the Culturkampf is well indicated by a complete return quoted in the Germania, showing that in consequence of the expulsion of the teaching orders. The archdiocese of Posen and Cologne, and the dioceses of Breslau, Ermland, Fulda, Hildesheim, Cuhn, Limburg, Munster, Osnabruck, Paderborn, Treves, and the district of Hohenzollern, then lost altogether 2,276 convents establishments entirely devoted to the education and training of girls and young women—including 91 ecole gardiennes, 72 orphanages, 40 industrial schools, 27 girls' day schools, and 47 boarding schools, which could not at the time be supplied again. The number of children affected by these barbarous measures was 84,000; whilst the cost to 226 communes for supplying the places of the nuns' schools with new establishments is reckoned at 962,070 marks, or about $227,000 per year.

— When General Grant'Dine the dispatches will depict his last hours and furnish a certificate of his having died "firm in the Methodist faith," under the spiritual guidance of the notorious Parson Newman. It is well, therefore, to forestall such methods by copying from an Associated Press dispatch of the 4th ult. this simple fact, which hooks the endangering from the presumptuous Religious power of Rome over Grant's mind, who—like a multitude of public men in America—manages to live as if religion was merely an ornament which men could do without both in this world and the next. Alluding to Parson Newman's perseverance in praying, the dispatch in question asserted that General Grant said that Dr. Newman prayed for him, and that he allowed him to pray, but that he thought the clergyman's prayers would save him, but he did not want to say anything to hurt his old friend's feelings, and he did not request him to stop. Evidently the hero of Richmond will understands how valuable are the services of those kissing preachers who give their godless services to the rich and powerful, but who spurn the poor and lowly. Newman wants notoriety, hence he keeps his praying machine in running order, even though he must know that it annoys Grant to hear the doleful sound of the Parson's delorous twang.

Disjointed Catholics.

The New York Catholic Herald has coined the forgiving name for that class of Catholics who render "lip-service" to the Church, but whose piety consists of the doctrine taught old Christianity which is so prevalent on the Pacific Coast. Our contemporary's remarks are applicable to many localities just as well as they are to Manhattan Island. The Herald says.

"There are in this city quite a lot of people who give a representative Catholic to all appearances, who which be called disjointed Catholics. They are Catholics in name and principle. They call themselves "liberal," which term is as absurdity as applied to religion in the matter of belief and practice. To be a Catholic a person must believe and hold fast to, and practice and advocate and insist upon all that the Church teaches and holds as true. If they do not do that they are not Catholics in the correct sense of the word. No indifferent can make belief for himself and say to "liberal" those of his own. In the preliminary Address on the Freedom of Worship bill Senator M. C. Murphy made a vigorous and well-timed protest against the insinuation that the acts of those who are nominally Catholics in the course of a speech in opposition to the bill of Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Corrigan, Bishop Loughlin, Bishop Wadhams, Bishop Ryan, Bishop Wigger, Bishop Ireland, Bishop Gilmore, Bishop Keane, Bishop Spalding

Farm and Home.

Children at Table.

Never let your children come to the table until you are quite sure that they won't undertake to do all the talking. This you will find a law which you have yet to discover. Tell the company there isn't room for them. You are never safe with the children at the table. If there is anything you don't want known it will be told them. The boy who never noticed that the spoons were plated will shout, as though giving you information:

"Oh, see the gold coming through the spoons!"

And that same boy will say he wishes it was Sunday, and when your guests ask him why, he will reply:

"Because we always have pie Sunday."

You will find out he knows a great deal that you never suspected he knew, and you will be at a loss to ascertain how he ever acquired himself with the facts. A boy at the table is a well-spring of displeasure. If his sister is biased by any one he is always the person to witness the performance, and tells of it at the table before a crowd. He is always the one to give to the world the fact that his sister uses powder, wears false teeth, and is thirty two years old. If there is a mortgage on the place the boy hears you speak of it, and then goes around talking about it as though it were something to be pointed to with pride and pleasure. Everything you say in the house of your family that should not be repeated, the boy repeats, and he always has the faculty of repeating it at the wrong time and to the wrong person.

If you say the clergyman's sermon was too long or too dry, the boy will take it all in, and say nothing until the clergyman comes around to make his regular visit, and then he will let it out just after you have entered the room. If you say the doctor is not fit to enter house, he will jump up on the doctor's knee, when he calls, and cunningly say:

"Oh, doctor, mamma says you ain't fit to cure hams."

The old adage that boys will be boys ought to be changed that boys will be fiends. One boy is more bother than half a dozen girls. The boy is always in mischief. When he is at school he is always up some kind of deviltry to perpetrate when school is out. Or else he is playing tricks on the teacher. When he is at home he is twisting the cat's tail, or disturbing her boudoirs during the cat's beauty sleep. It there is no cat to torment, he will torment his little sister by making faces at her or drawing the dog up in her doll's clothes.

Some General Requirements of Good Society.

Enter a room as if you felt yourself entitled to a welcome, but wished to take no undue advantage of it.

In walking always keep to the right.

Do not press a favor where you see it will be unwelcome.

Treat all the guests you meet at your friend's table, for the time being, your equals.

Never profane to be that which you are not. Everybody laughs when the pinnies are borrowed; but if they are imaginary, the laugh may change into a frown.

You must never send a visiting card by post.

Do not rush into a friendship with everybody you meet. Friendships so quickly made are quickly broken.

In another man's house do not take upon yourself to play the host—not even at the host's request.

In making gifts let them be in proportion to your means. A rich man does not thank a poor man for making him a present which he knows the giver cannot afford.

Do not claim the acquaintance of a man of rank on the ground that you once met him at a house to which you had been invited.

Let it be said of you as it was said of Moneglig, that he remembered everything "except an injury."

In making calls, do your best to lighten the infliction to your hostess. Do not stay long; and do not enter upon a subject of conversation which may heavily bear with the apprehension that you intend to remain until you have exhausted it.

Do not give another, even if it be a better, version of a story already told by one of your companions.

The foundation of good manners is the way in which a man behaves to his superiors or inferiors.

A young lady should remember that silence is golden, and not speak too often or too long, or too glibly. Let what you say be to the purpose, let it be so said that it will forget that she spoke or may recollect the manner of it.

Why Doesn't the Baby Walk?

One inquiry which is often asked the physician is: "Why does not my baby walk?" In answer we may say, first of all, that delay in walking does not necessarily imply physical disease or weakness. A child's disposition may have much to do with it; courage and self-confidence make the infant forward, while timidity will make him backward. The example of others, especially of other children, stimulates the enterprise of a child; while, on the other hand, too constant attention from nurses renders an indolent child from the necessity of exertion. When the tardiness passes beyond the ordinary limits, it may be due to some weakness, either natural to the child, or perhaps the result of some definite disease. Any severe ailment may entail such debility as to interrupt the natural development of the child in this direction. Even the process of dentition may have such an effect. Many times we have been told at clinic that the child, who had already begun to get about, "lost his walk," as the result of teething or of some disease. Moreover, any lowering of the general condition, without a special fit of illness, may have a like result. Sometimes paralysis of a limb may be at the bottom of the trouble, but this is likely to be recognized from the fact of the illness that preceded it, or from the powerlessness of the limbs for other purposes than walking. So, too, injuries such as fractures and dislocations, have sometimes been overlooked, although it would hardly seem that they could be, by persons of ordinary observation and intelligence.

To say one nay one about the undoubtedness of a child in walking, we would say, first of all, do not hurry and do not worry. Try to ascertain if the child is well as to digestion, nutrition, sleep, and all the matters that go to make up general good health. If you are convinced that your child is in perfect good health, and your opinion is confirmed by your medical adviser, it would be purely proper to encourage him in every way, as the tardiness is probably due to mental particularities alone. If he has had an illness, do your best to bring about his complete restoration. Observe critically whether he uses his lower limbs freely and strongly when sitting and lying, and whether he uses one limb in preference to the other. If he does so the limbs are probably sound. If the examination leaves any doubt in your mind, ask your family physician to decide the point for you.—Babyhood.

NASBY'S NOTIONS.

A Patriotic Appeal for Political Recognition.

We have earned our places. We sent a poonammous delegasheen to Sheeago, which was prepared to vote for any one that the wood could be nominated. All doorin the campaign we for Cleveland and Old Sierra Reform in the administrasheen, as man never tot alone. Kentucky was safe, for we don't allow niggers not northern output baggers to vote anyhow, and that we mite do enthin to make sahcurance doubly secur we raised money to send brave, determined reformers over into Injiany and Ohio, where they retold as many times as possible. Impossibrow as I am I contributed to the sahred ore. I borrowed $7 of an intimated Louisville Jrournuer, with bad luck to the outcaers for the fust time, and didn't know us, and I gave half uv it to the Injeany rotin Injun. It wasn't much, but it was more to me than the hundreds of thousands that the Pahrood interest uv New York give for the same purpos. I song as I give it:

I give thee all, I kin no more,
Tho' poor the offrin be.

We have did our sheer—now let the President do his. He should consider that we can't waste furever. He should remember that we har his outside the pale uv offahs for twenty-four years, gnashin our teeth at them wich win Injuns. He should remember that money uv we har hev waiste till we have mone growd on our bas, and that we har hen hongry all these years. He should remember that the Cabbinet task Reformer hev a stomick, jist the same as everybody else, and that it costs like fun or potsch to keep a Civil Serva Reformer loo; herefor we ut don say one word. He should remember that Lehbeck, didn't vote for him, and I did. (Lehbock, by the way, hen a nigger didn't vote for anybody, but he would hav voted for Blaine of he had bin permitted to vote at all.) He should remember that ther are letters acoing every day thro the mails uv the Corners containin money, and I want that money for Christmas and my other expenses. He should remember that time is wingin its away on our sterns in studying, and we can't waste furver. If he dilly dallies with the postoffice till I am dead and an angel, wut good will it do me? I want my money now—now, while I har a stomick to feed and the fires of a personal nose to keep ablaze.

In this I voice the cries uv the faithful from the rock bound coast uv Maine to the tin savannars uv Texas. I howl for two thirds uv the Democracy uv the kentry. I am saying wut the President oughtter, for my appeal is the appeal of a starvin man.

We don't keer about the Cabinet. Them wich will be appointed to the Cabbitt don't need their monthly pay sayhow. They hev already had their pictures taken, they har eleen shirts and most uv them probably two or three. They are not the ones which is hungrin and thirstin. It is at which are after the Postoffices, and Collectorships and such places, wich must be filled sitandfast. It is no time to settle questions uv policy. To-day is our accepted time, and the Postoffices is our policy.

If the President is wise he will heed this cry. We don't keer for policies, or anything else. Give us the offices first and we will swaller whatever policy he presents to us. Deekin Pogram, Isaaker Garfitt and Seneem endorse every word I hav rote.

Skating-Rink Mania Illustrated.

Peter Brown left Brockton, Mass., about three years ago, and last week he returned, and just as he was strolling down the street he was tumbled over by most a dozen, by the name of Smith, who was not prosperous when he left, and who lived just outside the town. Brown was surprised to see the Smiths arriving in a drawn sail, with a hat, and a big diamond pin blazing on his front, and he inquired.

Been to a funeral to-day?

Why, bless you no.

No? I see by here on your best clothes Are you forming yet?

Forming? Well, I should say not, I am running a roller skating rink down here.

Venses is your son Jim?

Oh, he's running a rink at H—.

And pure daughter Lizz?

She's skating under the management of Tim Jones in a Boston rink.

A young lady should remember that silence is golden, and not speak too often or too long, or too glibly. Let what you say be to the purpose, let it be so said that it will forget that she spoke or may recollect the manner of it.

Why Doesn't the Baby Walk?

Who's preaching in his place?

Nobody.

Nobody! What's the matter!

Church is turned into a skating rink!

You don't say so!

Yes, true as preachin'.

Where's Bill Beck, the groceryman!

He was out of business a year ago. He has an ice cream stand in my rink.

Pshaw! Where's aunt Betty Baker and Deacon Blake?

Why, dang it all, they're traveling around visitin' the churches doing the old men and women set on skates. I tell you they're immense.

Say, Dan, what become of your shaghred dog, Cuss.

Darned if the dog didn't get the fever, and one day he snapped in the place where I keep the skates to hire, put on a pair and rolled on the floor just as nice as any human bein', when all of a sudden his hind pair of skates got mixed up with his tail, which tripped him up and he fell back and broke his neck.

Poor dog.

Gosh! I can't help crying when I think of his and and Gage and.

Are there any folks in town who do not skate!

Yes.

Where are they!

Up in the cemetery on the hill.

What a Woman Can Do.

She can say "No," and stick to it for all time.

She can say "No" in such a low soft voice that it means "Yes."

She can sharpen a lead pencil, if you give her plenty of penknives.

She can dance all night in a pair of shoes two sizes too small for her and enjoy every minute of the time.

She can pass the display window of a drapery shop without stopping—if she is running to catch a train.

She can walk half the night with a noisy baby in her arms without once expressing a desire to murder the infant.

She can epprecia a blue from her husband nearly five years after the marriage ceremony has taken place.

She can suffer alone and neglect for days, which can break a bachelor's heart, consideration will drive from her recollection.

She can go to church and afterwards tell you what every woman in the congregation had on, and in some instances can give you a faint idea of what the text was.

She can—but what's the use! A women can do anything or everything and do it well.

CURSES OF THE KOHINOOR.

The Pamona Diamond and the Evil it is Said to Have Caused.

The belief in the curse-carrying power of certain precious stones is almost as old as the world itself. Emeralds and, pre eminently, opals are deemed unlucky gifts. Walter Scott's novels are affloats in an interesting illustration of Oriental beliefs regarding ill-omened jewels, and the Koh-noor diamond especially has been thought a bearer of misfortune to all its possessors. It certainly has not been an accompaniment of good in the East, whether one ascribes the evil that has followed its ownership to evidence or to some subtle cause.

A recent writer seems to think that the recent sudden and possible continuance in the public affairs of Great Britain have given increased interest to the superstitions connected with the Kohinoor, or mountain of light, which became the property of the British Crown after the conquest of the Punjaub in 1850. It was discovered in the mines of Golconda about 1650. Mir Jumla, the lessee of the mines, a man notorious for his cruelty toward his employes, presented it to his sovereign, the King of Golconda. Soon after the King and Mir Jumla quarreled, and the latter treacherously invited Aurungzebe, the Mogul Emperor of Delhi, to invade his master's dominions. The invasion was a success, and the King of Golconda became a vassal of the Emperor. He speedily rebelled, however, and lost everything. Mir Jumla died and weshed in exile.

COLLAPSE OF THE MOGUL EMPIRE.

Almost simultaneously with his acquisition of the Kohinoor, Aurungzebe's historian uninterrupted good fortune began to decline. He died in 1707, leaving his sons to engage in fratricidal war for his possessions. Shah Alum, the successful heir, got the jewel, died five years later. The next possessor lived only seven years, and within twelve years from the death of Aurungzebe it passed through the hands of five claimants. Six other competitors died during the same time. The Mogul Empire broke to pieces on the reign of the next holder of the diamond, Mohammed Shah, the grandson of Aurungzebe, who in 1739 Delhi was captured by Nadir Shah, the Persian, who carried off $70,000,000 in booty. He was assassinated in 1740 think the almighty dollar the first thing necessary. The first thing he did was to throw aside the Latin as the foundation of education. Up to his time the Latin was the language of education, the emblem through which all knowledge was conveyed.

THE VALUE OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

(CONCLUDED FROM FIRST PAGE.)

I HAVE AT HOME IN ENGLAND,

in my library a geometry, an arithmetic, a geography all written in Latin. Latin was the living language of education. De La Salle did away with this. He made the study of the mother tongue the basis of all instruction. How well he succeeded is vouched for by the fact that in no country is the cultivation of the vernacular carried to such perfection as in France. He taught the pupils of his schools that their should not despise labor. He opened technical schools. You find fan specimens of this kind of work in the French department. It was the priest that first gave the impetus to the work which is beginning to bear fruit today. One defect that I find with the American school system is that it does not fit children for after life in labor. What boy brought up in them wants to carry mortar, to be a carpenter? All want to be clerks, people men about town, presidents. The last thing thought of is manual labor. The girls do not want to be servants, to clean the house, to make bread, or to do any manual work. They want to be presidents' wives, or ministers' wives. Were immigration to stop or to be directed to some other channel by France or Germany, where would you get a domestic? The great heart of understood the need of intelligent labor. He established Sunday schools. England and America think that they have invented them. It did not. He established Sunday schools, but not as the schools are at present, but such as made Sunday a general school day for those overworked during the week, but who desired instruction. To carry on his work he understood the necessity of organization. He established a body of men whose only ambition was to make good citizens of earth and heaven, who gave up all desires for political life, and who devoted themselves to method and success in order so do their work well. That order founded by the venerable De La Salle number at present over 11,000 members, and teaches over 300,000 pupils.

They give up all worldly joys, live economically—economically that that for the service of a teacher not more than $400 yearly is required. No pay they should receive this. They live in community, rise early, and always bear in mind this truth: that to teach intellectually they must be patient, to teach morally they must be moral. They prepare themselves for their work by prayer and meditation. "What can I do and how can I best do it?" is their all-absorbing thought.

MINUTE INSTRUCTION IN ALL THEIR ACTIONS.

This is the secret of their success. The paid nurse may be kind, polite, attentive (most kindly), but she can never supply the place of a mother's tender care. Say nothing against the capacity or devotedness of teachers who work for pay, when I say the love of God and charity for men, which is the motive power of the Christian Brothers will be sometimes wanting. Wyoming Brothers' motive and sense of responsibility is for two worlds.

They are for their pupils models of harmony. Regardless of our own nineteenth century, I think that we need more heroes and heroines. They are vowed to poverty, charity and obedience and are for many people mirrors of humility, gravity and zeal. The work of the Christian Brothers is that of strengthening men, morally, physically and intellectually. Their successors will be men of the soldier, sailor, doctor or lawyer. They co-operate with the Creator and fit man for the service of Providence. In their exhibit, which is certainly not inferior, but if I think superior to any educational display in the Exposition, you will find essays, drawing, mathematical papers, etc., characterized by neatness, order, motives and method which will infallibly lead the pupil to the enjoyment of good business habits. I am familiar with the schools of the Christian Brothers in France, England, Ireland, and have visited several of their schools in the United States and must say that I have never seen work of its kind so well done as in their schools.

I am not speaking in order to flatter. The Brothers look to God for their reward. Already in this country we have seen the good work in this land in their parochial and boarding schools. I can only say that I hope they will spread over the land; that the instruction given and the results accomplished are not inferior to those of any other schools in the country, is testified by the exhibit which they make in your Exposition.

[FROM OUR REGULAR IRISH CORRESPONDENT.]

EDITOR OF THE MONITOR:

Dear Sir—The weather in the Emerald Isle throughout the month of March has been exceedingly cold and wet. Only one or two days during the entire month relieved the dreary monotony of rain and sleet. Yesterday and last days are most cloudy with unusual severity. We hope, however, that April's dawn, and the genuine Easter tide which it marks shall wear a favorable change in the elements for an Irish spring—that season in which our land has almost nine moons more bewitching. The North-easterly wind that crosses the Irish Sea about in wild confusion the flames of many a hearth blended from Kerry's heights, to Donegal's dark mountain brows and Tipperary's sunny towns, is a signal of Irish success in the annual which has just terminated for 1885. In many districts the Nationalists gained notable victories over the combination of Whig and Tory, and rescued their allied force with dismissing. This, was the case in the electoral division of Fahan at Castlegoodman, county Mid Florida, a Nationalist, was returned in defiance of the united efforts of a powerful body of the "loyal minority" men in whose hands the district had been for generations, and who had succeeded in every instance in preventing the rise of a Nationalist to the territorial Parliament. When the news of the National triumph became known, old Donegal resounded with shouts of glee while the place of its fires echoed to the stern tones of fellows that wash its bleak rocky coast. That is not the only victory in this second electoral contest that Donegal can claim; it has had many to chronicle, and when another year shall have rolled by, the utmost course awaits 19 Nationalists of the 19 Irish county and of all Ulster is their electoral campaign for the Free Law Board.

SLAUGHTER OF POOR LAW GUARDIANS

Now, I have mentioned these two important victories simply to show that Irish men are very sensitive body of the Irish people, towards the

UNPALATABLE DRAFT OF FLUNKEYISM.

The Irish capital is so anxious to refuse to kneel down and worship a foreign prince—the representative of a power that has for centuries outlaided upon the blood of our martyred sons, and filled the Saxon coffers with gold while our people starved; and whose officials stamped in infamy and ruin the fair fabric of our land, drove over the Irish peasantry in cartoons and proclaimed their determination not to allow one word of welcome when the Prince of Wales pale face first appeared on shore. Ireland cares are hourly engaged in preparing for the "Royal Fair." The decoration committee have been at work for a short time, and have been so busy to carry out the wishes of the frantically loyal minority in street adornment, that it had to postpone has tested the adaptation of the Irish Sheriff, who, when the Prince of Wales visited Ireland, was the only man who was not a Freemason. Freemasonry, like all its kindred societies, is a secret society, and is identified with the "royal visit" have not commended themselves to the people of Ireland, and the most conscientious of Irish men.

THE GRIEVANCES OF IRELAND

Lastly, there is a movement initiated as Freemasons at Willie's Rooms this evening, for the Royal Alpine Lodge, No. 16, of which the Prince of Wales is the Master. The Prince of Wales presided at and performed the ceremony. Their Royal Highnesses also dined with the members of the Lodge. This is surely an item of gaffe as breathless interest to the Irish public as that Lord Mayor, in sending from Dublin castle, three lad beasts, and two pigs to the Hall's Bridge Show, or that the "Citizens' Committee," meeting the "Castle Committee" determined to drape their ball-room with lowest bunting, and to invite the Prince to dance all the clean and seemly (including the Irish Jig in waiting, particular and vulgarian, who are preparing their Sunday clothes for the Prince's visit, will remedy it by their sensitive conscience to fall down in worship before the man has just constitutionally proclaimed his contempt for the Pope's authority and Freemasonry yet personally indicting his own son into the tinder with scandal and compass, upon Bible and Judge.

The "Citizens' Committee," indeed, and their ball, will discuss in the announcement a new feature for the Prince of Wales's visit to Ireland, viz., the Freemasonry. Mr. H. B. is a brother Mason and by making his son a craftsman on the eve of his two grandsons all the Masonic brotherhood that, in exchange for their charm they shall have the Royal Arch and confirmation of the Knighting Immortable privileges and pickings which their sons are confident they have long ago sought to monopolize in Ireland. H. H. R. H. arrives in Dublin on the 1st of April, and we could not identify himself more closely with the Masonic order than by the fact that he originated in Ireland, and that under the dignities, and the patronage of the Masonic Order, those who are the most active in the Land League, and children in school compulsory, and extolling the Land League and raise the cross rancle into the bosom. Ireland wants none of their Government Compulsory Education. Irish children are taught to receive instruction where they have the chance, and what they require is an extended and improved system of Education. By such congeniality and Hills for Education with their sons and sons shames, the Government has a hope of lately alienated the Irish Nation, and the young generation of the Irish working classes, from the birth of Land Leaguers, divide them and their aspirations from the other classes of their country. Ireland's sons are not to be so easily deceived, or to be so easily seduced by the Government that have hitherto maintained the Irish nation, and the Government have put our faith to the test by other adversary system. Elizabeth with all her engines of h—ould not weaken it, and Campbell Bannerman, under the patronage of Masonry, or, not by it. While England crumbles to dust in foreign habitable and Ireland continues to brighten with the healthy National sentiment of the people, and the aspirations and advantages of the age. St. Patrick is our guide, and the Irish people are his sons. We know the Bill, it won't move his grave. We know our friends in heaven and on earth. We will help us in the work of our Land Bill.

THE CROWN OF THORNS.

BY JAMES BOGHAN.

A fair young girl at the mirror stood
Twining her white with golden wood
And sighing circlet, with gems adorn,
That glanced like a crown on her queenly brow.

She smiled as she fastened the clasp of pearl
And looked in her white satin robe—for
For to-night was the ball, her first and last;
She looked like a queen—and was the vain.

One more soft touch and she turned to go,
When a child's voice came from the cradle low
"Dod night"—the little boy murmured the hour
"Dod aye he'll dive 'oo a crown of stars."

The maiden laughed as she stopped to place
A good night kiss on the upturned face,
"Yes a crown, little, she said, I will give,
And bestowed away with a lightsome tread.

But all night long, as the dance swept on,
With the glittering throng, the fair form (invalid crown)
The words that her little sister had said
Kept running, unbidden, through her head.

"A crown of stars!" Ah, what is there
Of earthly splendor to compare
With such a crown, when yonder shine
For ever and forever shine?

The maiden left the whirl and glare
And slipped off in the night air;
She saw the stars enumbered in
Within the bosom of the sky.

"Oh God," she prayed, "in heaven above,
I am unworthy of thy love.
But if thou will, for Christ's dear sake,
Accept the offering that I make.

Take this poor heart and make it shine,
Among the chosen ones to shine.
Purify it within pride and guile;
Take me, for Christ's sake, if Thou will."

"Child, child, you are raving!" they
Whilst Mr. Beecham was pointing out the various landmarks in the country through which they passed to Cresfield, Jack and Nell amused themselves watching the trees and posts fly past his window. "I never saw trees running before," said Nell to Jack. He was about to make some wise answer when—

"Lakenheath!" cried out a railway official, in a prolonged tone, and opening the door of the carriage, they stepped out.

Leaving the station, they had first to climb the hill, from the summit of which they had an extensive view of a most beautiful country. Turn they to the north, they descended to Marylay.

It was lovely dell. At the southern end the richly wooded hills closely approached and enclosed a small meadow.

Nestling among the trees on its banks was a pretty mansion. It had a southern aspect and full view of the vale, and at this time was adorned covered with the clinging ivy and flowering creepers. At a short distance from the southern end of the lake, the little stream formed by the rivulet from it tumbled over the rocks into a shallow stream dancing with light, and went murmuring on its way, now chattering over its stony bed and sparkling and laughing in the sunshine, now flowing silently and darkly in the shade.

Nell danced and skipped with delight, and ran off with Jack to chase the butterflies.

Gertrude glided around, enjoying immensely the scene before her.

"What a lovely place!" she said at last, "I cannot fancy that Eden was more beautiful than this was."

"Yet, Gertrude, evan as of old sin cast its foul gloom on Eden, so, too, to the end, earth's fairest scenes are darkened by its dark blot and its consequences."

Gertrude looked at her father for an explanation, and he continued.

"Yes, dear you can but feel it. By and by, I will give you a sad history of the mishaps of that mansion, which forms one feature in the picture before us.

While Gertrude and her father were thus regarding the picture before them, Jack and Nell were admiring it from another point of view.

"Whither do these stage land, page?" and Gertrude pointing to the mansion asked by an eyes ruling.

"Oh, that is Ladywell. There is an old tradition, that it was once visited as a holy spot in the days of faith."

They advance towards it, and saw a feeble old man endeavoring to carry up a large pail, which he had just filled.

Mr. Beecham, compassionating him, descended, and taking the heavy pail from him proceeded in the direction of a cottage pointed out by the old man. They were met by a boy, who was coming to meet his grandfather. Mr. Beecham gave the pail to him, and then turned back to rejoin his children.

This deed of charity brought on him a severe fit of coughing. The children watched him anxiously, as he seemed unable to recover his breath, and leaned up against the trunk of a tree for support. After some minutes he began to jest with the children, "Gertrude and half crouch!

"I am so sorry a see that old man, page.

"Nay, my child, do not say so. Try through life to regard what you do in charity to others as so much pay to the Lord, and look on the day as all spent in which you have not tried to do something with that view. We will rest awhile under that old oak."

They bent their steps to this spot, and when seated on the mossy bank, Gertrude opened the little basket, and produced part of the refreshment which their good mother had prepared.

When this duty was over, Nellie entreated her father into the song of the "Friar Bonger's Ball."

Mr. Beecham patted the little songster on the head, laughing, and said, sang, more

"Ah, dear now, my Nellie,
Thy voice is full of glee,
Whilst bright, as the sunshine,
Are all things to thee.
Now scatterth the world, child,
With its blossoms and flowers,
To thee, in thy bower
Thy days go by swiftly
The bright hours unfolding!
Will soon spend away;
And days, alas! how fast fly!
At no distant day.

Ah! dear, on the young heart
Life's sorrows shall fall,
And gloom the bright spirit
Safe now and, through all.

"I hope that will not be prophetic, page, said Gertrude, "that my little sister Nellie life will be anything but one of happiness.

"Nay, dear, I prophesied no ill, as the story of the owners of Ferrley House, which I pointed out as we passed the hill. There were those there, who had hearts as gay as this little one.

CHAPTER II.

Mr. Beecham then began:

"Some years ago, Mr. Somers, an old and esteemed friend of my father's, brought that house on returning from India, intending to spend the last of his days in the calm retirest of this peaceful vale. He was a gentle disposition, and somewhat wanting in firmness. His wife was very unlike him. She was beautiful, witty and accomplished, but her principles were those of a worldly-minded woman. Edith, her eldest child, was proud and headstrong, and in personal appearance was the living image of her mother. Lily, the second, a lively, affection child, of fifteen years, was as thistle and the birds which are singing so gaily around us. Her disposition resembled, at the time of which I speak, was but three years old.

"I was always treated as a member of the family, being almost as fond with Lily as at home.

"When Edith was about eighteen, Lawrence Morston came to visit Farcley. He was a young gentleman of brilliant parts and pleasing manners, but his principles were mainly on the contrary.

"About three months after his first visit, I met Mr. Morston coming out of Mr. Somers' library, flushed and frowning angrily. He did not expect to meet me on the stairs, and I could almost have laughed at the quick way in which he managed to change to the bland expression with which he bade us "good morning."

"In the evening I came suddenly upon Edie and her father, who were seated in full view of the lake, and I inadvertently heard the words: 'Father, Edith, would I see you drown before my eyes in this mountain tarn, than give my consent to your marriage with this man.'

"I quickly turned off to another path, not to join them at so unpleasant a moment, but not before I had marked the obstinate expression on Edie's face, which was half turned towards me. Yet so absorbed were they in their own conversation and thoughts, that neither perceived me. I knew then that Lawrence Morston had gained over the hand of Edith Somers, and had been refused, but I felt sure that the marriage would take place in spite of the father's wishes. Mrs. Somers made the ordinary preparations for such events, and, in two months' time, Mrs. and Mr. Morston left Farcley forever. It was soon apparent, by the accounts we heard that there had been no blessing upon this union. Lawrence Morston was a selfish being. He was a thorough epicurean, and would not religiously restrain him in his dissipated career. In two years time he had run through the ample fortune brought him by his wife. She was left alone week after week, during this period, and, one day, towards the end of it, he was carried home—dead—killed by a fall when in a state of intoxication! This was the last news I heard of Edie. A year after Morston's death, the bank in which Mr. Somers had invested his money failed, and he received but a small dividend. Farcley was sold, and, after discharging all the servants, except one old domestic, who steadfastly refused to leave them, they left for removed to London. Mr. Somers did not long survive the blow, and then came Lily's real troubles.

"Lily, as I have said, was a worldly-minded woman. Fashionable, she did not seek straight from religion in the world's sense of the word, but from that which could not give it. By slow degrees, indeed, unconscious to herself, and imperceptibly to Lily, she acquired the sad and fearful habit of drink. This habit soon gained so great a mastery over her as to deaden all her finer feelings, and make her forgetful of her duties, so that she and her children became neglected, and Lily saw that she herself must become father and mother, as well as sister to Robert. Lily had acquired much skill in drawing and painting, and she devoted her spare moments in producing little works from her pencil which she sold for means to support her brother's education. I cannot describe the devotedness with which she watched over this child. Her health began to sink gradually, but her energy and determination of purpose enabled her to perform her new duties bravely and faithfully.

"Her mother at length made a most happy end. The ruling passion was strong even in death, and, though the priest was sent for, she could not be made to understand her state, and thus she died.

"This last blow broke Lily's heart, and, in the little strength she had became daily less. Her life, self-sacrificing and devoted as it had been, had been the most preparative for death, which she welcomed. Small reason had she to love the life which, a few years previous, promised to be as bright as the brightest and rosy, and which had gold fashioned into an overcast by clouds, Robert, indeed, was an anxiety to her; but God Father knew, and, in the future, he would take care into his own special care.

"Fearing to the removal of the Somers family, I had gone to travel on the Continent, and had never been able to procure their address. Robert, on his return, had visited at Mr. Somers' death, and discovered it in a most miserable manner. I was passing in the Fleet street, and my attention was attracted by a group gathered round a picture shop. I drew near and stood riveted to the spot in the days of faith.

"Thy adversary stands it, and saw a feeble old man endeavoring to carry up a large pail, which he had just filled.

Mr. Beecham, compassionating him, descended, and taking the heavy pail from him proceeded in the direction of a cottage pointed out by the old man. They were met by a boy, who was coming to meet his grandfather. Mr. Beecham gave the pail to him, and then turned back to rejoin his children.

This deed of charity brought on him a severe fit of coughing. The children watched him anxiously, as he seemed unable to recover his breath, and leaned up against the trunk of a tree for support. After some minutes he began to jest with the children, "Gertrude and half crouch!

"I am so sorry a see that old man, page.

"Nay, my child, do not say so. Try through life to regard what you do in charity to others as so much pay to the Lord, and look on the day as all spent in which you have not tried to do something with that view. We will rest awhile under that old oak."

They bent their steps to this spot, and when seated on the mossy bank, Gertrude opened the little basket, and produced part of the refreshment which their good mother had prepared.

When this duty was over, Nellie entreated her father into the song of the "Friar Bonger's Ball."

Mr. Beecham patted the little songster on the head, laughing, and said, sang, more

"Ah, dear now, my Nellie,
Thy voice is full of glee,
Whilst bright, as the sunshine,
Are all things to thee.
Now scatterth the world, child,
With its blossoms and flowers,
To thee, in thy bower
Thy days go by swiftly
The bright hours unfolding!
Will soon spend away;
And days, alas! how fast fly!
At no distant day.

Ah! dear, on the young heart
Life's sorrows shall fall,
And gloom the bright spirit
Safe now and, through all.

"I hope that will not be prophetic, page, said Gertrude, "that my little sister Nellie life will be anything but one of happiness.

"Nay, dear, I prophesied no ill, as the story of the owners of Ferrley House, which I pointed out as we passed the hill. There were those there, who had hearts as gay as this little one.

CHAPTER II.

Mr. Beecham then began:

"Some years ago, Mr. Somers, an old and esteemed friend of my father's, brought that house on returning from India, intending to spend the last of his days in the calm retirest of this peaceful vale. He was a gentle disposition, and somewhat wanting in firmness. His wife was very unlike him. She was beautiful, witty and accomplished, but her principles were those of a worldly-minded woman. Edith, her eldest child, was proud and headstrong, and in personal appearance was the living image of her mother. Lily, the second, a lively, affection child, of fifteen years, was as thistle and the birds which are singing so gaily around us. Her disposition resembled, at the time of which I speak, was but three years old.

"I was always treated as a member of the family, being almost as fond with Lily as at home.

"When Edith was about eighteen, Lawrence Morston came to visit Farcley. He was a young gentleman of brilliant parts and pleasing manners, but his principles were mainly on the contrary.

"About three months after his first visit, I met Mr. Morston coming out of Mr. Somers' library, flushed and frowning angrily. He did not expect to meet me on the stairs, and I could almost have laughed at the quick way in which he managed to change to the bland expression with which he bade us "good morning."

"In the evening I came suddenly upon Edie and her father, who were seated in full view of the lake, and I inadvertently heard the words: 'Father, Edith, would I see you drown before my eyes in this mountain tarn, than give my consent to your marriage with this man.'

"I quickly turned off to another path, not to join them at so unpleasant a moment, but not before I had marked the obstinate expression on Edie's face, which was half turned towards me. Yet so absorbed were they in their own conversation and thoughts, that neither perceived me. I knew then that Lawrence Morston had gained over the hand of Edith Somers, and had been refused, but I felt sure that the marriage would take place in spite of the father's wishes. Mrs. Somers made the ordinary preparations for such events, and, in two months' time, Mrs. and Mr. Morston left Farcley forever. It was soon apparent, by the accounts we heard that there had been no blessing upon this union. Lawrence Morston was a selfish being. He was a thorough epicurean, and would not religiously restrain him in his dissipated career. In two years time he had run through the ample fortune brought him by his wife. She was left alone week after week, during this period, and, one day, towards the end of it, he was carried home—dead—killed by

The Beechams.

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY IN NINE CHAPTERS.

It was a bright July morning in the year 1842 when the quiet Yorkshire dale circle was still sitting in pleasant conversation after the morning meal.

If you, dear reader, will seat yourself in that corner near the open casement, you may, in imagination, enjoy the breeze laden with perfume from without, and at the same time, listen to, and observe the persons to whom you will now be introduced.

In the cozy easy chair sits Mr. Beecham, the owner of this pleasant mansion of Sunnybrae. He is apparently about forty-five years of age, no doubt, would pronounce him to be exceedingly plain; but there is a good humoured kindness mingled with his countenance, and the merry twinkle in his gray eyes reveal such a depth of wit and humour, that one is attracted to him notwithstanding, and the last of the handsomes in his homely face is quickly forgotten.

On the other side of the table is Mrs. Beecham. She is about the same age, but is evidently very unlike her husband. Kindness and gentleness are depicted on her face also, but they are blended with an expression of malcontent, the result, it may be, of character or of some sorrow or perhaps of both combined, which forms a striking contrast with the joyous light hearted one opposite to her. You will not often hear the tones of her voice, and if you hear them you will not, although a stranger, from your heart of hearts, wish that you were one of her children.

Sitting next to Mrs. Beecham is a boy of sixteen. You will scarcely require more than a glance at that face with its firmly set mouth to convince you of his wilful and obstinate disposition.

Gertrude, a fair young girl of fifteen, at present engaged in earnest conversation with papa, does not resemble either of her parents in personal appearance, but you may trace a great likeness to the old painting of grandmamma, which hangs over the fireplace, with its blue eyes and gentle, calm expression. On the couch near her, lies Leonard, her invalid brother. There are yet two other members of the family. Here! there are three many noses in the hall outside. You will not be long kept waiting for an acquaintance. The door opens. A fine boy of three, with a regular, laughing face, enters the room, holding a little fairy by the hand, her golden hair tied back to keep the persons out of her blue eyes.

"Allow me to introduce Queen Mab," he cries, "she is seven years old, to-day."

Nell does not wait for any further introduction, but, skipping across the room, climbs on papa's knee for a kiss. She is so quickly down again, and gives a similar salutation from each one present.

When breakfast was ended, Mr. Beecham, turning to his wife, said, "I have been thinking of taking the youngsters off to Marylay." She replied, smiling, "I am glad of it: I think it will do them all good."

"But," said Mr. Beecham, "poor Leonard is not able to join us, and you, I know, will not accept an invitation without him. I suppose, Richard, you will accompany us?" said Mr. Beecham, addressing his eldest son. "Well, papa, I have made an engagement to go boating with Isidore Hilton and another friend." "Hilton" exclaimed Mr. Beecham in undisguised surprise. "Surely, he is not the son of that scoundrel, Myles Hilton, Richard—who is he?"

"Well, papa, he is a splendid fellow, have met him a good deal during these holidays. He lives at Clifton Lodge, about a couple of miles from this.

"I am exceedingly sorry, Richard," said his father, "that this acquaintance has been formed. It is a pity you do not ask your mother or myself about new associates you come across.

Richard made no reply; he knew a remark, but after giving moodily through the window for a few moments, rose and left the breakfast room.

The children now dispersed, and Mr. Beecham, turning to his wife, said, "Marie, what do you think is best to be done? Would it be advisable to put an end to this boating acquaintance, by insisting on Richard's joining the picnic to Marylay?"

"I believe," replied Mrs. Beecham, "that Maurice Leigh will accompany Richard and his friend. With Maurice, I think he is safe, and perhaps it would be more prudent not to oppose him to-day. You know his self-willed disposition, and I fear he is in one of his obstinate moods now. If he is forced to take this trip with you, he will probably seek Hilton's company, through perversity, all the more on another occasion. The day after to-morrow Richard returns to college, and then, for some time at least, there will be an end to this companionship, and I hope we may be able to break it off altogether.

"I dare feel most anxious about our boy," she said aside, "his extreme reserve, together with his proud willfulness, is to me a painful contrast to the frank ingenuousness and docility of his younger brother."

Her husband made no reply, and Mrs. Beecham left him, to make preparation for the day's journey, and to provide a well filled hamper of good things for the travellers.

In another hour and a half they were at the station. They took their seats in the train, which, with a whistle and a shriek, soon speed on its way to Lakenheath, the nearest halting place to Marylay.

"Lakenheath!" cried out a railway official, in a prolonged tone, and opening the door of the carriage, they stepped out.

Leaving the station, they had first to climb the hill, from the summit of which they had an extensive view of a most beautiful country. Turn they to the north, they descended to Marylay.

It was lovely dell. At the southern end the richly wooded hills closely approached and enclosed a small meadow.

Nestling among the trees on its banks was a pretty mansion. It had a southern aspect and full view of the vale, and at this time was adorned covered with the clinging ivy and flowering creepers. At a short distance from the southern end of the lake, the little stream formed by the rivulet from it tumbled over the rocks into a shallow stream dancing with light, and went murmuring on its way, now chattering over its stony bed and sparkling and laughing in the sunshine, now flowing silently and darkly in the shade.

Nell danced and skipped with delight, and ran off with Jack to chase the butterflies.

Gertrude glided around, enjoying immensely the scene before her.

"What a lovely place!" she said at last, "I cannot fancy that Eden was more beautiful than this was."

"Yet, Gertrude, evan as of old sin cast its foul gloom on Eden, so, too, to the end, earth's fairest scenes are darkened by its dark blot and its consequences."

Gertrude looked at her father for an explanation, and he continued.

"Yes, dear you can but feel it. By and by, I will give you a sad history of the mishaps of that mansion, which forms one feature in the picture before us.

While Gertrude and her father were thus regarding the picture before them, Jack and Nell were admiring it from another point of view.

"Whither do these stage land, page?" and Gertrude pointing to the mansion asked by an eyes ruling.

"Oh, that is Ladywell. There is an old tradition, that it was once visited as a holy spot in the days of faith."

They advance towards it, and saw a feeble old man endeavoring to carry up a large pail, which he had just filled.

Mr. Beecham, compassionating him, descended, and taking the heavy pail from him proceeded in the direction of a cottage pointed out by the old man. They were met by a boy, who was coming to meet his grandfather. Mr. Beecham gave the pail to him, and then turned back to rejoin his children.

"Yes, I have seen the grand chapel across the vestibule from the cells, and it is a very impressive sight to see those whom honest men of every class in their last robe, the reporter asked, "Is the law evil upon those who have duty's labor, had not of the privilege he has of the light of the cell, and the chapel?

MISSION OF THE CATHOLIC PRESS.

"Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the chief agent in popularizing ideas, and propagated ideas constitute opinion, and opinion governs the world. Hence, religious journalism is not only a sacred, but a powerful instrument, and will, as such, make immense for the enlightenment of the world. Catholic journalism has to combat error and defend the Catholic Faith. Its mission is, in a word, the Divine mission of the Church, Truth and Mercy. Truth to the intellect—Mercy to the heart—and both through the intermediate of the Press. Truth is false, error is true, pronounce the very words to be pagan, the virtues of Catholic journals who defend Apostolic Succession, the Divinity of Christ, the Real Presence, the Mass, the Sacrifice and principle of Authority, with derision and ridicule. Truth is Catholicity, and Catholicity is Truth."

Editorial Notes.

—The Cardinal Vicar of Rome incorporated the entire passage of the Pastoral of the late Plenary Council on the observance of Sunday and the holydays in his letter circular, adding that the words of the Baltimore Fathers "were applicable to Italy and Rome" as well as to the United States.

—The London Tablet states that news from Germany announces the conversion to the true faith of Prince John Henry XV. of Pless, an officer in the Prussian army, who has publicly abjured Protestantism. He was born in 1861. His father, John Henry XIV., Prince of Pless, is one of the wealthiest nobles of Silesia, and Grand Huntsman to the Emperor William.

—Four fences in the price which inhuman parents receive for a child in Naples. A man and a woman, having four of these purchased children, were seized at the railway station of Rome as they were leaving for France with their traffic in helpless human beans. The padroni, as they are called in America, were seized and taken before the magistrate, who ordered the children to be restored to their parents.

—A French statistician has discovered that up to the present 2,540 emperors and kings have governed 64 nations. Out of this number 300 have been driven from their thrones, 64 have abdicated, 24 have committed suicide, 12 have become insane, 160 fell in battle, 123 were captured, 23 died martyrs, 151 have been assassinated, and 108 have been condemned to death and executed according to law.

—"A paragraph in our Catholic exchanges," says the Louisville Advocate, "states that Rev. P. Haverman, of Troy, N. Y., aged 80, is the oldest Catholic priest in the United States, and who has only completed the fifty-fifth anniversary of his ordination. Rev. E. J. Durbin, of Shelbyville, Ky., is in the eighty-sixth year of his age and sixty-third of his priesthood, and we believe is somewhat ahead of Father H. in patriarchal honors."

—Catholicity is making progress in Denmark—a country which up to a few decades ago published priests with death or banishment. Dr. Kopp, Protestant Bishop of Copenhagen, has published the fact that "within the past thirty years the Catholics have increased from several hundreds to over three thousand souls, for whom there are now 30 priests, seven of them being Danes by birth." German missionaries are chiefly to be credited with this work.

—Dr. Bournet's recent work on crime in France and Italy seems to show that in France, crimes against the person are increasing somewhat, while those against property are diminishing. In Italy "rivers of blood" are thrown into numerous than in France, and murder is six times more frequent. Assassination is slightly increasing in France. In Italy the number of parricides is about double that in France. In both countries there is a notable diminution in criminal poisoning. Attempts against chastity are much less frequent in Italy, and in France those "crimes against children augment in frightful proportions." Infanticide is twice as great in France.

—Bishop Dwenger of Fort Wayne, and Bishop Moore of St. Augustine, Fla., accompanied by Rev. D. J. O'Connell, D.D., of Richmond, have arrived in Rome. The two Bishops have come to explain to the Propaganda whatever may be local or particular to the United States, in the decrees of the recent Plenary Council of Baltimore. Dr. O'Connell has been received in special audience by His Holiness, to whom he has presented a copy of three Decretals. The Consistory also is chosen to draw up a report of them and to submit this to the individual Cardinals forming the Congregation of Propaganda, is not yet known. He afterwards will become the Ponente and present the report.

—An eastern exchange says that "in the archdiocese of New York there are four colleges with 1,310 students, six academies with 683 boys, and twenty-seven academies with 2,926 girls, fifty five parochial schools with 14,922 boys, and sixty parochial schools with 18,281 girls; eight orphanage schools with 2,000 inmates, and thirteen industrial and reform schools with 4,000 inmates. There are eight orphan asylums with 2,037 inmates; eleven homes for destitute or wayward children with 5,726 inmates; five hospitals with 2,697 inmates; three homes for the aged with 656 inmates, and six asylums with 1,397 inmates. The Society of St. Vincent de Paul numbers forty-three conferences with 1,099 members."

—The Catholic Knights of America in Pennsylvania, who have a membership of 15,000 persons, have issued a pastoral from Bishops, priests and laymen, held their biennial council in Philopatrian Hall on the 1st inst. A resolution was passed denouncing the action of the House of Correction Managers in refusing to allow Mass to be celebrated in that institution. The following State officers were elected: Spiritual Director, Rev. Thomas J. Harty; President, Henry Lambert, of Branch 118; Vice President, James Sherry, of Branch 122; Secretary, John J. O'Rourke, of 189, vice M. I. J. Griffin, declined; Treasurer, John F. McMenamin, of 56. Delegates to the Supreme Council, which meets in New Orleans, Dec. 1st, John W. Jennings, 146, and William Earley, 118.

—"Perhaps it is not generally known," says the Quincy Church Progress, "that Illinois possesses within her confines a hall that pealed forth its glorious notes on the Western horizon, before the liberty bell of Philadelphia was rung. The bell is the gift of Louis XV., of France, to the Catholic Church at Kaskaskia in 1741 when this State was part of the French domain and it still rings out its shrill notes of invitation to Catholics to attend Mass and other religious duties. When General Clark captured Fort Gage in 1778 this bell rang out the glad tidings of victory for the American troops, and to this day the precious sonorous is regarded as one of the heirlooms of Southern Illinois."

—Eastern secular papers report that Ingersoll has declared that he will never give another infidel lecture. On this report the Dallas, Texas, News says that a reporter interviewed him, when he said that it was true and added: "While I have not given up infidelity, I am sure that I am right in being an infidel." And here comes "Felix Adler," one of the leading infidel lecturers and a leader, lamenting that infidelity "has lacked the earnestness of practical morality; has not been sufficiently based on profound moral conviction. It has been too idle, too speculative, too sentimental, too much given to words." When we see no colleges, no orphan asylums, that have been built by infidels, we do not wonder that "Felix Adler" confesses infidelity a failure.

—The Monitor has already published a full account of the apparition of the Blessed Virgin to Faugette Escafre in Lourdes, commanding her to found a Confraternity in honor of the Sacred Heart of her Son Jesus, under the title of "Mother all Merciful." This Confraternity is already flourishing all over France and in most of the European countries, and many of our Clergy and Religious in this city have enrolled themselves under this banner. We are happy to wear one ourselves, and from the holy shrine. A solemn Mass is said at the shrine every month for the living and deceased members and their friends, and some of them, in defence of the sacrificial sanctuary, collect licenses from the Government to attend through the agency of the Republican party. Test party, seeing in the Sacrifice of the Mass a letter written by the League for Prohibition, made that a crime, and the Sacrifice of the Mass, which is made in those countries, because it is done publicly, is a crime. In some counties an attempt is made to drive a Mass from million hats for course. Many small towns are hard pressed to pay their municipal debts without the wanted aid of the money wasted from liquor-sellers and some of them, in defiance of the constitutional amendment, collect license fees. The Catholics have passed through the agony

THE JOURNEY OF LIFE.

In this journey of life
Temptations are rife,
Put your faith in the future and fear not.
Be true to the right when tempted by night,
With life's lot for your chart,
To have you your sweet heart not.

In all things be true
That you may go you
Let your image perfect your interior.
Act as this be good
As superior manhood,
And none but the bad pass inferior.

Should your station be high,
Show no pride in your sky,
All creatures are fleeh, high and lowly;
In the height of your might
Keep an eye to the right,
Be you sure to your daily mean holy.

Should your station be low,
Thus the station is not so,
That the station is not of no choice
Be pure and be true,
In heart and in mind;
And the fruits of the crust will not hurt you.

False virtue sends varnish,
Its lustre will tarnish,
Be yours true though it be not so glaring
All flattery seekers
As unseemly to you;
And of compliments be rather sparing.

Let your word be your bond,
And fulfillment the wand
That will turn all your toil into treasure.
If others wrong you,
Do you therefore more true;
And render not measure for measure.

The California Whale Fishery.

Few people are aware of the extent of the whale fishery on this coast. There are many little coves along the coast of California where the hardy and daring whale catchers live in an unobtrusive manner, with no particular expense except cheap strong clothing and plain and wholesome food. They have no opera to attend, few or no taxes to pay, no fences to build, or streets to grade, or lands to plow. Their home is on the sea, with brief stays on the shore, where their duties consist in changing blubber to oil, which they put in barrels till they obtain enough for a shipment, when they lash the barrels together in the form of a raft, signal an empty lumber schooner, and float the raft of barrels of oil to the schooner, where they are hoisted on board and taken to San Francisco, where they are turned into gold.

Already during the present season nine whales have been caught of the Los Angeles coast and taken into Portuguese Bend, a quiet cove about eight miles west of San Pedro, where about thirty men are constantly employed in harpooning these monster beasts of the ocean, or in towing them ashore, cutting up the carcass, rendering the blubber into oil, and putting the same into barrels, extracting the whalebone, and sending the refuse of the animal out to sea to avoid pestilence on land.

Probably not a thousand persons in this section of the State have any idea of the magnitude of the business of whale fishing on this coast, so quietly is it carried on, with no public announcement and no parade with the railroad company about the price of freight. The company at Portuguese Bend have six large whale boats, besides yawls and the usual rowboats needed at such an occasion. One of the nine whales recently taken out of a school of whales passing by Portuguese Bend going south was what is called a "cow whale," and yielded ninety barrels of oil. The whales going south yielded about four hundred and fifty barrels of oil, and the same school going north thirty miles by the way yielded a much more.

At San Diego six whales have been taken that yielded 300 barrels of oil, and the fishermen stated that there is a large number from the school of 300 of whales now moving north. There are about eight other stations on the coast of California where these quiet hunters of the sea are engaged in their arduous but profitable duties. All the stations appear to be doing well this year, but the stations south of Point Conception appear to have encountered more and better fortunes than those farther north.—Los Angeles Herald.

Elizabethan Medicine.

The housewife was the great ally of the doctor in the days of good Queen Bess; in the still room the lady ruled, and her and farthingale was ever busy in the preparation of cordials, conserves, cooling waters and simples. "All the herbs and flowers of field and garden passed through her white hands." Poppy water was good for weak stomachs; mint and rue water was efficacious for the head and brain; and even walnuts yielded a cordial. Then there was cannamon water, and sennam of cloves, gilly flowers and lemon water, sweet majoram water, and spirit of mesleroyle.

Some of the remedies gravely believed in in those days will make the reader smile. Who would suppose nowadays that the herb called shepherd's purse held in the hand would stop the bleeding of a severe sword wound, or a dream of scrapings from a human skull taken daily in white wine may hemorrhage! Lady Macbeth's doctor would have composed a position of pounded garden snails, while a quart of ale, drunk of treacle, hartshorn of rue, and a spoonful of tin shavings, boiled together, composed a remedy against the bite of a mad dog. The plague remedies were very numerous, and in all probability never effectual; if the patient recovered at all he had to thank his own constitution. One of the plague waters is composed of rue, agrimony, wormwood, sage, ringwort, pimpernel, marigold, feverfew, scurvy, rosemary, angelica, burdock, green walnuts shredded into a kind of salad and mixed with roots. These were infused for three days, covered close, and then distilled. "Nine think," says old Burton, "physicians kill as many as they save, and who can tell how many murders they make in a year, that may freely kill a man and have a reward for it?" Who, indeed, especially if allowed to prosecute as above! But Burton, who wrought over sixty years after the death of Elizabeth, recommends as infallible a human skull ground to powder, the owns in a horse's urge, and wolf's liver.

The whole system of medicine in the days under review was founded on a series of curious theoretical views, partly those of Paracelsus. This physician divided the body into humors and spirits; the humors were blood, phlegm, choler and melancholy. Courage was supposed to have its seat in the heart and stomach, reason in the head, and passion in the liver; a white-livered man was a coward, and he who would not fight had not a stomach for fighting.

Precautions Against Cholera.

In view of the threatened invasion of cholera during the coming summer, the following rules, issued by the Philadelphia Board of Health, will be found useful:

Observe strict cleanliness, in your person and clothing.

Be regular in your habits of life, meals, exercise and sleep.

Dress comfortably for the season, and avoid the night as much as possible.

Avoid the use of alcoholic drinks.

Eat temperately, avoid all excesses in eating, drink, raw, and indigestible food, especially cabbage, salad, cucumbers, and unripe fruits.

A greater safety will be secured by boiling all water used for drinking purposes.

Partake of well-cooked beef and mutton, rice well boiled, and avoid pastry and lactaceous fruits.

Take your meals at regular seasons.

Avoid bodily fatigue and mental exhaustion. By excitement or violent exercise you increase the disease.

Family Fun.

THE MARRIED MAN.

Adown the street the married man
Starts off with hurried tread
But from the door a willey voice
Calls "Don't forget the bread."

His smiles and smile and turns to go,
The carnine married man,
When from the door a voice says to him
"You haven't got the can!"

He sads again, he's in a hurry,
But pulsing down his lady,
And, in, his sister with a smile,
Cries, "Won't you bring my hat!"

"Oh, yes," he shouts, and, truth to tell,
He sees not about a hat,
But shifts his son, with stunning yell,
"Tender Ida for the cat."

He daughter, from the window high,
Shows him a bonnet box,
Saying, "Bring it home, I pray,
To pure and be true,
Is heart and in mind;
And the fruits of the crust will not hurt you.

False virtue sends varnish,
Its lustre will tarnish,
Be yours true though it be not so glaring
All flattery seekers
As unseemly to you;
And of compliments be rather sparing.

Let your word be your bond,
And fulfillment the wand
That will turn all your toil into treasure.
If others wrong you,
Do you therefore more true;
And render not measure for measure.

The California Whale Fishery.

Few people are aware of the extent of the whale fishery on this coast. There are many little coves along the coast of California where the hardy and daring whale catchers live in an unobtrusive manner, with no particular expense except cheap strong clothing and plain and wholesome food. They have no operas to attend, few or no taxes to pay, no fences to build, or streets to grade, or lands to plow. Their home is on the sea, with brief stays on the shore, where their duties consist in changing blubber to oil, which they put in barrels till they obtain enough for a shipment, when they lash the barrels together in the form of a raft, signal an empty lumber schooner, and float the raft of barrels of oil to the schooner, where they are hoisted on board and taken to San Francisco, where they are turned into gold.

Already during the present season nine whales have been caught of the Los Angeles coast and taken into Portuguese Bend, a quiet cove about eight miles west of San Pedro, where about thirty men are constantly employed in harpooning these monster beasts of the ocean, or in towing them ashore, cutting up the carcass, rendering the blubber into oil, and putting the same into barrels, extracting the whalebone, and sending the refuse of the animal out to sea to avoid pestilence on land.

Probably not a thousand persons in this section of the State have any idea of the magnitude of the business of whale fishing on this coast, so quietly is it carried on, with no public announcement and no parade with the railroad company about the price of freight. The company at Portuguese Bend have six large whale boats, besides yawls and the usual rowboats needed at such an occasion. One of the nine whales recently taken out of a school of whales passing by Portuguese Bend going south was what is called a "cow whale," and yielded ninety barrels of oil. The whales going south yielded about four hundred and fifty barrels of oil, and the same school going north thirty miles by the way yielded a much more.

At San Diego six whales have been taken that yielded 300 barrels of oil, and the fishermen stated that there is a large number from the school of 300 of whales now moving north. There are about eight other stations on the coast of California where these quiet hunters of the sea are engaged in their arduous but profitable duties. All the stations appear to be doing well this year, but the stations south of Point Conception appear to have encountered more and better fortunes than those farther north.—Los Angeles Herald.

Elizabethan Medicine.

The housewife was the great ally of the doctor in the days of good Queen Bess; in the still room the lady ruled, and her and farthingale was ever busy in the preparation of cordials, conserves, cooling waters and simples. "All the herbs and flowers of field and garden passed through her white hands." Poppy water was good for weak stomachs; mint and rue water was efficacious for the head and brain; and even walnuts yielded a cordial. Then there was cannamon water, and sennam of cloves, gilly flowers and lemon water, sweet majoram water, and spirit of mesleroyle.

Some of the remedies gravely believed in in those days will make the reader smile. Who would suppose nowadays that the herb called shepherd's purse held in the hand would stop the bleeding of a severe sword wound, or a dream of scrapings from a human skull taken daily in white wine may hemorrhage! Lady Macbeth's doctor would have composed a position of pounded garden snails, while a quart of ale, drunk of treacle, hartshorn of rue, and a spoonful of tin shavings, boiled together, composed a remedy against the bite of a mad dog. The plague remedies were very numerous, and in all probability never effectual; if the patient recovered at all he had to thank his own constitution. One of the plague waters is composed of rue, agrimony, wormwood, sage, ringwort, pimpernel, marigold, feverfew, scurvy, rosemary, angelica, burdock, green walnuts shredded into a kind of salad and mixed with roots. These were infused for three days, covered close, and then distilled. "Nine think," says old Burton, "physicians kill as many as they save, and who can tell how many murders they make in a year, that may freely kill a man and have a reward for it?" Who, indeed, especially if allowed to prosecute as above! But Burton, who wrought over sixty years after the death of Elizabeth, recommends as infallible a human skull ground to powder, the owns in a horse's urge, and wolf's liver.

The whole system of medicine in the days under review was founded on a series of curious theoretical views, partly those of Paracelsus. This physician divided the body into humors and spirits; the humors were blood, phlegm, choler and melancholy. Courage was supposed to have its seat in the heart and stomach, reason in the head, and passion in the liver; a white-livered man was a coward, and he who would not fight had not a stomach for fighting.

CABLEGRAMS FROM ALL COUNTRIES.

DYNAMITE AGAIN.

An Explosion in the Admiralty Building Causes Excitement in London.

LONDON, April 23—At 11 o'clock this morning an explosion occurred in the Secretary's department of the Admiralty building. The explosion badly damaged the room in which it occurred, and set fire to the fire. The officers and firemen soon extinguished the flames. The Velocipedes were also injured, but none seriously. Inquiry is being made into the affair. At first it was reported the explosion was caused by dynamite, and was the outcome of a plot hatched up by either the dynamiters or nihilists, for the purpose of interrupting the war preparations of the Government, but so far no evidence has been discovered to lead to the present a doubt as to whether the explosion was caused by accident or design.

After further investigation the police are of the opinion that the explosion was due to personal malice, directed at Mr. Hopkins, who was personally disliked by a large number employes. Edwin Hopkins, assistant secretary, received a severe scalp wound. It is said other officials were also injured, but none seriously.

A BLOW AT LANDLORDISM.

An English Plan to Give the Small Farmer a Show.

LONDON, April 24—At a great meeting of rich individual landowners held in this city yesterday, a scheme was adopted to relieve the Duke of Argyll and Lord Lorne, and the Marquis of Bipon, it was resolved to take steps to form a suitable formation of a large corporation, to be called the National Land Company, for the purpose of accelerating the gradual breaking up of the large-parcel system of landownership, now universally prevalent in Great Britain. The present plan of the new organization is to buy up land in wholesale and sell it out in lots to actual forty acres, under conditions likely to engage a further subdivision. The company will in all likelihood buy for cash and sell on deferred payments, covering at least ten years.

SPIRITUALISM.

What Monsignor Capel Has to Say About It.

NEW YORK, April 23.—A New Orleans special says: There has been a convention of Southern Episcopacy in session the past few days, and Monsignor Capel was an attentive observer of the proceedings. Yesterday he published a card, in which he says he "has been twenty years candidly studying spiritualism. The extraordinary intervention displayed by mediums in the sacrifice of the Catholic Church and the transparent propositions against her in the communications, I have found to be a false and malicious spirit impelled by the lying, presumptuous, of course, the purile bad assertions, made with the master. Catholics believe in Supernatural spirit of angels and the antagonism of personal evil spirits, and that Christianity has the seeking of spirits. Such seeking has been practiced in all ages, and the Old and New Testaments present repeated instances. St. Paul speaks of the worship of devils. The Mormon abyss Spiritualism a miserable parody of one of the doctrines of Catholicism.

CARRIED OFF TO ENGLAND.

The Naturalized American Bagpiper a Prisoner in Stirring Castle.

Mrs. Mary Ireland, wife of Robert Ireland, the bagpiper who was lured to Canada on March 19 and seized as a deserter from the British army, though he had been an American citizen for five years, received a letter from her husband dated at Quebec, a letter from her husband dated April 2, aboard ship at Loch Lowde, Derry, Ireland, in the better Ireland sense.

The other two men who deserted from the Seventy-eighth Regiment at Halifax are still on board. One deserted fourteen years ago, and the other twelve. Both have wives, but no children, whereas I have five children, (one of them will be certainly remembered to be a deserter) and no wife. I suppose I shall be hanged in consequence. I almost envy him. They were married, and I was, by promises of good situations. The well man's wife will join him in Canada. I will be allowed to keep my boys with me in the meantime, which will be light, I suppose, in the Pentonville prison. I am confined in the Police Station, and they had voluntarily surrendered themselves, I was not asked to sign such a paper. They were told by the Police Inspector that the paper would be sent in their favor from the Secretary of State. We met the male adviser at Derry. We were delayed a short time at the side while the passengers for different points in Ireland were taken to the landing. I believed them their possession of liberty.

Mrs. Ireland's address is Ireland, Derry, No 34 Derry.—There has been great rejoicing among the Nationalists of the Fahan District over the release from Stirling Castle of the sons of Mr. James Flanding by a majority of 14 over Mr. James Lowry.

Another cowardly attack has been made on the property of Mr. Hugh Gallagher, of Carrickfergus, Saturday, March 20th, while two young men were in the house, a shot was fired at the window, and on seeing the flash they rushed out to the place, but could not find any trace, as it prevent them chased, and prosecuting the cowardly villains who fired the shot, and then are bodily injury, the wretches proved the shot was fired by a gun, the shot lodged in the pillow have scratched the name of the mistress, and it is probable that they do it intentional.

Donegal.—A scene of great excitement took place on March 31, during evicting proceedings on the estate of Mr. Hugh Boyle, of Ballyshannon. The sheriff conducted evictions, but some had to be abandoned, and the sheriff had to appeal to the police for assistance. The police had to clear the place for civilians assembled around the house, and the sheriff and bailiffs had a very rough handling, but ultimately had to withdraw without completing the work.

Kilkenny.—On April 20, the Venerable Canon Vere Maher, died at the parochial residence, Fiddown. Canon Maher was for twenty years Curate of St. Mary's Parish, Kilkenny, and was universally esteemed.

Kildare.—The Sessions in Naas Union have been fairly successful at the elections this year. In addition to a number of Nationalists who against the Conservatives they have effected a military working out of Unionist and others from their own party.

Limerick.—Mr. Dougherty, Lieutenant of the County of Kildare, has appointed Andrew Fitzgerald, Esq., of Ballyhoe, to be Deputy Lieutenant for Fitzgerald, of Ballyhoe, Esq., Deputy Lieutenant County Limerick.

Mayo.—Preparations on a large and effective scale are being made for the reception of the prisoners released from Galway gaols in June. The arrangements are being made by the Committee, of which Mr. Dillon is chairman.

The Liberal Board of Guardians have re-elected to the positions of chairman, vice-chairman, and treasurer, the chairman of the board, the gentlemen who occupied the positions for the past year, viz. Sir Thomas H. Thomas O'Connell, and Mr. Maurice Wolfe.

Roscommon.—Mr. Dillon's sentiments not others, held in Tuesday, on April 2, a resolution was unanimously passed Deputy of the action of Mr. Patrick Hayes, J. P., in signing an address to Lord Spencer, of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

Leitrim.—Mr. Wm. McGivney, Nationalist, has been returned by a majority of 56 over Mr. Wm. Kirkwood, Tory, Nationalist, and has for the Roman Electoral Division of the Mohill District, Mr. Wm. Kirkwood, Tory, Nationalist.

Mayo.—Mayor Maurice J. Blake, J. P., of Downpatrick, and been appointed Clerk of the North Mayo Militia, vice Colonel Dore deceased. Mr. Apollo Lynch, a young man, who for the last two years resided over two women, named Ellen Gallagher, and Ellen Gallagher, the latter also known as Jennie, and Charlotte, the parties being James Gallagher, aged 18, of Ballyhaunis, Mr. Lynch, Ballyhaunis, Mr. Lynch, and one in Kilkenny, all in the district of Ballyhaunis.

Mr. John O'Connor Power is, apparently, determined to contest Galway City at the next election, and if he does he will be allowed to keep the seat, seemingly, make up his mind to abandon the county Clare based one of the Parnell metropolitan divisions. From the Loughrea Mail we learn that Mr. Power recently addressed a meeting of the Liberal Association of Kendale, and he stated that he was not undecidable, he would subsequently defend his claims to a series of public meetings in the city and county.

Queen's County.—That "noble" still unknown, Lord Lansdowne, is making further efforts to insert the Irish farmer by seeking for the introduction of foreign store cattle. In a letter to the Secretary of the Irish Cattle Trade Association, he says that the only reason the Irish cattle trade cannot be put on a fair footing is that the markets of the world are not open to him.

On March 27, a school Inspector, Mass was celebrated in the parish church of Monasterboice for the repose and of the late Rev. Joseph Farrell, C. C. The remains were laid with in the beautiful churchyard of Mellifont Abbey. Health. As the deceased clergyman was a native of the town of Maryborough, and certain there for some time, arrangements were made by the Rev. Dr. Delaney, President of the Irish Catholic College of Maryborough, Rev. Nenty for their full attendance at the funeral. Accordingly, on Friday last, the 12th inst., there assembled the following clergymen: Celebrant, Rev. E. J. Lenny, C. C., Maryborough; Deacon, Rev. J. Mooney, C. C., Carlow; Master of ceremonies, Rev. J. Farrell, P. P., Allen. After the office, the funeral, which extended over two miles in length, proceeded to the Heath Church, where the remains remain.

Sligo.—Mr. Andrew Greene died on March 31, at his residence Chambers, after a rather lingering illness. Mr. Greene was 72 years of age, and was a merchant, and among the most active in the town.

Miss Ellen Boland, relict of the late Christopher Boland, died on March 27, at her residence, Lord Street, Sligo, aged 80 years. An advanced age deceased was remarkable for the fact that she was the oldest member of a family, and nearly all relatives, one the late Rev. Wm. Boland, Kilmore, Erris, and the other the present parish priest of Ballaghaderreen. A Requiem High Mass was celebrated in the parish church, all Ballaghaderreen to the repose of her soul. The interment took place at Lenaghan cemetery, the funeral being attended by all classes of the community, both clergy and laity attended those present being Most Rev. Dr. Conroy, Bishop of Killala, and many other prelates.

Tipperary.—On the Mer house fair, on April 21, was one of the largest ever held in Tipperary, and the Ballybrophy and North Tipperary fairs, and the amount of business transacted was extremely large, the demand for bacon for the Liverpool market rapidly, in view of the expected war between England and Russia, and there was a large number of horses got by rail from Armagh, was large, as in the Limerick and Galway markets, the demand for the Spanish market.

The "Tipperary" boys are usually called in the Kilmallock district are busy seeing their seed, and the Kilmallock Land League has decided to call on Thomas Maguire, Clonmeldown model, and Mr. Thomas Ryan, Ballyrea, to address a meeting on the land question. The Land League has offered £5, and begged time to make up the rest.

Waterford.—Mr. Thomas Ryan, Ballyrea, was a prisoner, Thirty shillings, the cost of the crime, is now added.

THE NEW CONVENT AT WOODLAND.

The new Convent, in which the people of Woodland and Yolo county may now be justly proportionately proud, was formally opened for the use of the greatest of Woodland's attractions, amidst appropriate ceremonies. It was a fine day, and the attendance was large, as it has been trending towards the workman will carry away their tools, leaving the building ready for occupancy and the high priests to which it will be dedicated.

Yesterday, chaperoned by Rev. Father Moriarty to whom immeasurable praise is due for his zealous and energetic persistence, we had the pleasure of inspecting the new edifice, and Mr. Frank J. Ulrich, of San Francisco, the accomplished architect, who designed the building, and who exercised the greatest care and attention, and who evinces a knowledge of the beautiful blended with utility. He has secured beautiful shapes and lines, and has shown all through the building, and opened a pathway for its transformation and adoration of its many excellent details, which mark it as one of the most complete edifices for the purpose intended that we are erected.

The building is a large three story edifice, surmounted by a spacious tower in front, from which is obtainable, a beautiful view of Woodland and the surrounding country, and which is crowned with a commodious spacious observatory, which the Holy Cross.

The main entrance is by a broad flight of steps, leading to massive doors, leading to the middle of the second story. Passing through these doors, we enter a spacious hall, from which lead into a wide hall, passing at right angles to the vestibule the entrance of the chapel. On the right of the vestibule is a large public parlor, each room is about feet and in it is a large music room 20x16. Across the hall from the music room is a large room of similar size and finish, which will be used by the Sisters in charge of the building as a class room, with the quiet walls of which they will at times seek rest and quiet from the arduous duties to other portions of the building. Adjoining the music room is a large dormitory of about feet in length, provided with the finest of beds, bedding, and bedclothes, and with a large number of bathrooms, and a marble wash bench with a long mirror, and a marble wash bench running into each. In the front of the building, between the dormitory and the class room, is a large room 16x24, which will be used by the Sisters in charge of the building, as a sewing room, and which will be used by the Sisters in charge of the building, as a sewing room, and which will be used by the Sisters in charge of the building, as a sewing room, and

CALIFORNIA.

O let me sing of the land of gold!
The magic mound—land—lady! gold!
Where red wines thaw some arms of miles
With argosacks of fortune—gold!
Across the golden fleece confinded.
Where's the shilling we are and sand
And mount and marsh—and stone and strand!
Were sprinkled o'er and flecked with gold.
That wondrous, vast and virgin land!
Where nature's pulsing pulse is strong
Where all her measurements are grand,
And gladly to Gold's pleasure alone—
Or where Shasta's shafts spring
To pierce the blue bosom of the skies.

O let me sing of the time bestowed
On such as I—of wealth that flowed
From mere avocated crags and mines
From plains of homes and forests wild;
From limpid lakes and rivers clear
Where roam (and the brown bear and the deer)
From bestial foods by hatters shed
Since the river's bank and crown dead.

From rocks by Titans heaped and hurled
Pile such wonder ages and world—
Cloudy rocks—where ice'd and stood
The majestic monarchs of the wood.
Monarch of noble! high towering yet
That man may know and see and forget
The great pre-human ones and sage,
Yonder eastern sell! for know and pay!
Where hollow Hand and wondrous Will
Is age spot—to, yon, and still,
Where winds our northern cage
The lady dressed a silken sun.

That placed them in the vasty rale
To sing the song—to sing the tale—
Of that unalphabetic, shaggy—Bell,
Mystic as the sunset, Bell!
And boundless as the winds that pass,
Overpowering—yet, how—
Fanciu the tiny tufts of grass,
Fairly the crystal bright of dew—
That moulds a mount and shields the lowly plant
Crushes the site—and holds the lowly plant

O let me stay of the land that then
Furnished all the wealth of men;
Where, from the south and from the north
They flocked to gather her lovely forth—
Food and fair, and hoard and free
As the land itself—where e'er the sun,
To feed the prosperity of man—
With all blessings bestowed on man.

Hail to the land of long age!
The land that is and yet shall be Grown—to golden giant and glow—
To wine and to green wine—
Where treasured buddings bloom and blow
To blow the cup of life for me.
Hail to the land! Let man's flow,
As the tides of the sea—
For still it lives—as long age—
It sighed and crooned, as still it seems:
A maiden sinking from her dream.

A maiden, sad, God-gazed, and crowned;
Red rosy-hooded, and ruby-bowed,
A maid, as unknown as her age—
As her angel blood and her olive hair,
Where moved and mingled the silful dew
Round and red as her finger tips—
Were crowned as the heaven be hatched with her age.
Where great, wide, wondrous, or like eyes—
Eyes from the sunset—eyes of stainless sun—
As if from they feel more warm than wise.
With the Lord of St. Francis—and had
In dalesy state from the setting sun.

Land of the Golden Fleece!
The people's bloom—the brooding place;
Land of the prophet's beneficent and
The mermaid's mount and the rolling plain!
Where nature's bounty yielded the
Rewed blooms of a virgin vast!
Yon, this Kosciusko still stood a good
Plenty of money—enforced
The primitive—the ancient town hour;
Yon, the pensive fate out-buried
Yonder, the pensive—the pensive—where
Yon, the wonderful city.

Land of the Golden Fleece!
Creation hailed! Hail Westward, Ho!

THE FRIAR OF GORETOWN.

Good Father Germain was parish priest,
In the town of Goren, when I was a boy—
The good man he's here was a lusty feast.
For his smile always filled my soul with joy.
He was a giant in paper his state in love,
And good was his pet; such disease his word;
And if ever a man was sent from above,
He was a salesman to guide and guard.

His flock was large—I know not the number
Yet such gave willingly what they could spare,
As he travelled on from town to town
And often sat down to their humble fare.
He knew no one—he did not know a penny,
And the poor man's penny, a blessing sell—
Where they gave to him—he went his way,
Much or little it mattered not.

His robe was grey and was mended neatly,
With a cape—his hood to cover his head,
He had his own fashion—he did his duty,
Not for every pinch a prayer he said.
A pair of rough sandals—he did his best—
In coldest weather, in rain or snow;
With the Lord of St. Francis—and had his staff,
Like an angel of peace through the lands he go.
And on when the sun—the sun—the sun—
With the hands extended and eyes on high,
Yon, the man from Rome and sinner his soul,
And some like a star through his mild blue eye.

The twenty long years days I sailed away,
And laid herself to the waves of foam,
Yet, many days came back to-day,
Like a dream to my boyhood's home once more!
And oh! how I long to revisit the shore
Where I lived so happily—Why, I, that
And to pass once more on that dear old face
Where smile filled my soul with a holy joy.

The Beechams.

A BEAUTIFUL CATHOLIC STORY IN NINE CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER III.

The day following the holiday in Merryvale, Mr. Beecham sent for his son to come to his library; but, after waiting some time, a servant returned to say that Master Richard had gone out in the direction of Clifton.

Mr. Beecham, taking his hat and cane, set out on the way towards the Hillions. When he had gone about half a mile, he overtook Richard, who was strolling listlessly along. He started at the sound of his father's voice, and colored when the latter said gently and sadly:

"Ah, my son, you are going to meet Isidore Hillion, although you know that your friendship is rarely against my wishes and judgment?" Richard answered in a saddy tone: "Not, there is nothing bad in him, and he is a most agreeable comrade."

"Richard, we are always unwilling to see wrong or danger in the direction to which our inclinations draw us. Yet a docile child would be content to abide by his parent's decision, especially when he knows that that parent makes a prohibition through love of him, and a desire for his true welfare."

Richard was more touched by his father's words than one of his proud and assistant disposition cared to show.

Mr. Beecham, looked at him, expecting some response, but the boy was silent. They had reached the high road, and returned by a circuitous path to Sunnyfine. They had gone some distance before Mr. Beecham again spoke. At length he said: "Richard, you are now sixteen, and I think it is time that you should choose the path which you are to take through life. Even if I were willing to wait, I should scarcely let my boys lead aimless, idle lives, and therefore your profession they must follow. I shall leave the choice mainly to themselves. I wish to hear from yourself what your views and inclinations are. Through your own reserve, I can ill judge of them. Some years ago I hoped that you would be a priest. However, I no longer think this your vocation.

"Well!" he said, impatiently, as Richard was still silent.

"I have not thought about it, father."

"Would you like to be an architect? Mr. Ryde would push you forward there.

"No, sir, said Richard, decidedly.

"I suppose the study of law has no attraction for you?

"None whatever," said the taciturn Richard.

"Then, Richard, be a little frank, and let me hear from you what your wishes for your own interests are. I am sure you are not without them," he continued, so the same kind and patient tone.

"I should like to go with my uncle Edward, and sailor, John. He said in last summer when he was here whether I would like to do so.

"Very well! I will write to your uncle this week; and now, mind, make good use of the coming six months. They will depend by your last at school.

This tools of whom they had been speaking was the elder brother of Richard's father, and at this time nearly sixty years of age. He was a bachelor, and an extensive shipper, who in early life had gone over to St. Petersburg and settled there. He now had a flourishing establishment in that city, as also at the port of Cronstadt. The summer preceding the one to which our story opens, Mr. Beecham had come over to see his brother, and spent some time at Sunnyfine.

He had taken a great fancy to Richard, and was not slow in discovering his talents, and particularly a facility for difficult calculations. The thought occurred to him that he would be of great assistance to him in his last itself—that he would be content to take charge of one or other of his establishments. In a private conversation, he proposed the matter to his brother, and offered to take his nephew back with him. He had no chil'd'd 'ed' Jw dr ofer ery sense so unusually favorable one. Yet, Charles Beecham, thinking rather of the next life than of this, had almost offered it Edward in refusing it; believing at the time that his boy would devote his life to the priesthood.

The elder Beecham parted from his brother with somewhat of coolness, and regretted to Cronstadt.

Charles Beecham, according to the promise made by his son, wrote a letter to his brother the following day, and by the earliest packet sailed after received a renewal of his former generous offer.

Richard's school life was accordingly still further shortened, and preparations made for the departure.

Mr. Beecham accompanied his son to Cronstadt, and after seeing him duly ensconced in his new home and way of life, he left him with many counsels for his future conduct, especially enjoining docility and candor with his good uncle, and begging him to be cautious in his choice of friends.

Richard, notwithstanding his sullid disposition, truly loved his worthy parents, and promised his father to be faithful to his advice.

The day came at length on which Mr. Beecham was to return home, and Richard watched the vessel until no longer visible. He did not speak or seem to think of his uncle for long as it was in sight.

Then Mr. Beecham, taking his arm and putting it within his own, said cheerily, "Come, come, Dick, there's no use of fretting; you and I will be capital friends just now. This afternoon will afford a good opportunity of visiting St. Petersburg, where you will see the Winter Palace, Tsarida and Hermitage palaces, and the various other buildings, worth a beautiful city.

Richard proved an intelligent pupil, and his uncle prophesied that he would in a few years outstrip himself in the management of affairs. "And then, my boy," he said, "perhaps I will leave you to conquering the entire firm; and I shall retire to end my days peacefully, ah, Dick, what do you say to that?"

The boy's colour came into Richard's face, and with a glad smile, he said, "I will try to please you uncle."

The weeks were few, but they were said with a sincere intention of fulfilling them. For four years he remained in his employ, and gave full satisfaction to his uncle, who was continually writing home to his parents the only grief that marred his happiness during the period was the loss of his good mother.

The invalid, Lowan, had led a life of suffering, died, and Mrs. Beecham, worn out by her devoted and constant nursing, followed him quickly to the grave.

About three years after this event, as Mr. Beecham was walking in the city of St. Petersburg, he met an old and esteemed friend, who accosted him, and said he had been to his nephew several times of late, in company with Henri de Chollet, a young artist, recently settled in these parts. He added that he was pleased to observe such a friendship with this young man, "Yes," added he, "although young, he is one of the greatest coqueins in the city; and perhaps, the most dangerous thing about him is that he is so talented, and has such wonderful powers of conversation, that he would win over a dolcer man than R chard to the vortex of his principles."

Mr. Beecham parted from his friend, thanking him for his kindly warning, and in the evening called for Richard, that he might question him. The latter treated the matter very coolly, and that he had only casually met Henri de Chollet, and professed great indifference with regard to him. Mr. Beecham was satisfied, and the matter dropped.

Affairs went on much as usual for twelve months, but the old man, began at length to notice that his nephew very rarely appeared, at the Sacramento, and on one holyday of obligation, he made the painful discovery that Richard had not even been to Mass. Grieved beyond measure he sent for him, and reproached him with the grave omission, speaking at the same time of his neglect of the Sacraments.

"Oh, sir," he replied, in a careless, indifferent tone, "I do not think that person in the world can be expected to observe these little practices of monkish piety."

Mr. Beecham was speechless with surprise. He had not expected, in the first place, that Richard had given up his religious duties; but the answer he had just received, revealed the depth of the evil.

"Richard," he said, at length, "I did not think that I ever should have from you such an expression as this. I fear now that these dispositions are not of such very recent date. You have been long associating, I fear, with some evil companion. Do you ever see Henri de Chollet now?" he said, as if suddenly recollecting himself.

"Yes, sir," was the laconic reply.

"You meet often?"

"Well, sometimes."

"How long have you known him?"

"About a year."

Mr. Beecham again relapsed into silence. At length he broke it with, "And when did you last receive the Sacraments?"

"About six months ago, I believe at Christmas," he said, looking angry at the interrogation.

"Richard, you have not then even made your Easter duty. Oh, my son, for as sure as I have always loved you, my heart is filled with pity and grief. I do not wonder now at your sentiments, for it is impossible that the grace of God should dwell in the heart, where we do not make use of prayer and the Sacraments, which are the great means of obtaining and retaining it. Take care, Richard, that you do not lose your faith, sake; and this will certainly be your sad plan if you will persist in seeking the company of Henri de Chollet."

Mr. Beecham was unable to judge what impression his words had made on his nephew for the latter maintained that taciturn silence which was his wont, when any fault was found in him. However, the following Sunday, he accompanied his uncle to Mass; but he made first one, and then another excuse for putting off confession. A month passed, and he had not yet confessed. A letter, about this time, came to Richard from a friend at Hamburg, asking him to obtain leave of absence, and come to see him, and spend a few weeks with him. Richard gave the letter to his uncle, who quietly said, "You may please yourself about it." Yet he secretly wished that his nephew would spend some time with Carl Hoffner, who was a young man of excellent character; but, knowing Richard's disposition, he judged it prudent to appear indifferent, suspecting that he would refuse the invitation, if he imagined that his uncle desired him to go. Accordingly Richard wrote to Carl, thanking him for the pleasure offered him, and, after receiving a handsome allowance from his uncle who was more liberal than ordinary on this occasion, he set off on his journey.

The first week passed pleasantly, and young Beecham felt happier in the society of his friend than he had been for some time. One evening they were walking together one evening, when Carl said, as they were passing a Roman chapel, "To-morrow is my birthday; I always commemorate it by going to Communion. It will be a great pleasure to me if we both go together. Will you come in here to confession?"

"—stammered Richard, "I am not prepared at all this time."

"Come," said Carl, "half an hour will suffice. I know you go so regularly."

"Indeed, I cannot, Carl."

"Well," said his friend, inquiringly.

"Not now," he repeated, "I will take a stroll by myself, while you go.

During the time that Carl was at the tribunal of Penance, Richard was walking back among the monuments, moodily along and looking listlessly around him, when he was startled from his reverie by a familiar voice which exclaimed:

"Verily, a hermit! so absorbed in contemplation as not to recognize his friends. Your meditations do not appear to be of a unusual nature, if one may judge by your face."

Richard without noticing the remark, said, "How do I some to be so fortunate as to meet you here, M. de Chollet."

"Oh!" replied Henri, "I am going on a tour through Switzerland, and came on to take leave of my friend, and request to accompany me. But if you will come, Richard I will give up the other companion I called at your uncle's home to wish you adieu, and I will hasten back to St. Petersburg again. I heard you had gone for the holidays. He evaded my query as to your whereabouts, and I was bowed out with the most freezing politeness. How long do you remain away from St. Petersburg?"

"I think I has given me six weeks."

"And how long have you already been absent?"

"About a week."

"Then two weeks still remain to you. You must come with me."

Richard hesitated. He felt that deceitful as he had proved and been toward his uncle, he would be putting a climax to all faith in him.

"I do not think I can accept your invitation," he at length replied in a wavering tone.

Henri, with his quick penetration saw that it would not take much to change his mind on the subject, and used such persuasive arguments, that he at length gave way. As they approached the house of the Hoffners, Richard became rather uneasy. He felt that he was treating Carl badly, and he felt it to be sincerely attached to him.

"I shall have to introduce you to my friends, the Hubleys, by some other name than De Chollet," he said. "You see if I go to Switzerland, they will write to my uncle; and, as he does not approve of your friendship, I must change my name."

"Why, you are almost crazy," shrugging his shoulders.

Here Carl approached. He was walking thoughtfully along, on his way back from the tribunal of Penance, and was startled at the calm content, that Richard was strong with remorse at his own sin.

As early as he could, however, he introduced Henri as Monsieur Brun. Carl, as he saw the latter suspecting the real change in Richard, or the dangerous companion with whom he was associated, with frank hospitality begged him to stay with them. Henri was the last person in the world to refuse the invitation, if he imagined that his uncle desired him to do so "Journalism is the greatest social power, because it is the chief means of intellectual life, and because it is the chief means of information, opinion, and agitation, among the world. In our time, religious journalism is not only a useful and serious occupation, but only a work inferior personally to the mother of society; but a sort of sphere of influence, which, if it be not the first in dignity, is the most universal, the most extensive and decisive for its influence."—Cardinal Wiseman.

"Let Truth and Falsehood grapple; who ever knew Truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter?"—Milton.

"Let the Catholic Press be what it should be, and it will be the most powerful instrument for good in the world."—Pius IX.

Editorial Notes.

—In speaking of the Irish race, Right Rev. John Ireland, D. D., Bishop of St. Paul, Minnesota, has this to say: "The future of the Irish race in this country will depend largely upon their capability of assuming an independent attitude in American politics."

—Piper Ireland has been released, after being absented and carried over to England for court-martial. He says the English authorities treated him like a dog, penniless, 3,000 miles from home, because, after all their trouble, no evidence could be found against him, and he "would not surrender" himself voluntarily.

—From Mexico comes the intelligence that several priests have been fined and imprisoned because, according to incendiary statistics, they had their usual religious processions during Holy Week. This is one more instance of "Liberal" Freemason rule which would gladden the hearts of the Evangelical propagandists whose motto is, "All for us, and nothing for you."

—The Ypsilanti Sentinel says: "No President of the United States has ever chosen a Catholic Church as his place of worship, and so far as we know, none has ever so much as entered one in Washington; and it is well. In a Catholic Church God only is worshiped, and it would be discordant with the place, for a man no matter how distinguished, to enter, followed by a crowd of admirers, to divide honors with the Almighty."

—It seems to be the lot of the Jesuit Fathers to be ever the first against whom the rage of the Christian enemies is directed. The latest attack upon these devoted champions of Christianity has taken place on the Island of Jersey. In the States Assembly of the island a Bill providing for the expulsion of the Jesuits was discussed recently. The Order has founded a college there, and it was sought to dispossess them of the property. The iniquitous proposal was, we are glad to say, rejected.

—It was recently proposed that the Masonic Lodges of Germany should, as in England, France and Italy, employ the press as a means of repelling the attacks of the recent Papal Encyclical on Freemasonry. This proposal has been discussed at several of the meetings of the secret association. That the Encyclical of the Pontiff has taken more effect than what the enemies of the Catholic Church were inclined to think. The conduct of the Freemasons is a striking evidence of this fact.

—The city council of Canada, Spain, has passed a resolution to provide for the annual celebration, on the 26th of December, of solemn services in honor of Our Lady of Sorrows, in thanksgiving for the preservation of the city from the widespread destruction wrought by the recent earthquake throughout the kingdom. The civic authorities thereby give expression to the religious sentiments of the citizens, who rightly attribute it to the benign interposition of their Heavenly Mother their immunity in particular, from the disastrous effects of the great shock of the night of December 25th, 1884.

—The Chancellor is tired of the opposition which Herr Windhorst, the leader of the centre or Catholic party in the Reichstag, continues to make to him, and it is said he is about to approach this leader in a friendly way as a matter of change. There will be a new arrangement of the parliamentary groups if the measures of the Chancellor be supported by Herr Windhorst's party. The national Liberals are much discouraged at the new tactics of Bismarck. The Catholic journals are marvellously reserved, and no parade of triumph is put forward by them. It is also thought that the Conservatives of all shades will unite with the Catholics and that Liberalism will receive a check.

—The honor of private Pontifical audience was granted recently to the Very Rev. Pro-Rector of the North American College, who presented 5,000 francs for Peter Pence from the Diocese of Grand Rapids, receiving from the Pope the Apostolical blessing for the Bishop, the clergy, and the faithful of that See. He further obtained from His Holiness a special blessing for Sister M. de Chantal Cummings, of the Visitation Convent of Washington, D. C., who celebrated on Thursday, March 19th, the golden jubilee of her religious profession; also the Apostolic Benediction, on the occasion of his approaching marriage, for Eugene Kelly, Jr., son of the distinguished banker, Eugene Kelly, of New York, a great benefactor to the Church in the United States.

—The growth of the Church of late years in Scotland has been marvellous. This is due to the great immigration of Irish Catholics. In whatever part they locate themselves, their churches and schools soon spring up as monuments of their love of religion and education, which are unique. The hierarchy consists of one Archbishop and four Bishops. The priesthood numbers 321 and the missionaries 181, and 305 churches, chapels and stations, and 274 departments of day schools, with accommodation for 45,847 children, of which number 35,620 were present at examination in 1884. The grant earned by these children for that year was £24,773 4s., an average of 10s. 8½d. per head. The percentage of passes was 77.34, in the three R's. In Glasgow it is estimated that the Irish Catholic population is over 100,000.

—The parish priest of Moissac, in the diocese of Montauban, has practically roused the question of the refusal of French priests to bless a marriage contracted by parties who have taken advantage of the new-fangled law of divorce. The revolutionary papers call for the prosecution of the venerable Cure because he declined to bless one of these irreligious unions. They call his refusal an attack upon liberty of conscience, forgetting that the good priest does not prevent the parties from availing themselves of the legalized union now sanctioned by French law, but to force him to stand at the altar to witness a sacrilege would be a far greater assault upon the liberty of conscience and an open insult to our Lord Himself. A test case must soon arise, but even the statist Conseil d'Etat may end by allowing priests to do as they please, and to leave to the mayor the sinfulness task of marrying divorced people.

—The following very interesting facts have just been published in the London Tablet, concerning the Catholic clergy in Switzerland: "There are six ecclesiastical divisions, among which the secular priests are divided thus. Diocese of Basle (Bishop, Mgr. Lachat), 667 priests; Diocese of Chur, 332 priests, under Mgr. Rampa; Diocese of St. Gallen, 202 priests, under Mgr. Egger; Diocese of Lausanne and Geneva, under the well-known Mgr. Mermillod, 307 priests; Diocese of Sitten, 90 priests; Canton Tesino (hitherto under the jurisdiction partly of Como and partly of Milan, but henceforth under its own Apostolic Administrator), 310; total, 2,608 priests. There are also 432 regular priests thus divided: Capuchins, 183; Benedictines, 145; Bernardines, 41; Canons Regular, 40; Franciscans, 12; Carthusians, 11. The general total of Swiss priests is, therefore, 2,462, almost exactly the same as those in Great Britain, who, according to this year's Directory, muster 2,522."

—The effect of an Anglo-Russian war upon the trade of the United States at this time can best be inferred from the history of our commerce during the Crimean war. The Philadelphia Press has been looking up the statistics, and it finds that in 1853, when the war was impending, the United States' export of grain amounted to $33,500,000. Next year it went up to $67,000,000 on the outbreak of war. The reason of this was that the war cut of the supply of wheat Western Europe had been drawing from the Ukraine through Odessa. But this was overdoing the business, and in 1856 we exported but $42,500,000. The continuance of the war caused an increased demand for breadstuffs, and in 1856 we exported to the value of $77,666,455. The export of timber saw a similar expansion in those years, rising from $9,000,000 before the war to $12,000,000 in the first two years, and falling to $11,000,000 in the third. This was due to the interruption of the Baltic timber trade.

—From the Catholic Review we learn that at the last Consistory Dr. Schulte, of the American College, Rome, published for Pallia for Archbishop Riordan, of San Francisco, and Archbishop Gross, of Oregon City. They were granted. Archbishop Seghers, who lays down the Pallium of Oregon City, has been granted as a personal distinction the Pallium in retiring to his old See of Vancouver's Island. There is a strange and suggestive sentance in the list of the last Consistorial appointments. It notes that on his conversion to Catholicism, the schismatical Bishop Ambergiam, who had arrogated to himself the title of Bishop of Lacedicea, was granted the title of Bishop of Croia, thus recognizing the legitimacy of his consecration, even though it was conferred by schismatics. It will be seen from this, even by Anglicans, that could they show an Apostolic succession their orders would be recognized. Happily, the men who broke away from Catholic unity cared nothing for Apostolical orders. So long as they received the loaves and fishes they were satisfied. Among the appointments by brief, announced at the Consistory, was that of Archbishop Alemany, to the Titular Archiepiscopal See of Tabasium.

The Lake Shore Visitor, of Erie, Pa., complains that "while much is being done for people, the people in return do very little for themselves. Our religiously inclined to-day, when compared with the many who are bold enough to say that they do not prefer any form of religion, are indeed but few. The churches as a general thing are not well attended, and when the attendance is realized, piety or a sense of religious obligation is not the motive that leads the greatest number. There may be a pew attached to going to church, but certainly church going through an unworthy motive is not praiseworthy, nor is it deserving of reward. There are many who do not attend Mass, who will Sunday after Sunday, perhaps, spend the day in amusement or among companions whose company is not good. If in the evening they can get to church, they go, and perhaps go to any church that suits their fancy. A preacher in the pulpit is about the same on the occasion as Bishop or priest, and the doctrine he preaches just suits their purpose as well. The service is in the evening, and this is all they want. The man who claims to be a Catholic and who has grown so cold as not to see the utility of attending at least at Mass, is a man who will soon take the final step and become an open apostate. He must certainly have lost respect to himself, their churches and schools soon spring up as monuments of their love of religion and education, which are unique. The hierarchy consists of one Archbishop and four Bishops. The priesthood numbers 321 and the missionaries 181, and 305 churches, chapels and stations, and 274 departments of day schools, with accommodation for 45,847 children, of which number 35,620 were present at examination in 1884. The grant earned by these children for that year was £24,773 4s., an average of 10s. 8½d. per head. The percentage of passes was 77.34, in the three R's. In Glasgow it is estimated that the Irish Catholic population is over 100,000.

—The parish priest of Moissac, in the diocese of Montauban, has practically roused the question of the refusal of French priests to bless a marriage contracted by parties who have taken advantage of the new-fangled law of divorce. The revolutionary papers call for the prosecution of the venerable Cure because he declined to bless one of these irreligious unions. They call his refusal an attack upon liberty of conscience, forgetting that the good priest does not prevent the parties from availing themselves of the legalized union now sanctioned by French law, but to force him to stand at the altar to witness a sacrilege would be a far greater assault upon the liberty of conscience and an open insult to our Lord Himself. A test case must soon arise, but even the statist Conseil d'Etat may end by allowing priests to do as they please, and to leave to the mayor the sinfulness task of marrying divorced people.

—The following very interesting facts have just been published in the London Tablet, concerning the Catholic clergy in Switzerland: "There are six ecclesiastical divisions, among which the secular priests are divided thus. Diocese of Basle (Bishop, Mgr. Lachat), 667 priests; Diocese of Chur, 332 priests, under Mgr. Rampa; Diocese of St. Gallen, 202 priests, under Mgr. Egger; Diocese of Lausanne and Geneva, under the well-known Mgr. Mermillod, 307 priests; Diocese of Sitten, 90 priests; Canton Tesino (hitherto under the jurisdiction partly of Como and partly of Milan, but henceforth under its own Apostolic Administrator), 310; total, 2,608 priests. There are also 432 regular priests thus divided: Capuchins, 183; Benedictines, 145; Bernardines, 41; Canons Regular, 40; Franciscans, 12; Carthusians, 11. The general total of Swiss priests is, therefore, 2,462, almost exactly the same as those in Great Britain, who, according to this year's Directory, muster 2,522."

—The effect of an Anglo-Russian war upon the trade of the United States at this time can best be inferred from the history of our commerce during the Crimean war. The Philadelphia Press has been looking up the statistics, and it finds that in 1853, when the war was impending, the United States' export of grain amounted to $33,500,000. Next year it went up to $67,000,000 on the outbreak of war. The reason of this was that the war cut of the supply of wheat Western Europe had been drawing from the Ukraine through Odessa. But this was overdoing the business, and in 1856 we exported but $42,500,000. The continuance of the war caused an increased demand for breadstuffs, and in 1856 we exported to the value of $77,666,455. The export of timber saw a similar expansion in those years, rising from $9,000,000 before the war to $12,000,000 in the first two years, and falling to $11,000,000 in the third. This was due to the interruption of the Baltic timber trade.
